Mr. STAFFORD. In the consideration of the question of germaneness the one subject for the Chair always to consider is, What is the subject matter of the resolution before the House for consideration? The subject matter in the resolution under consideration is to declare by congressional act that the state of war is at an end. It is not to direct the President by any means to negotiate terms of peace. That is foreign to the subject matter of the resolution, and every precedent that is related to this question upholds the position that such a substitute resolution as is contained in the motion to recommit is foreign, and is not sufficiently related to bring it within the scope of being germane to the subject matter under consideration.

It is not surprising that in this discussion gentlemen on the other side have not advanced any authority whatever or attempted to advance any authorities, because they would find that all the authorities are against them.

In subsection 781 of the manual the general subject of which is, "Subjects not necessarily germane because related," we find the following:

To a proposition to relieve destitute citizens of the United States in Cuba, a proposition declaring a state of war in Cuba and proclaiming neutrality was held not to be germane. True, the two propositions were related, but they were not related to the subject matter under consideration in the bill. They had reference, of course, to Cuba, but they had no relationship sufficiently direct and akin to make the proposition germane to the resolution under consideration.

Let me read the next clause.

To a proposition for the appointment of a select committee to investigate a certain subject an amendment proposing an inquiry of the Executive on that subject was held not germane.

Why, Mr. Speaker, that might well be held to be germane if the Speaker is going to hold that this proposed motion to recommit is germane, because there was a more or less direct relationship to it, but it did not have that relevancy to the subject matter under consideration to entitle it to consideration under the rule of germaneness. Let me quote further.

To a bill granting a right of way to a railroad an amendment to provide for the purchase of the railroad by the Government was held not germane. The subject matter there was the grant of a right of way, not the railroad, or the disposition of the railroad, else it would have been held germane.

So, Mr. Speaker, this brings up for consideration a new subject matter entirely, one that has not been considered by the House, and if the resolution had been considered under the general rules and it had been offered as an amendment, any Member might have made the point of order that it was not germane. The one thing attempted in the Senate resolution, and which is attempted by the House substitute, is to put an end to the war by congressional action. The motion to recommit is to postpone that by directing or authorizing the President to negotiate peace which he has the authority to do. It must be apparent, if the Speaker will consider, that the President has the very power which is attempted by this proposal of the other side. Nothing would be gained; it would be subversive of the very end sought to be attained by the resolution if we adopt that proposal. Certainly the House should not be deprived of the fundamental right to vote on the question at issue, the termination of the war by congressional enactment, by substituting a proposal offered by the minority which would postpone the very matter at issue. That proposal is entirely foreign to the subject matter of the resolution before the House. That is to end the war by legislative action, not by delegated authorization such as a commission, or by any other means such as the President has under the Constitution.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, the germaneness of the motion to recommit I think can be established by this one affirmative answer to a question put to every man in this House. Ask him what the House has been doing for the last two days, and the answer is that we have been discussing a resolution to end a technical state of war with Germany. Is not that true? As they say in old-time parlance, "I pause for a reply."

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the gentleman. It is not a resolution to end the war, it is a resolution to declare that the war was ended long ago.

Mr. UPSHAW. Which means the same thing, if words mean anything at all. There is one question before this House, and that is the end of the war with Germany, or a declaration that it is at an end.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. I will yield most anything to my genial friend from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would wish that the gentleman would yield the point. [Laughter and applause.] I would like to ask the gentleman if there is not this difference between the two forms of resolution—the Porter resolution undertakes to give a legal sanction to an existing fact and makes that fact legal. There is no doubt or misapprehension about it; it is to declare a fact. The motion to recommit is to provide the means for finding out whether you can arrive at such a fact or not.

Mr. UPSHAW. May I reply to the gentleman from Vermont, stating my purpose beforehand—a statement that should give weight, I think, to my argument—that I expect to vote for this resolution with some mental reservations? [Applause.] I am not satisfied with all that it contains and I count it comparatively useless, but I do believe that the minority has a right to a vote concerning the method of procedure, and gentlemen on the other side must agree that the burden of the argument which has run for two days has been this—we have been dealing with two things, the fact and the method. This resolution of the gentleman from Virginia deals with the fact and the method concerning the ending of the war with Germany, and if this House denies the minority the right to express itself as to fact and to method, then we are trampling on the fundamental rights of the minority. Governmental fairness and parliamentary fairness demand that we shall give them the right to express themselves as to the fact that the war is at an end and the method by which we shall arrive at that declaration. Mr. Speaker, there is no other question before this House, and of course the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, dealing with fact and method, is logically and inevitably germane. [Cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the Chair will indulge me for a few moments while I call attention to one or two things which I think the Chair should and will consider in determining the point of order. The ground for the point of order, or the points of order, is that in the first place the motion to recommit is not germane to the resolution either as it was submitted by the Senate or as amended by the House, and also that it undertakes to direct or authorize the President to do something that he already has the power to do.

I desire to suggest to the Chair that this motion to recommit is germane not only to the first section of the resolution but it is also germane to the second section. Section 1 of the resolution undertakes to declare that the war growing out of the resolution passed by Congress on the 6th of April, 1917, is ended, and that a state of peace exists. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia provides that the President shall be authorized to bring about negotiations that will result in the legal end of that particular war. Section 1 and the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia all revolve around one consideration, and that is the end of the war which was brought about by the resolution of April 6, 1917. Not only that, but it has been urged by gentlemen on the other side that the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia goes further than the resolution under consideration because it takes in the allied nations. In the first place, the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia does not direct that any new treaty shall be negotiated. All it does is to authorize and request in the language of the law the President to institute negotiations with Germany, her allies, and with the allied nations, all of whom were a party to the treaty of Versailles, and the armistice, to which section 2 of this resolution refers.

Therefore, it is germane to section 2, in addition to being germane to section 1, because in section 2 we undertake to reserve our rights in the treaty and in the armistice, to which all of the allied nations are a party, being the same allied nations referred to in the motion to recommit by the gentleman from Virginia. Therefore, it seems to me that the question as to whether we have the power to authorize the President to do this is unnecessary. That does not determine the parliamentary situation. Congress very frequently does things it has no legal power to do, and numerous decisions of the Supreme Court have attested to that fact. The question for the Chair to determine is whether the motion to recommit, authorizing and requesting the President to enter into negotiations with nations that are already parties to a treaty which is mentioned in the resolution under consideration, is germane to the resolution now under consideration, and I submit to the Chair that on both grounds the motion of the gentleman from Virginia is germane to both sections of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not consider the suggestions that this motion refers to the Allies of the United States and the allies of the other nations, because, as the gentleman from Virginia suggested, he could withdraw his motion to recommit and amend it and remedy that defect. The Chair will base his ruling upon the main question, and the Chair will state frankly that he would prefer to hold that it is germane, because, as he understands, those have been the two contentions, one that peace must be secured by a treaty and the other that it can be secured by declaration, and the Chair would be glad to allow both sides of that issue to be settled by a vote, and appreciates the force of the suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] that a motion to recommit is intended to allow the minority to express its views. But the Chair thinks he ought not to depart from parliamentary precedent even to accomplish what the general intent of the rules of the House may have been, and it seems clear to the Chair that a resolution declaring that a war is at an end can not, if the point of order be made, be amended by the recommendation that a treaty shall be entered into. The very issue that has been made is that the House has no right to declare peace; that that is an entirely different proposition from making a treaty of peace, so different that the House has no right to do it; and that the only way to secure peace is by a treaty. Therefore the Chair feels constrained to rule that the motion to recommit is not in order.

There is another ground on which the Chair perhaps could easily base his decision, and that is the well-established rule that where the House itself has adopted an amendment, as it has in this case, then that amendment can not be stricken out by a motion to recommit, as is attempted by this motion; but the Chair prefers to base his ruling on the general proposition of germaneness. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on that last point, if I may be heard for a moment, I would not like the Chair's language to indicate that it may be taken as a precedent in respect to the last point, for the reason that I would not want to see it raised at any time in the future as a precedent. When we were preparing this motion to recommit, that question was considered by myself, and my view, and I think the views of the minority accorded with mine, was that by reason of the peculiar language of the rule itself, which does provide for the vote on this amendment, any germane motion to recommit would be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not base his decision upon that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I so understood.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FLOOD moves to recommit the joint resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with instructions to that committee to forthwith report the joint resolution back to the House with the following amendment. Insert at the end of the second section the following:

"And among said advantages and rights so reserved, special reservation is made of the right stipulated for under said treaty of Versailles to enter into agreement with Germany and her allies, and the powers associated with the United States in the war, providing for joint disarmament."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 254, not voting 65, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, may I submit a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to submit a unanimous-consent request, which the gentleman will state.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns this evening it adjourn to meet on Wednesday—over Flag Day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet on Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the thought of the gentleman to proceed with Calendar Wednesday business on Wednesday, or has he any request to submit?

Mr. MONDELL. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries expect to bring up some business on Calendar Wednesday under the Calendar Wednesday rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask further that on Thursday the business that would have been in order on Friday last—pension business—shall be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that on Thursday the business that would have been in order on Friday last be in order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Obviously a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 304, nays 61, answered "present" 1, not voting 65, as follows:

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I am paired with Mr. COCKRAN. I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MONTAGUE, and he answered "Present."

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Rhode Island, Mr. BURDICK, is unavoidably absent. He directed me to state that if he were present, he would vote for this bill.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. PORTER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended so as to read: "Joint resolution terminating the state of war between the Imperial German Government and the United States of America and between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the United States of America."

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. COCKRAN, until June 22.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, under the order previously made, until Wednesday, June 15, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

164. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting protest against the $200,000 appropriation for hydroelectric power at Great Falls, Va., being placed on the Army appropriation bill; to the Committee on Appropriations.

165. A letter from the Chairman of Federal Trade Commission, transmitting report on the profits of country and terminal grain elevators; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

166. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting request that the bill H. R. 2394, Union Calendar No. 68, regulating the salmon fishing in Alaska, be passed at once; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6208) to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric light and power within the district of Hamakua, on the island of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 168), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 153) permitting the admission of certain aliens who sailed from foreign ports on or before June 8, 1921, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 169), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6211) to ratify, approve, and confirm an act duly enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize and provide for the construction, maintenance, and operation of a street railway or railways in the district of Honolulu, island of Oahu,' enacted by the Legislature of the Republic of Hawaii, July 7, 1898, and granting a franchise to the Honolulu Rapid Transit & Land Co. to operate a street railway in the district of Honolulu, providing for the operation of the same, and providing for the purchase of the same by the city and county of Honolulu," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 170), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 674) to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 171), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 14, 1921.

(Legislative day of Monday, June 13, 1921.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be proceeded with.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in talking with quite a number of Senators, I find that there seems to be a desire that I should see if an agreement can not be reached for a final vote on the bill.

Mr. LODGE. There should be a quorum call.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought probably those Senators who are here had better be consulted first, because we shall have to get a quorum anyway for the purpose of considering the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. SMOOT. I think we had better have a quorum and then let the request be presented. A number of Senators may desire to be heard on it.

Mr. NORRIS. The rule provides that the roll must be called after a unanimous-consent request is presented.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator desires to proceed in that way, I have no objection. It will not take very long to call the roll. Why not have a quorum call now?

Mr. NORRIS. With the view of seeing if an agreement can be reached for a final vote and in order to get Senators here for that purpose, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McCormick	Sheppard
Ball	Gooding	McCumber	Simmons
Borah	Hale	McKellar	Smith
Brandegee	Harreld	McKinley	Smoot
Broussard	Harris	McNary	Sterling
Bursum	Harrison	Myers	Sutherland
Calder	Heflin	Nelson	Swanson
Cameron	Hitchcock	New	Trammell
Capper	Johnson	Newberry	Underwood
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Wadsworth
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Cummins	Kendrick	Oddie	Warren
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Keyes	Owen	Williams
Dillingham	Ladd	Penrose	Wolcott
Ernst	La Follette	Phipps
Fernald	Lenroot	Pittman
Fletcher	Lodge	Poindexter

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

CIRCULATION PRIVILEGE OF BONDS.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1914) to amend an act approved April 4, 1917, being an act to authorize an issue of bonds. The bill has been on the table for some days at the request of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] to await the return of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Having returned, he tells me he will not object to the bill being referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill for the purpose of moving that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that if the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency has no objection I shall have none, but if there ever was a bill that should go to the Committee on Banking and Currency or the Committee on Finance it is this measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution of sundry citizens of Sheridan County, Wyo., favoring the enactment of legislation creating an agricultural foreign trade financing corporation, with a capital stock of $50,000,000, to be advanced by the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution of Harry W. Congdon Post, No. 11, Department of Connecticut, American Legion, of Bridgeport, Conn., favoring the enactment of legislation for publishing in the press of the United States the names and addresses of all persons who claimed and received exemption from military service during the World War on the ground that they were aliens and subjects of foreign powers and denying such persons the right of American citizenship, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry members of the Woman's Board of Missions of New Haven; the pastor and congregation of Dwight Place Church, of New Haven; and the Eastern Connecticut Branch of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, of Norwich, all in the State of Connecticut, favoring the extension of relief to the suffering peoples of the Near East, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial of Slocum School Alumni, of Waterbury, Conn., remonstrating against alleged mistreatment of the Armenians by the Turks, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Connecticut, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,

Office of the secretary, ss:

I, Donald J. Warner, secretary of state of Connecticut, and keeper of the seal thereof, and of the original record of the acts and resolutions of the general assembly of said State, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of the resolution in favor of certain legislation now pending in the Congress of the United States with the original record of the same now remaining in this office and have found the said copy to be a correct and complete transcript thereof.

And I further certify that the said original record is a public record of the said State of Connecticut now remaining in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State, at Hartford, this 10th day of June, 1921.

[SEAL.] DONALD J. WARNER, Secretary.

Mr. NELSON presented resolutions adopted by the Shieldsville (Minn.) Council of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, favoring the recognition of the Irish republic, and protesting against cancellation of outstanding loans of this Government to other countries, especially of the loan to Great Britain, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of St. Paul, Minneapolis, Holloway, Appleton, Danvers, Clontarf, Hancock, Morris, Eveleth, Blakeley, Henderson, Ray, Gilbert, McKinley, Buffalo, Clements, Caledonia, Montgomery, Litchfield, Nashwauk, Adams, and Blooming Prairie, and Blooming Prairie Council, No. 22, American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the recognition of the Irish republic by the United States Government, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. CURTIS. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably with an amendment to the title the bill (S. 2051) to amend section 3143 of the Revised Statutes to permit an increase in the number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and in the number of collectors of internal revenue from 64 to 74, and I submit a report (No. 113) thereon. I ask that the bill may go to the calendar.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Kansas is not asking for the consideration of the bill at this time?

Mr. CURTIS. No. I have merely reported the bill and asked that it go to the calendar.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that I hope he will not have the bill called up in my absence, or that he will give notice, because there will be opposition to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

FISHERY RIGHTS AT PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2499) to provide for the acquisition by the United States of private rights of fishery in and about Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 114) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 2072) to authorize the Secretary of War to make and receive conveyances effecting an exchange of title to the railroad rights of way at Camp Henry Knox, Ky., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 2073) granting a pension to Frank Dixon;

A bill (S. 2074) granting an increase of pension to Henry O. Welton;

A bill (S. 2075) granting a pension to J. B. Hicks; and

A bill (S. 2076) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Elizabeth Holton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 2077) to amend paragraphs 4 and 5 of the act approved June 8, 1906, entitled "An act to amend section 1 of the act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A bill (S. 2078) for the relief of the estate of C. C. Spiller, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 2079) for the relief of Edward C. Roser; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2080) to provide for the appointment of a commission to study the utilization of materials and the waste in production, distribution, and consumption; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ELKINS:

A bill (S. 2081) to amend and reenact section 1318 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved March 30, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 2082) amending section 22a of the act approved June 4, 1920, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 73) authorizing the Secretary of War to enter into contracts for the purchase of fuel without regard to the current fiscal year; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 74) to correct the records of certain naval and marine officers who joined the Confederate forces; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

APPORTIONMENT OF EMPLOYEES UNDER CIVIL SERVICE LAW.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I submit a resolution providing for an investigation into certain conditions which I think should be corrected in connection with the civil service of the country. I ask that the resolution be read and referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 92) was read and referred to the Committee on Civil Service, as follows:

Whereas the so-called civil service act provides that appointments in the departments of Government in Washington, "as nearly as the conditions of good administration will warrant," shall be apportioned among the States and Territories based upon population; and

Whereas the records of the Civil Service Commission show that the State of Oklahoma is entitled under this apportionment to 850 appointments, and that said State has actually only 263; and

Whereas from January, 1918, to the present time 527 civil service employees, accredited by the Civil Service Commission to the said State of Oklahoma, have been discharged from service by the various departments at Washington, without regard to the fact of Oklahoma's being short of its quota; and

Whereas the heads of bureaus and departments continue to discharge from the service Oklahoma civil service employees, regardless of the aforesaid law as to apportionment, thereby disregarding the aforesaid law; and

Whereas the records of the Civil Service Commission show that while the District of Columbia is entitled to 183 civil service employees it actually has 11,866; that while the State of Virginia is entitled to 968 it actually has 2,507; that while the State of Maryland is entitled to 607 it actually has 2,423; and some other States have more than their respective quotas, which shows that discrimination has been practiced by the bureaus and departments whose duty it is to properly carry out the provisions of the law as to apportionment: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Civil Service be authorized and directed to make investigations as to the cause of this failure to carry out the provisions of the civil service act providing for the apportionment of civil service employees among the States and Territories according to population;

That the heads of the departments and bureaus in Washington be directed in making reduction in forces of employees to keep in their employ the civil service employees from States whose quota is short of the number to which they are entitled until such time as such States have their quota, having due regard to ratings as to efficiency as fixed by the Civil Service Commission;

That said Committee on Civil Service make due report to the Senate of its findings, making recommendation as to the proper method of bringing about a correction of this discrimination and fix the blame, if any, for the failure to observe this provision of the law.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in order to get the matter submitted to the Senate so that action can be had on it, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending bill shall cease to-morrow at 5 o'clock, and that after 3 o'clock to-morrow no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill or any amendment thereto. I should like to say that I would have no objection to fixing that time for to-day. Some Senators are anxious to get away, and I would have no objection to that. In fact, I am not particularly anxious to fix any time, but I am trying to accommodate some Senators. I would be willing to have a vote taken this afternoon if unanimous consent could be had.

Mr. McCORMICK. I do not know how many Senators have left the city to celebrate Flag Day. Those who live in States conveniently situated to be reached by the Baltimore & Ohio and the Pennsylvania Railroads have very generally left the city, I think, to join in the ceremonies of the day. Personally I would rather vote to-day, but I think in the absence of those Senators it would not quite be fair without notice to do that.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I talked with quite a number of Senators who do not wish to have the vote taken to-day, and that is the reason why I did not suggest to-day.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator again state his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. NORRIS. My request is that all debate on the bill end at 5 o'clock to-morrow, and that after 3 o'clock to-morrow speeches shall be limited to five minutes and to one speech on the bill and one on each amendment.

Mr. McCORMICK. That at 5 o'clock to-morrow voting shall begin on the bill and all amendments thereto?

Mr. NORRIS. Any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered.

Mr. PENROSE. And then on the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. And then on the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hope it will be agreeable to the Senator from Nebraska to fix day after to-morrow instead of to-morrow. I should like to hear the debate throughout, but to-morrow I shall be engaged in a hearing so that I can not possibly attend the session of the Senate. I should like to have day after to-morrow fixed for the vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say to the Senator from South Dakota that that would be perfectly agreeable to me, but there are Senators who have to leave to-morrow night and they can not be here day after to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the request for unanimous consent can not be submitted to the Senate until a further call of the roll is had. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one moment, Mr. President. Before the Chair orders the Secretary to call the roll I wish to say that Senators on the other side of the Chamber have engaged in a private conversation that we over here could not hear. I ask that the proposal for the closing of the debate be stated loud enough so that we may understand it before the roll is ordered to be called. I was perfectly willing to have the conversation to continue until Senators on the other side of the aisle could reach an agreement, but now that they seem to have accomplished that purpose, I should like to have it stated loud enough for us to understand what it is.

Mr. NORRIS. I will very gladly restate it, although I supposed it was heard by everyone present. The request is that to-morrow at 5 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to vote upon the bill, and upon all amendments that may be pending or that may be offered, to a final disposition of the bill, and that after 3 o'clock to-morrow no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than five minutes upon the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suppose the Senator from Nebraska means that we shall vote to-morrow not later than 5 o'clock.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I myself have no objection to the request. I do not know, however, whether my own position represents other Senators on this side. So far as I am personally concerned, I know no objection to the proposition; but before the roll shall be called I ask that the Secretary reduce the proposal to writing and read it to the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he will not make the day for voting Thursday instead of to-morrow? The Senator from Nebraska on yesterday consumed almost the entire day in his opening statement. It was very interesting, but the fact that it took the Senator from Nebraska so long to make his opening statement, to my mind, would raise the presumption at least that the opponents of the bill might desire considerable time in which to answer the argument of the Senator from Nebraska. I do not know how many Senators on our side of the Chamber desire to speak, but I think there are some who wish to do so. I hardly think that the hour suggested by the Senator from Nebraska will allow sufficient time for debate upon this very important matter.

It is true we discussed this question, in a general way, at the last session, but since then we have had quite a number of additions to the Senate. Besides, some of us have forgotten some of the statements which were then made in reference to the matter. It is an exceedingly important question, and I for one should like to hear it a little more elaborately discussed than it has been or would be likely to be if we should limit ourselves to to-day and a part of to-morrow for debate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, I desire to say that I realize that I took up most of the time on yesterday.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator took up practically all the time on yesterday in his very lucid statement.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no disposition on my part to interfere with any other Senator in discussing the bill. As I said before, I am not making this request because I have any personal desire to fix the time which I have suggested for a vote on the bill; but it ought to be stated that, so far as the debate on the pending bill is concerned, the time consumed in debate has probably been about equally divided between those who favor the bill and those who oppose it. I am rather inclined to think that those who are in opposition to legislation of this kind have taken more time than have the proponents of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator mean they have done so at this session?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; at this session. Yesterday was not the first day on which we debated the bill.

However, Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to change the day I have suggested for a vote on the bill. I dislike to do so, however, because I know that some Senators will not be able to be here at a later date. Since I took the floor a few moments ago I have learned of one Senator who will not be here to-morrow. However, I do not know that a change in the day will make any particular difference and I should like to accommodate Senators as much as I can. Therefore, at the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina, I will change the time I had suggested for a vote on the bill, and ask that at 5 o'clock on Thursday——

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator to ask that the vote be taken "at not later than 5 o'clock."

Mr. NORRIS. That on Thursday at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. the Senate shall proceed to vote on the bill and the amendments pending and all amendments which may be offered, to a final disposition of the bill; and that after 3 o'clock on Thursday—and that will leave two hours—no Senator shall speak more than once or for longer than five minutes on the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I wonder if it would not be better to substitute the hour of 4 o'clock for 5 o'clock, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska. Five o'clock is a very inconvenient hour at which to begin voting. I ask if the Senator from Nebraska will not change his request for a unanimous-consent agreement as I have suggested?

Mr. NORRIS. I am perfectly willing that the agreement shall provide for voting at 4 o'clock, and that the hour at which the 5-minute rule shall become operative shall be changed to 2 o'clock instead of 3 o'clock.

Mr. McCORMICK. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the request for the unanimous-consent agreement asked for by the Senator from Nebraska as now modified.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] asks unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Thursday, June 16, 1921, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

UMI

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Lenroot	Pittman
Ball	Gerry	Lodge	Poindexter
Borah	Gooding	McCormick	Sheppard
Brandegee	Hale	McCumber	Simmons
Broussard	Harreld	McKellar	Smith
Bursum	Harris	McKinley	Smoot
Calder	Harrison	McNary	Sterling
Cameron	Heflin	Myers	Sutherland
Capper	Hitchcock	Nelson	Swanson
Caraway	Johnson	New	Trammell
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Underwood
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kendrick	Oddie	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Kenyon	Overman	Warren
Dillingham	King	Owen	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	Ladd	Penrose	Williams
Fernald	La Follette	Phipps	Wolcott

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think the Senate always experiences one difficulty under unanimous-consent agreements that absolutely close debate at a certain hour. If this proposed agreement could be modified so that the Senate could begin voting upon this proposition at, say, not later than 4 o'clock on Thursday and that thereafter debate should be limited under the 5-minute rule, I think it would eliminate the trouble which we always experience when 4 o'clock arrives under the usual unanimous-consent agreement that terminates debate. Amendments that have not been before the Senate previous to that time are proposed from that hour on until the bill is finally disposed of without any opportunity to explain those amendments or to debate them in any way, and we often are driven to vote upon amendments without a clear understanding of their meaning. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that he make the modification in his request for unanimous consent and ascertain whether it will meet with the favor of Senators.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think every Senator realizes that the difficulty which the Senator from Wisconsin has suggested almost always arises when we enter into a unanimous agreement for a final vote. That has been the experience of the Senate. I submitted the request in the usual form. Personally I have no objection whatever to making the change the Senator proposes; but if we do make it, it will, of course, be no agreement for a final vote; it will simply mean that after a certain time, which we will agree on, speeches shall be limited to five minutes, and that there shall be only one speech by each Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to express my approval of the remarks made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. Heretofore on numerous occasions during my somewhat limited period of service in the Senate I have made a similar suggestion. I have never seen an occasion when there was a limit fixed to debate that we did not reach a vote within a reasonable time, and if we could limit the debate to five minutes after 1 o'clock or 2 o'clock on Thursday, I am sure that the voting would go along in regular order, and that there would be no undue delay in reaching a final disposition of the bill. I should like to concur heartily in the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin and urge, if I may, that the proposed unanimous-consent agreement simply be that after 1 o'clock or 2 o'clock on Thursday debate upon the bill and all amendments thereto shall be limited to five minutes, and that no Senator may speak more than once upon the bill or any amendment; in other words, strike out the agreement for an ultimate vote at 4 or 5 o'clock and change the time for limiting debate to 2 o'clock.

Mr. NORRIS. If we strike out the provision as to the final vote, to which I have no objection if Senators want the proposed agreement framed in that way, we ought, then, to change the hour at which the 5-minute rule shall apply.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am perfectly willing that that should be done.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, let me suggest that the 5-minute rule shall be enforced at not later than 1 o'clock on Thursday.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me make a suggestion and see if it meets the approval of the Senate. Eliminate the provision for a final vote and confine the agreement so that after 1 o'clock on Thursday no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than five minutes upon the bill or any amendment thereto.

Mr. McCORMICK. On any one amendment thereto.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; any one amendment.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, that, of course, does not fix a time for a final vote, but that will bring it to a close. It will soon exhaust debate, and I think myself it would be a more intelligent way to legislate.

Mr. SMOOT. Will not the Senator make it 2 o'clock instead of 1?

Mr. McCORMICK. If we recess until 11 o'clock that day, we shall have two hours before 1 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that might be done.

Mr. NORRIS. I am perfectly willing if we can have an understanding on the side that the Senate will meet at 11 o'clock on Thursday instead of 12. Suppose we put that in the unanimous-consent agreement—that on Thursday the Senate shall meet at 11 o'clock, and that after 1 o'clock on that day no Senator shall speak more than five minutes nor oftener than once upon the bill or any one amendment thereto.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I certainly do not desire to unnecessarily delay voting on this bill, but it seems to me that in a matter of such tremendous importance to the country we ought at least to have a little time to discuss this subject on the last day, which would be Thursday. If the Senator would accept an amendment making it 2 o'clock instead of 1 o'clock, I would be quite satisfied—that we recess until 11 o'clock on Thursday and begin debating at 2 o'clock under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. NORRIS. If we should take a recess until 11 o'clock, that would give the same time.

Mr. FERNALD. That was what I suggested—that we recess until 11 o'clock Thursday, and then begin the debate under the 5-minute rule at 2 o'clock.

Mr. NORRIS. We will have all day to-day and all day to-morrow, and from 11 o'clock until 1 o'clock on Thursday, without any limitation. That ought to be enough, I should think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the agreement as now proposed.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to eliminate the words "without further debate" and the commas and amend so as to read:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Thursday, June 16, 1921, the Senate will proceed to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered——

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President; the Secretary is not reading the modified agreement, as I understand it. There is no time fixed for a final vote in the agreement that is suggested; nothing at 4 o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. While I was willing to consent to the original agreement, I understand that the modification is that after 2 o'clock on Thursday the debate shall be limited to five minutes. That is all there is to the agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and included in it is that we shall meet that day at 11 o'clock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] has suggested that there ought to be opportunity for some Senators who have not spoken at all as yet to make longer speeches, can we not make it a part of the agreement that the Senate will recess until 11 o'clock both to-morrow and Thursday? That will give an extra hour.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that the Senator accepts that suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed unanimous-consent agreement as now modified.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on the calendar days of Wednesday, June 15, and Thursday, June 16, 1921, the Senate will meet at 11 o'clock a. m.; that immediately upon assembling on the last-named calendar day the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill H. R. 6320, an act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, etc.; and that after the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. on the said last-named calendar day (Thursday, June 16, 1921) no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed agreement? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, yesterday was Calendar Monday, and a number of Senators expected the calendar to be called to consider vital subjects, but other matters arose which consumed the entire morning. It seemed to me yesterday that it would have been ungracious or ungenerous to ask for the regular order, therefore we were deprived of Calendar Monday. If no Senator desires to address the Senate at this time on the unfinished business, I ask unanimous consent that we recur to the calendar to consider unobjected bills, say for one hour.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me, in order to protect the Senators who want to talk on the unfinished business, that I am compelled to object to taking up the calendar. I feel it my duty to keep the Senate in such a condition that no advantage can be taken of any Senator who wants to speak now, since we have made this unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HARRISON obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I am in sympathy with all that my belligerent friend from Mississippi is going to say, I am in sympathy with all that he has said, but if no Senator desired to discuss the packers bill, I thought we might have the calendar to transact pending matters. The Senator from Mississippi will say nothing with which I am not in accord.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to say to the Senator that I am in thorough sympathy with his proposal.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; and I feel that we would do the country some substantial service if we could have the calendar for an hour, instead of talking of Sims and Harvey.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator that I do not propose to talk about Sims and Harvey to-day. I want to insert in the RECORD a very remarkable editorial by the official organ of the administration, a very excellent political classic that appeared in the Washington Post of yesterday morning.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to hear it. Nothing that the Washington Post has printed is offensive to me. I hope the Senator will put the entire issue in the RECORD.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, with this preliminary bout out of the way, I shall read this remarkable political classic. This paper is the mouthpiece of the party that now controls the Government, and the editorial pretends to set forth the achievements of the Republican Party during the first 14 weeks it has controlled the Government.

I will read first how it begins. The editorial is headed "On the path of progress."

Of course, no Senator on the other side will controvert the proposition that this paper speaks by the card and that this is the official mouthpiece of the administration.

President Harding has been in office 14 weeks, and the stage has now arrived when it is to be expected that some party opponent will arise in his place and blandly inquire what this administration has really done.

Of course, that was penned, no doubt, because of "a guilty conscience." The Good Book says that "The wicked flee when no man pursueth."

The inquiry would not be made with a view to eliciting information, but for the very obvious purpose of creating the impression that in 14 weeks nothing has been accomplished by the party which the people of the United States last November delegated to take over the reins of government.

The truth is that much has been done in this time. Long strides have been taken along the path of progress by both the executive and legislative branches of the Government, and the record of constructive work is highly creditable. The fact that there remains so much to be done in the interests of the people does not in any way belittle the achievements to date. The latter stand not only as steps actually taken in the program of reconstruction, but also as guaranties of the administration's determination to carry out in good faith all the pledges made to the people in the recent campaign.

If called upon to enumerate some of the things done during the first three months of this administration, one would naturally include the following—

They pretend to include the following, which I shall enumerate and discuss only briefly; and if any Senator on the other side of the aisle can suggest any other achievement than those enumerated in this classic, I shall pause and invite the interruption, because if the editor of this paper forgot anything it should be included. I can not suggest any other, and I am sure that no one on this side will recall any other; but some one over there may think, even though this editorial delves into the future and classes as achievements those things that have not happened, that others should be included. The first achievement in importance enumerated is—

Enactment of an emergency tariff bill for the relief of American industry pending action upon a permanent bill.

I am quite sure that no one except the editor of this paper would pretend to claim that as an achievement of his party, because it was passed to the shame of the Republican Party, will rise in the future to plague it, and violated one of the pledges it made in the recent campaign. Even the proponents of the measure, those who championed it and stood for it, backed it because they said that it would increase the price of the farm products enumerated in the bill; and so it broke the promise that you made when you said you were going to reduce the high cost of living. Here we have the official organ of the administration displacing at the top of the list of achievements the passage of the emergency tariff bill, that placed greater burdens upon the American people in the higher costs that they must pay for the necessaries of life—higher bread, higher meats, higher sugar, higher rice, higher wool, higher shoes, higher butter and milk, and all those things that go upon the breakfast table, and all those things that the workingman must buy in order to clothe himself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if it does not interrupt the Senator too much, I should like to ask him a question. I have not kept up with the condition since the passage of the emergency tariff bill; but we were told at that time that it was going to improve conditions in agricultural and other products. Can the Senator tell us whether there has been any improvement due to that?

Mr. HARRISON. I have not heard any Senator who stood by that measure say that it has helped in the slightest. I notice that those who control the Government now, and who for a while criticized the Democratic administration for not disposing of the large surplus of wool that was on hand, the other day canceled the advertisement that they were going to sell it up in Boston; and, too, a bloc of agricultural Senators and Representatives are constantly meeting, trying to do something for the farmers of the country, because they know that they are in distress.

No ray of hope or good has come from the passage of the emergency tariff bill. The Senator remembers, and Senators on the other side remember, that the other day the distinguished junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] offered and had passed a resolution to investigate the agricultural conditions of the country, for the relief of the farmers, admitting by that resolution that the emergency tariff bill would not bring the good which its proponents said it would when they urged its passage, even to the extent of trying to throttle us by a cloture rule to put it over.

I hope that much good will come from the investigation of the committee of which the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin is the chairman, but certainly they have admitted by that, and by other acts, that the emergency tariff bill will do and has done no good. If it has accomplished anything for the farmers, I wish some Senator over there would rise in his place now and tell us what it is. Not only that, but in the consideration of that bill—and it will stand forever against the party in control, and I wonder why the editor of the paper did not cite that—when we on this side really wanted to do some good for the farmers, and allow such things as barbed-wire fencing, farming implements of every kind, sewing machines, bagging and ties, and other things which the farmer needs to produce that which he sells to be admitted into the United States free of duty, every Senator on the other side voted against it, and by the provisions of the bill there was imposed a high-tariff duty upon those things imported which the farmers need to make their products.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. By the postponement of the enactment of the peace resolution, which the Senate passed quite a while ago, the peach growers of Georgia, as well as the corn growers and the cotton growers and the growers of other products, not only of Georgia but of the entire South; all the fruit-producing, all the melon-producing, all of the cotton-producing areas of the South have been deprived of German potash, and it is well known that, in the case of the peach, for instance, you can not without that potash toughen it or give it the color it must have when you ship it.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true; and not only did they, in voting against that measure, impose a tariff upon potash and other fertilizers which come into this country, or would come into this country, which we desire to have come in free, but they defeated that amendment which would have resulted in great benefit to the farmers of the country. Every kind of fertilizer under the amendment they voted against would have been admitted free of duty.

When they knew from experts who appeared before the committee that the resumption of the Muscle Shoals plant to make fertilizers for the farmers of the country needed a meager appropriation to continue it, they sat in their places and refused to make the appropriation that would have redounded to the benefit of the farmers in cheaper fertilizers.

Those things are not enumerated among the achievements set forth by the Washington Post, the official organ of the administration.

But the next in importance which is enumerated in this editorial is the—

Passage of an immigration bill checking the flood of aliens to the United States, and thereby protecting American labor from unlimited competition with foreign labor.

What other Republican would claim credit for the passage of the immigration bill as a party achievement? If it had been left to Senators on this side of the aisle, we would have placed upon the statute books a real restrictive immigration bill, and the reason why it is not a real restrictive immigration bill and does not go further to protect the labor of the country against cheaper labor being brought in from abroad and our country from being flooded with undesirable immigration from foreign lands, as this editorial says, is that it was strangled by Members of the Senate on the other side of the aisle. We tried to have adopted an amendment restricting the number of immigrants coming into this country to 1 per cent, but it was voted down by Senators on the other side. I myself offered the amendment to make it 3 per cent, lowering it from 5 per cent as carried in the original bill, which the majority side favored, and that was agreed to and was finally incorporated into the law.

Yet we find that this Republican organ claims for the Republican Party the credit for passing an anti-immigration bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. We tried more than that. We tried to shut it out altogether for a limited period.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; we tried to shut it out for a limited period. But they claim it as an achievement of the present administration. It shows how far the Republican leadership will go in order to deceive the American people.

Let us see what else is in this list of achievements. Next in order is—

Passage of necessary appropriation bills which failed in the last Congress.

The passage of appropriation bills which failed in the last Congress is cited by the official organ of the administration as a great achievement of the Republican Party in the first 14 weeks of its control.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, neither the Army nor the Navy appropriation bill has been finally passed.

Mr. HARRISON. I was just coming to that. Neither the Army nor the Navy appropriation bill has been finally passed, and only on yesterday was the last conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill agreed to, and I do not think it has yet been signed by the President of the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that possibly the official organ had doubts as to whether the party in power could pass an appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and I think that is well founded, because the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] for weeks and for months in the last Congress, with all the power he possessed, could not succeed in getting the naval appropriation bill passed over the objection that was made to it by Senators on the other side of the aisle.

It is incumbent upon you to pass appropriation bills. While you deserve the condemnation of the American people for your failure to pass these bills during the last session of Congress, I am glad the naval appropriation bill failed, because by Democratic votes we were able at this session by cooperating with the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and a few others on the other side of the aisle to reduce the appropriations largely and to add to the bill the disarmament amendment.

But we will see a little later on in this remarkable list of achievements that they claim the disarmament proposition as a Republican achievement.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, is it not true that in the last deficiency appropriation bill, which was just passed, an amendment was included to make it possible for the bookkeeping to show that the appropriation bills which were passed at this session of Congress would be charged up to the last session?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. For the first time in the history of the American Congress, so far as I know—and it was admitted by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—a provision was inserted in the bill that the appropriations which were made in this session of the Congress should be charged up against the old Congress, so that they could go to the people and say, "Look at the great amount of money that was saved during the first session when the Republicans controlled the White House and the two branches of the Congress."

The bill to which the Senator from Rhode Island has called my attention—the deficiency bill—which is supposed to carry appropriations only to take care of deficiencies, is the largest in the history of the Congress, with one exception, I believe. In the good old days, in the good old Democratic days, I believe the largest appropriation carried in a deficiency bill was around $30,000,000. The two last deficiency bills which were passed by a Republican Congress carried around a quarter of a billion dollars. Not only that, but you have not confined the bills to making appropriations to meet deficiencies, as we did in the good old Democratic measures, but you create new offices in deficiency bills and make appropriations for the months and the years to come, not deficiencies at all, but to pay salaries for the year 1922.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was just about to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in this bill there is new legislation making appropriation of over $500,000 for additional clerk hire.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and I say to the other side that the people will find you out sooner or later. An editorial such as this will not deceive the American people.

If what I am saying is not true, I invite an interruption from distinguished Senators on the other side of the aisle. I am wondering if you approve of this article, and if you can think of some other achievement your party deserves credit for except those enumerated here.

Let us go further. The editorial states as next in importance the following:

The joint resolution establishing a status of peace between the United States and Germany has passed the Senate and is now under consideration by the House.

Fourteen weeks we have been in session. You promised to establish peace right off the reel, and yet this simple little resolution declaring a status of peace has not passed yet. Yesterday it passed the House, and yet I am wondering what the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader of his party in this body, who is known in every nook and corner of the land, and what the distinguished junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the author of the so-called Knox resolution, now think of their "baby." It was demolished over in the House. They did to it over there what we tried to do to it on this side of the aisle when it was before the Senate, and we had help from only one Senator on the other side, the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

They offered an affront to you over in the House. Yet, if the reports be true, they had the cooperation of the President of the United States. The resolution as passed by the House, it is said, met the favor of the President, and that which was passed by the Senate met his disfavor. I am wondering what you will do with that resolution when it comes back.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They mixed their babies up.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, in view of the magic power of the President to change the sentiment of distinguished Republican Senators on the Colombian treaty, does not the Senator from Mississippi believe that when this new peace resolution comes back to the Senate perhaps the fact that the President sustains a friendly attitude toward it will change the sentiment on the other side of the aisle, and that they will accept it?

Mr. HARRISON. I have no doubt that we will see another strange political acrobatic performance, such as that evidenced by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, who now confronts me, in his speech made at Union College advocating, in that splendid commencement address, a strong League of Nations to preserve the peace of the world, and then the reservations he proposed in the consideration of the treaty of Versailles.

And then the other change that he made from what he had stood for in the Senate, to his present position against ratification of the treaty of Versailles with or without reservations; aye, even to the extent of publicly declaring that it should be sent to the "scrap pile."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Or any League of Nations.

Mr. HARRISON. Or any League of Nations at all. That is in keeping with a good many changes of distinguished Senators over on the other side. You remember they changed overnight on the disarmament proposition. The distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], acting chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, stood adamant against the disarmament amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and all of his colleagues over there were with him. They would not stand for it. I understand, if newspaper reports are correct, that the Senator from Washington and his colleague on the committee, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], did go to see the President and talked to him about this disarmament proposition. But they left the White House without any common understanding upon it. Their faces were downcast. The President told them he would not stand for it, so the papers said. Then suddenly, like a clap of thunder out of a clear sky, the whole crowd over there changed, and came to the support of the distinguished Senator from Idaho.

So I imagine that again they will change their position on the so-called Knox resolution, and will now stand behind Representative PORTER and his resolution, which passed the House on yesterday.

Mr. WILLIAMS. By a tremendous majority.

Mr. HARRISON. By a tremendous majority. Now, the next enumeration of splendid achievements is:

A permanent tariff bill has been drafted by the House Committee on Ways and Means and is nearly ready for the consideration of Congress.

That is an achievement of the present administration in the first 14 weeks that it has controlled the Government. The consideration of this tariff proposition began months and months and months before the 4th of March of this year. They were having hearings all last fall and are still considering it in the House. They have that proposition over there too——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Does the article say that these things which are not yet finished are achievements of the Republican Party?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; they claim these as achievements.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am very much reminded, if the Senator will permit me, of something I read. I think it was something that old Benjamin Franklin said about the delay with which he was meeting in not being permitted to sail. The governor of the province had constantly told him the ship would sail the next day, and old Ben said he was very much reminded of the sign of King George on the tavern—always on horseback but never moving on.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator. His illustration is most appropriate. In the consideration of the tariff bill that has been cited here as an accomplishment, I should like to have the country know, too, that for the first time in the history of the American Congress one of the Members of the House, an influential member of the Ways and Means Committee, backed up by the leaders in the House—I hope not by those over here—proposes to pass a resolution to have the rates imposed in this unborn baby to begin immediately upon its report to the House from the Ways and Means Committee. I refer to the Longworth resolution. I have no doubt that in their mad effort to try to write some kind of achievement they will pass that resolution over there. I can not believe that Senators on the other side of the aisle will permit it to pass here. I am told just now that it may be three weeks or more before it is reported to the House, and yet it is claimed as an achievement of the present administration. As the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] just suggests, they are claiming an unborn child as an adult.

The next proposition is:

The President has initiated a movement looking to a conference of the great powers with a view to reduction of armament.

I wonder what the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] thinks about that proposition. Why, the country will laugh at such a suggestion of achievement for the present administration. Everyone knows, and it was no secret, that the President was against any resolution touching the disarmament proposition. When you Republicans defeated the League of Nations you killed the best plan ever offered for disarmament, and the disarmament provision would not now be in the naval appropriation bill if it were not for the untiring efforts of the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Democratic membership of this body, and you only allowed it to pass when you knew we were going to force it on you anyhow.

The President from his actions—though I do not know what his utterances have been—has no sympathy with the movement for disarmament in this country. The Secretary of War is even talking to graduates in this country ridiculing and criticizing the plan for disarmament and saying we should not proceed until all the nations start together on disarmament. He is opposed, as well as the Secretary of the Navy, to the amendment which was incorporated in the naval appropriation bill by the distinguished Senator from Idaho. Evidently the President is now opposed to it, for the reason, if reports are true, it has been changed in conference and the House at his suggestion stands for a repudiation of your action.

Another enumeration:

Plans for funding the public debt are well in hand and a comprehensive program will be announced before long.

It will be announced just a little while before the next election, so that you can hoodwink some people just about that time, and yet that is counted as an achievement of the present administration.

Another alleged achievement:

The administration already has taken up the subject of getting the transportation system upon a satisfactory basis with a view to reducing railroad rates.

So it is claimed as an achievement of the party that there will be a reduction in railroad rates. Yet the standard bearer of the party in the last campaign pronounced as the greatest accomplishment of a Republican Congress the passage of the Cummins-Esch railroad bill. I think I saw in one of the papers the other day that the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, the author of the bill in the Senate, said that neither the shippers nor the railroads were satisfied with it. If there is anyone satisfied with the Cummins-Esch railroad bill that was pronounced by Mr. Harding when a candidate for the Presidency as a great achievement, I have not seen him. Here is what President Harding said at Galion, Ohio, on August 27, about the railroad bill:

GALION, OHIO, August 27.

Facing a supposedly hostile crowd of 900 railroad men here to-day, Senator Harding told them the time would come when they would hail the Cummins-Esch railroad act as "the greatest forward step in all the history of railway legislation."

"Some of you do not approve," he said. "Some of you wished the Plumb plan. Let me look you in the face and let me tell you I think the Cummins-Esch Act is the expression of the conscience of a Congress which sought to give highest service to the country.

"Some day, maybe not this year, you railway workers will hail that law as the greatest forward step in all the history of railway legislation."

So that which he claimed was a great achievement last year they claim now through the official organ they are going to change and make really in the interest of cheaper freight rates. Oh that you could claim as an achievement something that would lighten the present exorbitant transportation charges.

The people of the country are not only being grinded beneath the heavy load of taxation, but prevented from shipping their products to markets because of the unusual and heavy transportation rates.

All of this is due to the passage of a measure that your party is responsible for and for which your President spoke in most laudatory terms of approval on a hundred occasions in the last campaign.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to have the Senator ask if there is any Senator on the floor to-day who is now pleased with the Cummins-Esch railroad bill? If there is one, I should like to hear from him.

Mr. BORAH. Some Senators on this side of the Chamber are not pleased with it, and never were.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure of that.

Mr. BORAH. However, it could not have passed Congress without support from the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure that the Senator from Idaho was in the same position I was on that bill, and we both voted against it. We did not believe in it then and we do not believe in it now.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Republican mouthpiece claims as an achievement something that is going to happen in the future touching a repeal or modification of the bill he sponsored and his party colleagues framed. The only evidence I have seen on which to claim this achievement is that the President walked over one day unattended to the Interstate Commerce Commission and expressed the view privately to some employee or perhaps a commissioner that the rates should be lowered to some extent on fruits.

Oh, Mr. President, it takes more than that to remove the burdens imposed by that bill from the backs of the American people. And this false claim only accentuates the present deplorable transportation conditions for which you are responsible.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Recurring to the achievement recorded with respect to tariff legislation, I am reminded that only a day or two ago the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, having despaired of reaching any agreement whatever upon the wool schedule, requested the Tariff Commission to prepare a draft for them, and were told that it would be some months before they would be able to report. Accordingly if the bill is to be reported within two or three months from the present time the Committee on Ways and Means must again undertake to frame something on the wool schedule or defer reporting the bill for at least two months.

Mr. HARRISON. What happened is just contrary to what the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] said was going to happen when the bill was being considered.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I notice in the reading of these achievements, these wonderful achievements, that things are spoken of in futuro. For instance, one of the achievements is that they favor revising the railroad law, but they do not say how they are going to revise it.

Mr. HARRISON. They do not know.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; they do not know. Another achievement is that they are at work on a tariff bill, but they do not know just yet what it will be.

Mr. HARRISON. The "best minds" will get together.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; the best minds will function on that proposition and, I assume, do something as ideal as the typical Republican tariff legislation in the past.

Mr. WILLIAMS. For mutual profit.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; for mutual profit. Is not this rather typical of the mental operations of those who are now in charge of the Government? I recall very distinctly, if the Senator will pardon me a moment more, that during the campaign the Republican candidate for President very frequently made some such statement as this: "I favor a revision of the revenue law, but am not at this time prepared to say how. I favor"—I recall very distinctly he said, in substance—"our entering into an association of nations, but I am not at this time prepared to say what it will be."

Now, does the Senator find anything in this editorial that indicates that that Republican state of mind or Republican process of mental operation has in anywise changed? Is it not still a case of favoring something, but they do not know just what it is?

Mr. HARRISON. It is in keeping with the very consistent policy of the present President of changing very quickly on every proposition and being just as clear as mud on all propositions.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is to say, these gentlemen, now that they are in office, are manifesting the same mental ebb and flow that they manifested while they were candidates. Their minds are still in a state of flux. They have not yet arrived at a destination.

Mr. HARRISON. And the people of the country are rapidly waking up to the fact.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, this seems to be a mosaic speech of the best contributory minds. [Laughter.] A sort of picnic basket dinner to which each brings his share of the victuals——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, we can not hear the joke. What is it?

Mr. SMITH. It is on the Republican Party.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. As this seems to be a sort of contribution to a brilliant patchwork quilt, I would suggest to the Senator from Mississippi, if he will suspend his storm for a moment, that the present administration has actually put this Government in communication with a functioning body, the supreme council, which is moving armies and allotting territories and remaking the map of the world, and that while we have repudiated the League of Nations we are in an association of nations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Quite right!

Mr. HARRISON. The next enumeration of achievement carried in the official organ is this:

> There has been material improvement in the hospitalization and rehabilitation of sick and wounded soldiers, with better conditions to come.

The arrogance of laying claim to doing something toward bettering the conditions of the disabled soldiers of the country! The only thing that has been done for the disabled soldiers or any of the soldiers, through studying their conditions has been by those on this side of the aisle. Only the other day the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] in a very eloquent speech sponsored a resolution to investigate the situation and bring about some relief. It was his resolution that was reported out of the committee and passed by the Senate.

I shall not forget the splendid fight that was made by the able senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] for a larger and increased appropriation to build hospitals for the disabled soldiers of the country. It met opposition from the other side of the aisle, and we did not obtain that which was needed and which we so much desired. It is puerile, it is sickening to see them lay claim to doing something that was sponsored and forced to passage by the Members on this side of the aisle.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. GERRY. Does the article from which the Senator is reading detail any of the work that has been done in revenue legislation or what has already been accomplished in the way of reducing taxes?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, no. That is one of the things that has been promised that has not yet come about. It does not state either the object of a great conference that was held in the White House at a big dinner some two weeks ago, I believe, where the very important question was discussed of how we are going to revise the tax situation in the country and the finances of the country, at which conference, as the distinguished Senators recall, very able financiers from New York were present. The biggest bankers were there, I believe, including John P. Morgan. They would not let a little fellow in on that occasion. Only the men who are worth millions and millions and who now control and have controlled for years the policies of Wall Street could appear and get a place at that festive board.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, if I recollect correctly, one of the promises upon which the Republican campaign managers put the greatest stress was that they would reduce taxation. I have in my hand here the hearings before the Committee on Finance of the Senate, part 15, dated May 25, 1921. I find there that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] asked:

> You do not believe for a moment that taxes are going to be less than they are this year for many years to come?
> Mr. MILLER. I am very much afraid it can not be done, Senator.
> Senator SMOOT. Let me say to you frankly that I think they will be increased.
> Mr. MILLER. I am sorry to hear that.

That, coming from one of the leaders of the Republican Party, seems to indicate that we are not going to have a reduction of taxes when the proposed new revenue law shall have been passed by the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it must be confessed that Mr. Miller expressed regret.

Mr. GERRY. I read that.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; Mr. Miller expressed regret, although the distinguished Senator from Utah last year in his campaign did not tell his people that the Republican Party would be unable to reduce taxes. He then stated that they were going to reduce the high cost of living; that they were going to cut down the enormous expenses of the Government; that they were going to reduce the taxes of the people. Now, however, the folks are waking up; they see that the expenditures are not being diminished, the taxes are not being reduced; that the cost of living is not being lowered; that they are in the hands of the biggest gang of reactionaries—I will not say pirates——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Profiteers.

Mr. HARRISON. Of profiteers in the country.

Mr. GERRY. Is it not parallel with the fact that in 1908, when the Republican Party won the election with a pledge to revise the tariff, after Congress assembled they said that they had not promised to revise it downward, and they proceeded to revise it upward?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and the very next time the people got a chance at them they drove them from power and commissioned the Democratic Party to take charge of the Government. It is also a remarkable fact in history that within less than 30 days after the succeeding Congress was organized, when the Democrats obtained control, they had passed a revenue bill and sent it over to the Senate for its consideration. The Democrats did that in less than 30 days; but here the Republicans have been considering the tariff question for 8 months; indeed, they should have gone at it sooner than that, for they have now had control of the legislative branch of the Government for 27 months.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that the Democrats, when they drew their tariff bill, did not suffer from an impediment from which the Republicans are compelled to suffer, namely, a flood of lobbyists who are here attempting to secure favors and to suppress legislation?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but how can we blame the lobbyists coming here? The President invites them to come here for conference. They are invited here, and they are swarming around here. They are being encouraged to come. So I do not blame the lobbyists so much as I do the leadership of the Republican Party that is inviting them here.

The last enumeration which this official organ gives in the list of achievements of the party is—

> A new Shipping Board has been appointed which warrants the confidence of the President and the people that it will be able to solve one of the most perplexing problems confronting the Government.

The fact that a Shipping Board has been appointed is placed in the list of achievements. It took the President 14 weeks to settle in his mind after he became President upon the head of a Shipping Board. He had, of course, from the 2d of November last year to the 4th of March, in addition to these 14 weeks, to decide on that appointment. He offered the place to the heads of the big interests of the country or to a great many of them; I will not say to all of them. He probably did not offer it to the head of the Powder Trust or to the head of the Meat Trust, but he offered it to the head of the Standard Oil Co., and he offered it to the head of the United States Steel Corporation. Finally, perhaps he recalled seeing as he went through the country in his campaign that wonderful likeness of two distinguished Republican leaders on the bill boards of the country, and under it printed, "Let's be done with wiggle and wabble," and he thought that the author of that remarkable phrase should be compensated in some way. So he chooses as the head of the Shipping Board Mr. Lasker, who was the author of that slogan of the Republican Party—"Let's be done with wiggle and wabble," the finest and most correct characterization of Candidate Harding, as well as President Harding, that could possibly have been conceived.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that what I have read is a poor list of alleged achievements. Everything is going to happen in the future; they can say nothing about the present. I do not see why the fact was overlooked that the head of this administration made some great discoveries of some very remarkable geniuses in this country and placed them in high places. The fact could have been cited of sending George Harvey, for instance, over to the Court of St. James as a mouthpiece of the administration.

However, I promised the distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] that I would not talk about Harvey, so I will not. They could have told as another achievement the compensating of Scott Bone, who was the publicity manager of the Republican campaign committee in the last campaign, who distributed throughout the country that scurrilous and sacrilegious pamphlet and cartoon on the Immaculate Conception. He obtained his compensation. I do not know whether for that, but that was one of the services which he rendered his party, and he was compensated by being appointed governor of Alaska.

Then, too, the head of the party made a great discovery of a physician up in Ohio and saw fit to take him away from those dear people, his patients and patrons there, and to make him a brigadier general. What would the country have done if Gen. Sawyer had not come to Washington? He is going to give the people a public welfare department that will take care of all the ills of all the people for all time in this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does my colleague remember that when President Wilson made an admiral out of a doctor who was already in the Navy there was very much ridicule of it on the other side of the Chamber?

Mr. HARRISON. There was.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now when the President conscripts a civilian and makes a brigadier general of him we have not heard a word from the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. HARRISON. That is true. These are some of the achievements which might have been enumerated, but I leave this splendid political classic to Senators on the other side of the Chamber to deliberate upon, and commend it to the country as proof of Republican hypocrisy.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I hope that no Senator will object while I ask to have read at the desk a letter from a Georgia Negro, a one-horse tenant, written to the editor of my home-town paper and published in that paper in the State, of course, which in part I represent. I will ask the Secretary to read the marked letter as a kind of epilogue to the speech of the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

A COLORED FARMER GIVES GOOD ADVICE.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: Allow me to speak to the colored subscribers of the McDuffie Progress about the conditions we are now living in.

Instead of complaining about the condition, get busy and prepare for the future. Now is the time to fatten the pig for your next year's meat. While the grass is growing, pull grass, pull weeds. It don't take corn alone to make meat. There is more lard in trash for hogs in summer than lard in corn in winter.

Get busy! Get it out of your minds about you don't know what you are going to do. Get a move on you and show to the world what you are doing. Now is the time to prepare for the future. Plant your corn and fatten your hogs. Don't think it takes so many hogs to the family. I have six in family and I only kill two and three hogs for three years. We don't buy meat, lard, corn, nor fodder, by hustling from May until harvest time. I begin to plant as soon as the season will allow until the last of July or August 1.

I live on a little farm of Mr. W. C. Gibson's. I am cutting grain to-day and fixing to plant peas and corn. I live 12 miles from town.

I will renew my subscription soon, Mr. Editor. If this is not fixed right, please fix it. From a Georgia farmer. I lives in the forks of the creek.

MADISON EMORY.

JUNE 1, 1921.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Had we not better appoint a committee to investigate and ascertain what the writer of that letter means? We are investigating almost everything else.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed with amendments the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 16) repealing the joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany, and the joint resolution of December 7, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PEACE WITH GERMANY AND AUSTRIA.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the message just received from the House may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
June 13, 1921.

Resolved, That the joint resolution from the Senate (S. J. Res. 16) entitled "Joint resolution repealing the joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany, and the joint resolution of December 7, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, and for other purposes," do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert: "That the state of war declared to exist between the Imperial German Government and the United States of America by the joint resolution of Congress approved April 6, 1917, is hereby declared at an end.

"SEC. 2. That in making this declaration, and as a part of it, there are expressly reserved to the United States of America and its nationals any and all rights, privileges, indemnities, reparations, or advantages, together with the right to enforce the same, to which it or they have become entitled under the terms of the armistice signed November 11, 1918, or any extensions or modifications thereof; or which were acquired by or are in the possession of the United States of America by reason of its participation in the war or to which its nationals have thereby become rightfully entitled; or which, under the treaty of Versailles, have been stipulated for its or their benefit; or to which it is entitled as one of the principal allied and associated powers; or to which it is entitled by virtue of an act or acts of Congress; or otherwise.

"SEC. 3. That the state of war declared to exist between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the United States of America by the joint resolution of Congress approved December 7, 1917, is hereby declared at an end.

"SEC. 4. That in making this declaration, and as a part of it, there are expressly reserved to the United States of America and its nationals any and all rights, privileges, indemnities, reparations, or advantages, together with the right to enforce the same, to which it or they have become entitled under the terms of the armistice signed November 3, 1918, or any extensions or modifications thereof; or which were acquired by or are in the possession of the United States of America by reason of its participation in the war or to which its nationals have thereby become rightfully entitled; or which, under the treaty of St. Germain-en-Laye or the treaty of Trianon, have been stipulated for its or their benefit; or to which it is entitled as one of the principal allied and associated powers; or to which it is entitled by virtue of any act or acts of Congress; or otherwise."

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution terminating the state war between the Imperial German Government and the United States of America and between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the United States of America."

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I shall not delay the Senate at any length. I merely want to say that if I intended to vote for this joint resolution when it is agreed to—that is, to make peace by congressional action instead of by a treaty made by the President and confirmed by the Senate—I would then insist that this amendment should be acted upon by the Senate before it goes to conference. I think the condition of the joint resolution agreed to by the House is far better than when it passed the Senate. I am in thorough accord with the view expressed by the House in amending the Senate joint resolution by striking out of the joint resolution those clauses which repeal the law declaring that a state of war existed between this country and the Imperial German Government.

I never believed that anything could be accomplished by repealing the declaration of war, more than that it might be considered in the future as an apology for our going to war. Therefore I think the House joint resolution is in better form than the Senate joint resolution; but as I do not think that we should declare peace by joint resolution of Congress—a one-sided peace, a one-sided declaration—and as I do not believe that we will get anywhere by this action and think we will be absolutely driven to making a separate treaty of peace with Germany if we take this action, I shall vote against the conference report when it comes back; and I think what I say represents the views of a very large percentage of the Members on this side who voted against the joint resolution before. But if it is only a question of those who are in favor of it, the majority party, getting together and passing a joint resolution that will not bring about effective peace relations with Germany in the end, and they insist on doing so, I see no reason why we should delay them in their efforts to reach an agreement among themselves. Therefore I shall not resist action on the joint resolution at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] moves that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. KNOX, and Mr. HITCHCOCK conferees on the part of the Senate.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to ask that a bill receive consideration, not at this time, but I bring it up here to see if I can not secure a special order under Rule X for its consideration later in the session. Many Senators have told me that they wanted to be present when the bill was brought up, and I am compelled to be away for several days after the packer bill is disposed of. The bill is commonly known as the maternity bill, to which some Senators are opposed. It is Senate bill 1039, Order of Business No. 61. I want to move that this bill be made a special order for Tuesday, June 28, at 2 o'clock. That will give ample time for all Senators to understand that the bill will come up.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator contemplate that his motion will now be passed upon by the Senate?

Mr. KENYON. I should like to have it passed upon simply to make the bill a special order. The time I mention is two weeks away.

Mr. KING. The Senator can see that there are very few Senators present. I hope he will not press the motion at this time. I should feel constrained to call for a quorum, and I do not want to do that.

Mr. KENYON. I will not press it, then, under the Senator's suggestion; but I hope the Senator will not object to having it made a special order for that time. I do not know just what the arrangement of the steering committee is; the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], perhaps, can state; but I had understood that the coal bill was to come up next. Then, I think, it is expected that the maternity bill will follow.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the steering committee has not acted on the matter; but it was generally understood that the coal bill would be taken up next, and that the maternity bill would follow.

Mr. KENYON. I am in this situation: I have been pretty constantly in attendance here, but unfortunately for me the maternity bill apparently is coming up just at the one time when I have to be away during the session, and that is why I should like to have it made a special order.

Mr. KING. I think we can assure the Senator that we will not press it in his absence.

Mr. KENYON. I know the Senator from Utah will not, but I thought we might agree to a special order in the matter. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that I was trying to see if I could not arrange for a special order under which the maternity bill would be taken up two weeks from to-day; but I will wait until another time if the Senator from Utah is going to object. I ask the Senator, however, whether he personally will object to that? Is he not satisfied with that?

Mr. KING. I want to see what measures of importance are upon the calendar and what is in the mind of the steering committee of the Republican Party. There may be other measures upon the calendar of far greater importance than the one to which the Senator is now calling attention.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Massachusetts is the head of the steering committee. I do not know what the program is, but I had understood that this bill was to follow the coal bill.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Kansas has stated the situation. No formal action was taken; but it was understood that the coal bill would follow the packers bill, and that the maternity bill was to follow the coal bill. That was my understanding.

Mr. KENYON. There is no telling how long the coal bill will take, but I assume that it will not take all of next week.

Mr. LODGE. I shall be glad to have the bill go over, as the Senator requests.

Mr. KENYON. I do not like to ask accommodation for myself, but I understand that several Senators are to be away next week who would like to be present when the maternity bill is brought up.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, several days ago I offered a resolution (S. Res. 83) relating to the Shipping Board. I asked that it lie on the table, because I hoped that at the succeeding session, or within a day or two, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], might consent to its being considered and passed.

I have had some conversation with that Senator, and under all the circumstances I am going to ask that the resolution be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Commerce. I sincerely hope that the committee will give the resolution immediate consideration. Notwithstanding the fact that a new Shipping Board has been appointed, I think the information called for here is very important, and I hope the committee will give the resolution prompt consideration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as I stated to the Senator, I shall take up the matter. The main thing I want to ascertain is about what time it will take to prepare the information, what the probable expense will be, and so forth, to see just what action would be justified under the circumstances. I assure the Senator that the matter will be taken up promptly.

Mr. KING. I am glad to know, if the public press is to be believed, that a new policy is to be adopted with reference to the Shipping Board; and I will suggest to the Senator, if he will pardon me for one moment, that I think the policy of the board in the allocation of ships has been most reprehensible. I think in violation of law they have refused to charter ships when they should have done so. They have discriminated in their allocations, and favorites have received a large number of ships.

Men who would have bought, my information is, have been denied an opportunity to purchase. Men who would have chartered have been denied the opportunity to charter, and allocations have been made which have involved the Government in millions of dollars of expense. Under those allocations, the persons or the corporations receiving them did not incur a single dollar's risk. They received a large percentage for operation; and, of course, the Government, in the language of the street, was holding the sack, and was compelled to meet all of the losses—and they were stupendous—that were incurred in the operation.

The policy is bad; it is in violation of law; and I sincerely hope that President Harding and the new board will pursue a policy that will avoid these tremendous losses and will, if possible, save the merchant marine. The policy we are adopting now will destroy it, as well as incur additional obligations which the taxpayers will have to pay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McCormick	Simmons
Brandegee	Harris	McCumber	Smith
Broussard	Harrison	McKellar	Smoot
Bursum	Heflin	McLean	Sutherland
Calder	Hitchcock	McNary	Trammell
Cameron	Johnson	Myers	Underwood
Capper	Jones, Wash.	New	Wadsworth
Caraway	Kendrick	Nicholson	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Kenyon	Norris	Warren
Dial	Keyes	Oddie	Watson, Ga.
Dillingham	King	Overman	Watson, Ind.
Ernst	Ladd	Phipps	Wolcott
Fernald	La Follette	Pittman
Fletcher	Lenroot	Poindexter
Gerry	Lodge	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss the pending bill, but, as I said two hours ago, we were yesterday deprived of Calendar Monday. I repeat that it seemed to me at that time ungracious and almost impolite to interfere with the debate that was going on upon various matters which Senators deemed important, but we were deprived of Calendar Monday, and unless some Senator wishes to discuss this bill, why could we not now take up the calendar for unobjected bills and run through it?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator whether he can give us any assurance that every Monday we will not have the same kind of a speech during the morning hour?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not make threats; they are of no utility and are usually a breach of manners; but I feel that hereafter it will be my duty to insist, as I probably should have done yesterday, on the consideration of the calendar on Monday. Monday is set apart for the calendar, and it ought to be observed; so if I feel next Monday as I felt all day yesterday and feel to-day, we will have a calendar call next Monday.

Mr. SMOOT. About an hour and a half of the time this morning has been taken up in a discussion that may have pleased some, but that is certainly not enlightening to the country.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire that my party, here and elsewhere, should reap, and I am going to assist it to reap, every fair partisan advantage that we honorably can reap. I serve notice that every fair advantage we can take of the Republican Party we are going to take. It is our duty to do it, and we ought to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. Nobody objects to that.

Mr. ASHURST. I believe, however, that the best way for the Democratic Party to keep the good opinion and the esteem of the people is to do the people's business. You know, Mr. President, I have really made a success of life by being diligent, by taking care of affairs committed to my keeping—the people's affairs and my own affairs. I believe that if the Democratic Party will press forward with high courage, and assist the Republican Party in trying to pass any bills that mean the good of the country, and defeat, or try to defeat, bills that are not for the common good, our party need not worry about the elections, for we will win without serious difficulty.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, under the unanimous-consent agreement I would feel in honor bound to object to taking up anything else as long as anyone desires to speak on the packer bill. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is here, ready to speak on the bill, and I would necessarily have to object.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am entirely willing that the calendar shall be taken up.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not willing that that shall be done, if the Senator from New York can go on now, because there will come a time when there will be several Senators who will want to go on, and they can not all get the opportunity.

Mr. ASHURST. I withdraw the request, then, if there be any Senator who wants to discuss this bill, or any other bill. But let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that he must remember that we were deprived of Calendar Monday yesterday.

Mr. NORRIS. I recognize that, and if there were no one here ready to talk on the packer bill I would not object, but I feel it to be my duty to keep anything else from coming before the Senate as long as this bill is before the Senate, if there is anyone ready to speak. If there is not, I will yield to the Senator very gladly.

Mr. ASHURST. I suppose the Chair will construe the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska as an objection; so, of course, that will prevent a consideration of the calendar at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on yesterday, just before the close of the session, I made a few observations upon one of the details of the bill. To-day I want to make some other observations, directed entirely to the practical operation of the proposed statute, not to the court procedure, or the methods of appeal, which I do not feel competent to discuss as ably as many other Senators.

Ever since this legislation was first brought up in the Committee on Agriculture, and during all of the discussions which have taken place in the committee, and upon a former occasion upon the floor of the Senate itself, one thing has caused me a good deal of concern, and that is—and I say it with all kindness for the authors of the legislation—that there is apparently so little conception in their minds of the infinite ramifications of the proposed law.

We have fallen into the habit of discussing this bill as if it were to apply only to the five big packers, and there has been a good deal of vitriol used—I am not saying whether rightly or wrongly—in the observations made concerning their methods of doing business, and I think it is fair to say that the minds of most Senators have been running to the inquiry, What effect will this have upon the five large packers?

That part of the bill does not disturb me very much, and it never has, because I think when all is said and done and the Government undertakes regulation of the packing business, the big packers are the ones who will be best able to take care of themselves.

I have in mind, however, the ramifications of this act, not only to the so-called small packers but to thousands and thousands of people engaged in one phase or another of the live-stock industry.

This bill is entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock and live-stock products." If it does that—and it certainly is intended that it shall do it—it will affect, directly or indirectly, every person concerned in and connected with the industry, and if we view the industry as a unit, we will find it is the largest industry in the United States. More people are engaged in it, more people are interested in it, more people are connected with it, I am quite sure, than with any other industry you can select; and they are people in every walk of life.

So, since the bill has been under discussion, I have paid especial attention to the definitions, for they are most important.

For instance, take the term "packer," as defined on page 30, line 17. It is defined as follows:

> The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce, or of marketing live-stock products as a subsidiary of or an adjunct to any such slaughtering or preparing business.

That definition of the term "packer" should be taken and considered in connection with the definition of the term "live-stock products," which is found on line 7 of the same page, as follows:

> The term "live-stock products" means all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived from live stock and owned or controlled by a packer.

The discussions in the committee very clearly brought out the fact that the authors of the bill intend by this bill, and under these two definitions, to have these regulatory provisions apply to the packer as we know him, as he is generally considered; that is, a large concern engaged in purchasing animals, slaughtering them, selling the food products, and processing the by-products to a greater or less degree. That, I think it is fair to say, is the conception of the authors.

But I venture to state the definition goes infinitely beyond that. It may be somewhat of a surprise to Members of the Senate to hear me or any other person make the assertion that this will apply to a very large proportion of the retail butchers of the country. The retail butcher in many, many instances slaughters animals for himself. Go into the ordinary country village, of which there are thousands in the United States, and you will find that while the retail butcher customarily obtains a part of his beef from the refrigerator car, which visits the town about once a week, he also purchases from time to time live animals from the farmers in the vicinity. Particularly is that so with respect to calves. He will buy veal calves from the farmers in the vicinity; he will buy fat cows; he will buy young fat heifers; he will buy lambs and hogs, slaughter them himself, and sell the meat in the community. Up to that point he is not engaged in interstate commerce.

But the hides which are taken from those animals which he slaughters and the offal and the bones which are taken from those animals he sells to agents who travel the country picking up hides for tanneries, picking up bones for fertilizer manufacturers, and other by-products for other manufacturers; and he sells those by-products to these other people, and they move in interstate commerce. He thereupon becomes a packer under the terms of this bill as I read it. He can be numbered by the thousands. I do not believe the authors of this bill meant to include them; at least I have difficulty in believing it.

I urged these things upon the Committee on Agriculture, and am compelled to confess that my views were overwhelmingly outvoted. I offered an amendment in the committee itself which, I believe, if adopted, will confine the operation of this law to those concerns which the authors of the bill have said all along were the only ones they want to reach; that is, the packer in the ordinarily accepted sense of that term.

The amendment which I offered in the committee I offered yesterday and asked to have printed. To my mind it is vital. It would go in on line 9, page 30. It would strike out the words "and owned or controlled by a packer," and substitute the words "and used for food," so that the definition of "live-stock products" would read.

> The term "live-stock products" means all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived from live stock and used for food.

That would regulate the big packers in everything they do in the slaughter of animals and distribution and sale of food derived from the animals. It is true it would not regulate them in the manufacture of glue. Why we should regulate the manufacture of glue I do not know.

It would not regulate them in the manufacture of brushes, the bristles of which are a by-product of the slaughtered hog.

It would not regulate them, it is true, in the manufacture of pepsin, which is an important by-product derived from the slaughter of animals.

I have never heard of any grave complaint, arising from any source, concerning the methods of the manufacture, distribution, and sale of glue, pepsin, brushes, or buttons, which are made from bones, and various other things.

It can not be denied there has been complaint from various sources, which I think myself has been very much exaggerated, relating to the operations of the packer, as we know him, in the ordinarily accepted sense of the term, in the handling of meat food products and in the purchase of animals from which those food products are derived.

If the definition of "live-stock products," together with the definition of "packer"—and they must always be linked together—remain as they are in the bill to-day, this bill is going very far beyond the real intentions of its authors. It will affect not only the big packer, but it will affect, I believe, the overwhelming majority of retail butchers.

The bill, besides that, of course, affects the commission men in the stockyards. The commission man acts as the agent of the owner of the cattle who desires to sell them.

When you regulate the agent, you are regulating the owner. It is inevitable. By indirection, at least, you are going to regulate the entire process of conducting the live-stock business, from the buying of the animal to the table, the biggest undertaking of its kind, I think, ever proposed in time of peace, so large that it will inevitably break down of its own weight unless the Government is willing to appropriate millions and millions of dollars in following up and regulating all these transactions, calling for reports from all these little people—I use that phrase as descriptive of these men engaged in the business upon a very small scale as contrasted with those who are engaged in it upon a very large scale—getting reports from them, access to all their records, all their books and all their papers, issuing regulations as to what they may do and what they may not do, when they shall do it and when they may not do it. The thing has infinite ramifications, and from the very beginning of the discussions which have been going on now for two or three years it is that element of the situation that has alarmed me.

I spoke yesterday of the use of the word "trader" in the bill. That is found in the definition of the term "operator," as follows:

> The term "operator" means any person engaged in the business of conducting or operating a stockyard in which live stock is handled in commerce and any trader or commission man or other person performing services wholly or partly in commerce.

And so forth.

It is very clear that the definition, so far as it applies to the trader, does not reflect the wishes of the author of the bill. He and all the authors and backers of the bill desire the trader regulated. As the paragraph reads, only the trader who performs a service can be regulated and no traders perform service.

But let us look into the matter of regulating the trader and see where we go.

There is no definition here of the word "trader." Any man who buys and sells cattle is a trader. If he does it in connection with a stockyard or at a stockyard, he will be regulated, according to the wishes of the author of the bill. Now, let us see where this goes and make up our minds, if we can, whether we want to follow so far along that road.

Every Senator who has lived in the country at all and has come in contact with the agricultural business and the live-stock business knows that through every agricultural section there travel men who go to the farmers and purchase direct from them sheep and cattle and hogs. They pay them cash; make it a business to buy the live stock outright and themselves ship it to market, generally—in fact, in practically all cases—accompanying the live stock to market. They then sell the animals which they have purchased from the farmers. They do it in or in connection with the stockyards. They trade in cattle. They trade in sheep. They trade in hogs.

They are traders; and yet, under the provisions of the bill, it is intended that the Secretary of Agriculture is to regulate every transaction they enter into, follow them out into the country, all over this broad land, and insist that they keep certain sorts of records, keep their books in a certain fashion, or at least call upon them for reports from time to time. All their methods and practices are to be subject to the regulation of the Secretary of Agriculture or the Federal live-stock commissioner merely because they happen to be in the business of buying and selling live stock. They can be numbered by the thousands. I brought this matter up in the committee, but so anxious were the authors of the bill to include traders as they know them in the yards that they were unable to agree upon any modification of the term or the word "trader" or any definition to be given to it.

This matter is of immense importance. I know a good many of these men. They are entirely reputable persons. None ever become millionaires. They do exactly the same kind of business as those men who go about the country buying vegetables and shipping them to the city markets to be sold, buying eggs and shipping or bringing them into Washington on trucks and selling them in the municipal market, buying wheat or buying anything that is grown that has any value. Their influence in the live-stock industry is tremendous when taken in the aggregate. They do a great good to the industry. Their willingness to buy the animals on the farm and ship at their own risk to the markets and there sell them relieves thousands of farmers from the necessity of taking that risk.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not understand that a man who buys cattle from a farmer and ships to market is a trader within the view of the bill at all, because in order to be a trader he must handle the live stock in commerce, and "in commerce" has been defined to be after they become a part of the process of marketing in interstate trade.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He does handle the live stock in commerce. He himself ships it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Not within the definition of the word "trader," if the Senator will read it in that connection. It says:

> And any trader or commission man or other person performing services wholly or partly in commerce with respect to live stock handled in or in connection with a stockyard.

He is simply shipping to some one who handles it there, which does not make him a trader at all, as I understand the definition. It is the man who stays in the stockyards and who buys from people who ship live stock there and whose transaction is wholly within the stockyard who is the trader; but the man who goes out and buys from the farmer and ships to the stockyards is not a trader within the definition of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I remind the Senator there is no definition of the word "trader"?

Mr. CARAWAY. "Trader" is defined by the very restriction placed upon it. It is the man who performs services in commerce wholly or in part in or in connection with a stockyard.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With respect to live stock handled in or in connection with the stockyard always?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes. That defines a trader. It does not mean a man who buys a cow from his neighbor and ships it to market, but a man who has connection with the stockyard and who buys and sells there. It defines the man.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean "buy and sell" or "buy or sell"?

Mr. CARAWAY. I think if he did either in connection with the stockyard he would be a trader, but not that he is a shipper of cattle to the market and a seller on the market, but is somebody who is a trader in the stockyards.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, this man operates in the stockyards every week.

Mr. CARAWAY. It never did occur to me before, and it does not yet occur to me that that is so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know that it did not occur to some Senators, but it has been occurring to me all along. We have to be very careful in these definitions or we go much further than we really intend to.

Mr. CARAWAY. What does it mean by saying this, if the Senator will pardon me further:

> Any trader or commission man—

It may be one and the same person—> or other person performing services wholly or partly in commerce with respect to live stock handled in or in connection with the stockyard.

The term "in commerce" has been defined in the bill itself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Interstate commerce. I think it means just what I recited. I can not see any other meaning to it.

Now, Mr. President, that paragraph of the bill, as I am informed, does not yet meet the approval certainly of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. I pointed out yesterday, as I did a moment ago very briefly, that traders do not perform services in the accepted sense of the term.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. I wish to say to the Senator from New York that that definition could be easily corrected by an amendment to read:

Whose principal business shall be buying and selling live stock within the stockyards.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator a question? He has a copy of the bill before him. My amendment is to strike out the words "trader or," so that it would then read:

And any commission man or other person performing services wholly or partly in commerce with respect to live stock handled in or in connection with a stockyard.

Does not the phrase "other person" bring in the very people whom the Senator thinks should be brought in?

Mr. KENDRICK. It is possible that it might, but it would seem in one way to eliminate them altogether. Undoubtedly, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] pointed out yesterday, they are a very essential factor in the handling of trade through these yards and should be included. As I stated yesterday, they consider themselves to be a part of the stockyard agencies.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; they do. I do not deny that.

Mr. KENDRICK. What could be the objection, if I may ask, to specifying definitely in the way I have suggested?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator wishes to add another definition to the bill, defining the term "trader," then, of course, there is no objection from my standpoint. I think it is unnecessary, because if my amendment were adopted it would read:

And any commission man or other person performing services.

If we attempt a definition of the word "trader," we are going to get into trouble.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question? If he is correct in his statement that a trader performs no service, and no one is included except a person who performs some service, then the term "trader," as I understand it, is out of the bill, anyway?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; the trader I just described, anyway.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then there would be no occasion to amend it, because he is not involved. The Senator says he performs no service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I said a moment ago, if the Senator will permit me, that the Senator from Wyoming had told me in private conversation, after our little colloquy of last night, that he did want to include the traders, whether they performed services or not, as I understand it. If they are not performing services, I do not see why anyone should wish to regulate them. Why does the fact that a man buys and sells cattle for himself on his own account make him subject to Government regulation? Why not regulate any man who buys and sells anything anywhere? What is the idea of regulating you or me because we happen to buy and sell live stock? So long as we do it on our own account, not representing anybody else, with no responsibility of a fiduciary character, why should Uncle Sam regulate us? If the man who buys and sells cattle on his own account ought to be regulated, why not the man who buys and sells vegetables in a market on his own account? That is the point I can not see.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield further to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. If we are to regulate the stockyards and the transactions that occur there, and thereby have same manner of control over the food that passes through the packers' hands, and if we are to have some free agent there, why can not all the rest of them withdraw from that particular line and he be absolutely the master of the situation and apportion the live stock to the packers as he sees fit?

Why should he not become in fact the purchasing agent of every packer in America and control the industry by apportioning the product? If it is proposed to leave him an absolutely free agent to buy and sell as he pleases in the stockyards and to regulate everybody else, he will then become the one man who has the whole industry in the hollow of his hand, will he not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. From my knowledge of the business, I can not conceive of any one man having the industry in the hollow of his hand. That is a stretching of my imagination to the breaking point. I do not understand that the authors and friends of the pending bill insist that because a man buys cattle for himself, whether he be a packer or a retail butcher in the country or a so-called trader in the yards, he should for that reason be regulated.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator will pardon me, there is no effort to regulate the retail butcher.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is proposed to be done under this bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. If the Senator will read the bill, he will find that the only man who is proposed to be regulated by it is the man who prepares the products of live stock for commerce, and commerce is defined to be interstate shipping and selling.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But does not the retail butcher prepare live-stock products for commerce?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, he sells it locally; but that is not commerce, for commerce is defined in the bill to be the selling interstate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but do not the hides which he collects from the animals go into interstate commerce?

Mr. CARAWAY. He does not become a dealer engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But he sells them in interstate commerce.

Mr. CARAWAY. But he is not a packer, even though he sells hides, because the hide is a by-product, and the by-product is not proposed to be controlled by this bill further than that it is the property of the packer. Because a butcher sells hides in interstate commerce does not make him a packer. He must be a packer before he can be regulated, and a packer must be a man who prepares meats for interstate shipment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill reads:

The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is necessary to go back and consider the definition of the word "commerce."

Mr. WADSWORTH. The commerce must be interstate commerce; that is all. If the by-products which are shipped and sold by the butcher pass into interstate commerce as the result of that sale that butcher is a packer.

Mr. CARAWAY. The by-products to be controlled at all must be the property of a packer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. But the by-product is regulated only when it is the property of a packer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The retail butcher is a packer because he is a "person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce, or of marketing live-stock products" as a business. If the word "and" were substituted for the word "or" it would be very different.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to suggest that if this bill, as the Senator from New York contends, regulates the retail butcher, it would be a matter of a good deal of joy to the former Senator from Illinois, Mr. Sherman, who made a very long and loud speech here against the bill. One of the contentions he made was that it did not touch the retailers and that we were afraid to regulate them. There seems to be some difference of opinion as to what the provisions of the bill really mean.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have been discussing the bill as it is printed; and the definitions as printed in the bill, according to my understanding of the English language, certainly make the retail butcher, if he sells anything out of his shop into interstate commerce, a packer.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if there were really some way of getting after the retail butcher I should be very glad, and if this bill does do that it is a stronger bill than I had supposed.

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Utah was also one who complained that the proposed legislation had nothing to do with the retailers and that the retailers were the real profiteers.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it has been shown as to the retailers that in many cases their profits are more than the profits from raising the cattle, the commission for selling them, the railroad transportation, and all that the packer makes, including all the expense of slaughtering and every other incidental expense from the time that the calf is born until it reaches his slaughterhouse. It has been shown that the retailer makes more profit in many cases, so far as the ultimate consumer is concerned, than do all others combined who are connected with the production and handling of meat.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, therefore, should not the retailer be regulated if we are going to regulate anybody, if the regulation proposed in the bill is designed to make meat and meat products cheaper to the consumer? We may pass all the packer bills we please, but if we allow the retailer to go on in the way he is now going, meat will never be any cheaper unless the retailer is regulated.

I have here in my desk now my accounts of the prices which were charged me for meat back in 1912, 1913, 1914, and 1915, and they show that to-day the retail price of meat in some cases is almost double what it was in those years. It is as to the retailer that regulation is needed, if the general public are going to get any benefit.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course I can agree with the observations which the Senator from Utah has made relative to the profit of the retailers and of the packers themselves, as we ordinarily understand the term; but I am interested to know whether the Senator from Utah and the Senate as a body really intend to regulate all the retail butchers in the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. I can say to the Senator that, so far as the Senator from Utah is concerned, he does not expect to do that, nor is he in favor of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Utah does not expect that?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator does not expect that the retailers shall be regulated, and he does not think Congress would pass a law to that effect.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I merely drew attention to the situation.

Mr. KENYON. But the Senator from Utah has just stated that he thinks they ought to be regulated. I do not claim that the pending bill does regulate them; I do not think it does; but if the retailers ought to be regulated, why does the Senator object to regulating them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, if we can think of anyone else to regulate, let us put them in.

Mr. KENYON. If we could regulate a few profiteers it would be a good thing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let us regulate all the grocers, all of the dry-goods people, and all of the butchers.

Mr. SMOOT. If we are going into the regulation of business, there is not any question that there are industries in this country which need regulation a great deal more than does the packing business, because I say now—and I can demonstrate it beyond the question of a doubt—there is not an industry in all the world that sells on a smaller margin of profit on turnovers—that is, on every sale—than the packers. It is a marvelous business in its efficiency. There is no other business in all the world that is more efficient. I do not for the life of me see how it is possible for them to conduct their business and only get the small profit that they do out of their turnovers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The theme of my discussion thus far has been the ramifications of the industry; that is all. I am not discussing the practicability of regulating the so-called big packer. We all know what we mean by the "big packer"; but I find in discussing this matter with Members of the Senate that they do not know anything about the ramifications of the live-stock industry. I have heard utterances and discussions upon the floor and in committee also that illustrate—and it is not at all strange, for very few Senators are familiar with the industry—an entire misunderstanding, a lack of comprehension of what the live-stock industry is, how it is carried on, and what its ramifications are. It is a very easy thing for a Senator or a group of Senators to sit down with perfect confidence, draft a bill, put in definitions, and say, "That is what we are going to do to the big packer"; but they will wake up later on and find that they have done it to hundreds of thousands of people who are not big packers at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. One of the difficult things, it seems to me, about the bill—and I am not sure that it can be overcome—is that it proposes a plan, as is contended, to advance the interests of the producer and increase the price of the producer's product and at the same time advance the interests of the consumer and lower his price. That is a very hard problem, it seems to me, to solve in the same bill—to help the producer and to help the consumer at the same time.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] mentioned conditions as to retail prices which indicate that retail prices are not very much affected by the price which the retail merchant has to pay to the wholesaler for meat; in other words, the packer's profit seemingly on the animal when he sells to the butcher does not enter very largely into the determination of the amount which the consumer must pay to the butcher for the meat. There undoubtedly is one of the great problems—the profits that appear to be made, the toll taken by the handler of the animal between the time of slaughter and the time when it reaches the consumer. I am not sure that this bill will accomplish very much in that regard; but, at the other end of the problem, will it enhance the price or broaden the market of the producer of the animal? That is the main question, it seems to me, and whether that result can be accomplished under this proposed legislation is quite important for us to consider.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have no confidence that any law passed by Congress, no matter how carefully contrived, will raise the price of live cattle and reduce the price of meat at one and the same time. So far as relative prices are concerned, the relation of the live-cattle price to the dressed-meat price, I do not think this bill will have the slightest effect upon them. I think it is going to result in increasing the cost of doing business. I think it will rob the business of certain elements of elasticity and of promptness in responding to ever-changing economic conditions under the law of supply and demand, for wherever the Government lays hand upon a business and imposes regulations it takes away from the thousands and thousands of persons engaged in that business, to a certain degree at least, liberty of action.

It tends to put a strait-jacket upon them, to confine them to certain defined, well marked-out channels, from which they are not allowed to depart, save as the Government upon appeal or upon hearing will permit. We tried all of these things during the war. We regulated from top to bottom businesses which have always been considered private, and I think that the great majority of those engaged in any of those businesses rejoiced when the Government's hand was taken off.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. I wish to ask the Senator from New York, does he recall the fact that for some months during the war the stockyards were under Government supervision?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I knew the commission men were.

Mr. KENDRICK. The entire stockyards were under the supervision of the Bureau of Markets. I desire to ask the Senator, further, if he does not know that during that time there was conducted in the yards the largest volume of business that had ever been transacted during their whole history; and, furthermore, that in some cases the commission men and in one or two instances one of the great packers, highly commended the work of the Government officials in their supervision of the yards?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly the Senator would not say that the heavy runs of live stock to the stockyards during the war were due to Government regulation. Were they not due to the fact that cattle reached 18 cents a pound on the hoof?

Mr. KENDRICK. That feature of the situation, I think, is in a way important. It is a fact that has to do with the statement that the Senator made as to the interferences of this so-called strait-jacket system. No difficulty whatsoever was developed, and no inconvenience that I ever heard of, in connection with the supervision of the Government during that time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly the Senator remembers the bitter complaints made by the live-stock producers as to the effects of Government regulation. Does the Senator remember the bitter complaints made by the hog producers? They swarmed here to Washington to get the Government regulations changed. They abused Mr. Hoover in most emphatic language.

Mr. KENDRICK. But that had nothing whatever to do, as I understand, with the operations of the Government in the stockyards. It had to do with regulations instituted by the Commissioner of Food Products, and had more to do with the prices that he placed upon hogs and hog products, as I understand. It did not have to do with anything supervisory, in the way of supervisory management. The two things are entirely separate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think they run together. Government regulation, in the long run, reaches price fixing. It always has, and it always will. This bill does not provide price fixing; but there are many ways of skinning the cat, and I have never known the Government to step in and regulate a business, and continue that regulation for any length of time, but that finally, by direction or indirection, it fixed the prices of the articles that were traded in, or it influenced the prices so strongly and so effectively, by devious and roundabout methods, that it was the equivalent of fixing the prices. There was nothing in the Lever Food Control Act which authorized the Food Administration to fix prices, but they fixed them just the same.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York further yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KENDRICK. Does the Senator believe that there is any intention to put anything in this bill that is calculated to interfere with the management of the business in the yards further than to insure fair dealing between the different agencies in the yards and the producers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, Mr. President; I think it can go to any lengths under the language of the bill. I know the intention of the Senator from Wyoming, and I do not disagree with that intention, except in two or three details of this bill, which he and I have often talked about, notably, these definitions and Title V, which I am going to discuss in a few moments; but under the bill as written all the methods and practices of everybody engaged in the business are subject to the supervision, regulation, and control of the Federal live-stock commissioner. Now, he may state that such and such a method of practice or device of these people should be changed because he thinks it will have a beneficial effect upon somebody else to have it changed. There is no limit to the changes he can bring about, as long as he does not infringe the Constitution of the United States; and I think there is no limit to his power in the matter of regulation save the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. KENDRICK. Does not the Senator believe that the definitions confining the operations of this law to the stockyards themselves limit the ramifications to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, they could be broader.

Mr. KENDRICK. It would be physically impossible or impossible in any other way to go out and assume that a butcher out in the country has anything to do with the stockyards; and for that reason I think the Senator's reasoning is, I will say, far-fetched when he goes out and includes the butcher in the country, who probably in a lifetime never goes to the stockyards.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but he does not have to go to the stockyards to become a packer under this bill. He may never leave home.

Mr. KENDRICK. As I read the bill, he will have to operate within stockyards.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not a packer. The bill provides that—

> The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce.

It does not say anything about doing it in or near a stockyard.

Mr. KENDRICK. The term "packer" is connected with the definition of stockyards, and a limitation is placed on that.

Mr. WADSWORTH (reading):

> The term "stockyard" means any place, establishment, or facility maintained and conducted at or in connection with a public market and consisting of pens or other inclosures—

And so forth.

But a packer does not have to operate in or near a stockyard in order to be a packer under this bill, and there are lots of packing companies whose plants are far removed from stockyards, hundreds of miles from a stockyard. I think the Senator will have to admit that I am right on that, at least.

Mr. KENDRICK. In any event, there is no difficulty about changing any of the definitions that only provide for limitations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator remembers what difficulty I have experienced in changing definitions in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes; and I recall that the Senator from New York and the Senator from Wyoming were in accord as to those descriptions.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We were.

Mr. KENDRICK. There was an essential point, as I saw it, in connection with these by-products that would prohibit the following up of a by-product to determine whether or not it was delivered to the second owner in good faith at the market price; and I insisted then, and insist now, that beyond that we are not vitally concerned in legislation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; the Senator and I have always agreed upon that, but unfortunately the bill does not follow our desires in that respect. It goes much further.

Now, I am going to mention the very thing which the Senator has just mentioned. My amendment, which would strike out, on line 9, the words "and owned or controlled by a packer," and substitute the words "and used for food," has been attacked by other members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry because, as they say, it would leave the big packers—and their minds always run to the big packers—free to juggle their accounts and financial statements relating to the disposition of their by-products. The suspicion seems to exist that the big packer is hiding a large portion of his profits by not taking the public into his confidence as to how much he makes on his by-products, such as the buttons and the glue and the hides and the bones, and various other things.

The advocates of the bill have always insisted that those things should be regulated, just as the slaughtering of the animals and the disposition of the food products are regulated. With that I can not agree, and I see no necessity for it at all, in view of the presence in the bill of section 16.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] said just a moment ago that his only interest in this matter was that the Secretary of Agriculture should know the price at which the packer sold his raw hides, for example, to his own tannery; what he charged his tanning business for the hide, which is the by-product of his slaughtering business, and that further than that he did not care what happened.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield further to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield again.

Mr. KENDRICK. I am sure the Senator did not mean to misquote me. My statement was, in effect, that the framers of this law, or the public, or the Secretary of Agriculture, whoever it may be, is concerned only in knowing that the value of the by-products was fixed according to the market value as it was transferred from the packer to the operators of the by-product companies.

For instance, suppose a packer did own a factory which bought the by-products; then, if it could be demonstrated clearly that he paid the market price for the products, so far as I can see, the interest of the public in that account is closed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think so myself, but the bill goes much further. The bill seeks to regulate the manufacture of the hide into leather, and of the bones into fertilizer. All the methods and practices, all the steps taken, in this purely manufacturing business, are subject to the orders of the Secretary of Agriculture, under the terms of this bill. If a packer, after slaughtering sheep, takes the wool from their backs and transfers that wool to a woolen mill in which he or the stockholders of his plant have a controlling interest, the Secretary of Agriculture thereupon assumes jurisdiction over the woolen mill in all its methods and practices in making cloth. That is what the bill seeks to do.

My amendment, changing the definition of "live-stock products," would prevent that, and, in my humble judgment, would leave the bill in just the shape which the Senator from Wyoming would like to have it, in bringing out the truth about the transfer of these items on the books of the packer himself to his subsidiary concern engaged in the manufacturing business. I think that is accomplished through the agency of section 16.

Mr. KENDRICK. As I view it, the only question as to the definition the Senator from New York wants to place in the bill is as to how it would affect products other than food products.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KENDRICK. If the limit were placed as we have suggested, then it ought to be made certain and clear that there could be no question about what that price, which included the transfer, meant.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I was about to say that section 16 gives to the Secretary of Agriculture the very powers that the Senator from Wyoming thinks he should have. Section 16 reads:

> Every operator and packer engaged in commerce shall keep such records and statements of account, and make such reports or returns, verified under oath or otherwise, as the commissioner shall require, as will fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in its business.

Let us take, for example, a packer who slaughters an animal and takes the hide off. He owns or controls a tannery. He transfers that hide from the account of his slaughtering establishment to the account of his tanning establishment. He must do it at some figure shown in the accounts of his slaughtering establishment. If the raw hide is worth, we will say, 8 cents on the market the day that he transfers it to his tanning subsidiary, the books of his slaughtering concern will show a credit to his slaughtering concern for that hide at the rate of 8 cents a pound, if he is honest in crediting his slaughtering establishment with the real value of the hide.

The books of the slaughtering concern are open, under section 16, to the examination of the Secretary of Agriculture, and the packer must tell the Secretary of Agriculture all about the charges, credits, and debits carried on those books. That hide will show on the books of the slaughtering concern.

UMI

Another portion of the bill forbids the packer from indulging in any device calculated to deceive. You have him right there. He can not make a fraudulent entry on his slaughterhouse books and get away with it, because it is forbidden as a deceptive practice by the bill which the Senator wants passed. All the facts in the case as to this bookkeeping transfer are at the disposal of the Secretary of Agriculture under section 16, and he can prevent the deceptive practices of these transfers of by-products to subsidiary concerns, against which the Senator complains, and still avoid the regulation of the manufacture of fertilizer or of leather or shoes or woolen cloth or glue or buttons or brushes.

I have contended all along that with section 16 in the bill, which gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to prescribe the way the books shall be kept, and with that other provision in the bill, which forbids deceptive practices, the packer can not deceive; he has to make honest entries in his books in relation to the transfer of these by-products to subsidiary corporations. The Senator has not agreed with me in that.

Mr. KENDRICK. It is quite possible, Mr. President, from my viewpoint, that all the Senator from New York has said is true; and yet a question might arise that would require further information than would be provided under the definition he proposes, and it would develop under the conditions brought about by the packers themselves through the volume of the business that they handled. For the large majority of the hides that have been referred to as in their hands they might fix the general market price, and that in turn would fix the price of this by-product transferred to their subsidiary corporations or companies. Therein lies the only reason, from my viewpoint, that can be found for extending this authority to examine beyond the confines of the packing houses themselves.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That leads the Senator to another conclusion. He has given the inference that the packers, through the handling of such a large number of hides, can control the market price of hides, and, that being so, that they can still carry on these deceptive practices unless the definition of the term "live-stock products" remains as it is, and the Secretary of Agriculture remains in possession of jurisdiction over the tannery itself. If that is the reason, the only cure for it is to fix the price of hides.

Mr. KENDRICK. Not at all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is where the Senator's argument leads him. He assumes that the packers control the market price of hides, and that through that control they can indulge in these deceptive practices, unless the Government takes control over the tannery itself.

Mr. KENDRICK. It would not be necessary, Mr. President, in my judgment, for the Government to control the tannery, but it might be necessary for them to follow the product one remove further, to determine as to whether or not the packers did fix the market prices of hides, as well as naming the price of their own products, which they transferred on their books to these subsidiary companies. The information derived by the investigation of one other company might develop information which could not be had under the system that is provided here. I am not insisting that that definition ought to be as broad as that. I believe, however, that that kind of an emergency might arise.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not conceive, Mr. President, how such a thing could happen under the amendment offered by me.

May I remind the Senator that the amendment I have offered at least has this virtue, that it makes it perfectly clear that the retail butcher does not fall within the regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, because it would be confined to those persons who are manufacturing or producing live-stock products used for food in interstate commerce?

Mr. KENDRICK. May I ask the Senator from New York if he will have that amendment read?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall. It is on page 3, line 9, to strike out the words "and owned or controlled by a packer" and to substitute the words "and used for food." So that the term "live-stock products" will be defined to mean "all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived from live stock and used for food."

Mr. KENDRICK. That was the amendment considered in the subcommittee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is; the subcommittee adopted it, and the full committee turned it down later on.

Mr. President, I had not expected to take so much time, and yet there are two other features of the bill I wanted to discuss, and I know I am not going to get the agreement of the friends of the measure, at least in the observations I shall make upon the first one.

This bill attempts, so far as a statute can do it, to put the stockyards under the regulation of the Federal Government, apparently upon the theory that the Federal Government has the right, under the commerce clause, to regulate stockyards.

What is a stockyard? Does the management of the stockyard buy or sell any animals? No. Does it deal in animals in any way whatsoever? No. What does it do? The management of a stockyard merely erects sheds and pens in which other people's cattle are sheltered, and sells to the owners of those cattle the hay and grain to keep them alive while they are there; that is all.

The stockyard itself is not engaged in interstate commerce at all. It only furnishes facilities which make it possible for other people to engage in interstate commerce. Let us consider the municipal market here in Washington. Farmers out in Maryland and over in Virginia bring vegetables and fruit in their wagons and trucks to that market. The market company or the municipality, as the case may be, furnishes space under cover in which those articles may be sold to other people. The market company furnishes light and, if necessary to keep certain articles from freezing in the wintertime, furnishes heat. It does nothing but furnish the facility for other people to do business.

That is all the stockyard does. The stockyard does not ship any cattle in or out. The owner ships the cattle in and the buyer ships them out. The stockyard company has nothing to do with it. All it does is to put up sheds and pens, put in the watering troughs, put in the bedding to make the animals more comfortable, and furnish the hay and grain to keep them alive while they are there. That is all they do.

Mr. BURSUM. Do they not make a charge for that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course they make a charge for the facilities which they supply, but it is not a charge for any transaction in interstate commerce at all. How anyone can contend that a stockyard company is engaged in interstate commerce and therefore subject to regulation by the Federal Government under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution passes my comprehension.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Supreme Court has held, I believe, that a stockyard is not engaged in interstate commerce. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. KENDRICK. Will the Senator permit me to read the decision of Judge Stafford on that question of stockyards?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. That is one decision, but that is not a decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. KENDRICK. It reads as follows:

> The nature of the business carried on by a stockyards company has been so often considered by the courts, among others by the Supreme Court of the United States, that it is hardly open to question that such companies are engaged to some extent, at least, in interstate commerce, and the defendants, the Armour and Swift groups, so treated the matter in their brief. That the holding of such stock by the packing-house companies in the stockyards company falls within the purview of the antitrust law was apparently the view taken by the defendants when they consented to a decree perpetually enjoining them from continuing to hold such stock, and that now appears to the court to be the correct view.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That decision, I assume, did not go to the Supreme Court, because it has to do with a decree entered into by agreement between certain of the packers and the Attorney General, has it not?

Mr. KENDRICK. I believe so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that stockyards are not engaged in interstate commerce. Looking at it from the common sense viewpoint, what do they do that is interstate commerce?

Mr. KENDRICK. They handle the products that are involved in interstate commerce, as the Senator knows, by the millions of dollars worth every day. They are in reality a necessary link in the movement of those products.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then let us draw an analogy with it. Does the Senator believe that hotels are engaged in interstate commerce?

Mr. KENDRICK. Whether they are or not they ought to be regulated in price.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is scarcely the answer. All the stockyard company does is to provide a hotel for animals. That is all. It provides shelter, food, water, and bedding, the same as hotels do for people, although it has been alleged some of them do not even do that. If the stockyard falls within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government on the ground that stockyards are engaged in interstate commerce, then every hotel in the United States does likewise. What does a hotel do? All it does is to provide food and shelter and a place to rest for people moving between the States. The Willard Hotel here in Washington, if the Senator's contention is correct, is engaged in interstate commerce, because, forsooth, people coming from the State of New York to Washington and crossing State lines rent a room in that hotel.

Mr. KENDRICK. The Senator from New York is quite correct in that view provided he considers people properly defined as products.

Mr. WADSWORTH. People bring clothing with them in their trunks. Is the baggage of a person who comes from the State of New York and stops at the New Willard Hotel, in Washington, interstate commerce? Certainly that baggage passes in interstate commerce. The trunk is taken into a room rented by the traveler in the New Willard Hotel. Does that make the proprietor of the New Willard Hotel an agent in interstate commerce?

Mr. KENDRICK. The Senator understands very well that he is really making fun of the legislation at this point, I think.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I am challenging the right of Congress——

Mr. KENDRICK. He understands very well that nothing moving across State lines is substantially in interstate commerce unless it is moving for the purpose of sale and transfer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well. Traveling salesmen travel from one hotel to another with their trunks full of goods to sell, and in hundreds and in fact in thousands of hotels there is a room set aside by the hotel management in which they can display their goods, and in which they make sales of their goods. Does that thing put the manager or proprietor of the hotel itself into interstate commerce? That is just what happens in the stockyards. I am not making fun of the legislation. I am challenging the right of the Federal Government to regulate a thing which is not engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator contend that the Federal Government would not have a right to regulate a depot of a railroad in interstate commerce?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To regulate depots?

Mr. NORRIS. Would it not be one of the provinces for them to provide that there must be depots and how they must be cared for, and so forth?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. The depot is owned by the railroad and is the property of the railroad and is a part of the machinery used by the railroad in the conduct of interstate commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. Would it be any different if the railroad company rented a building for the depot, as they do in some places?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I think not. It is a part of their system of transportation.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me, if the Senator will permit me to interject a further remark, that a stockyard can be compared to a depot better than to anything else. I will say to the Senator that while the bill does not provide for it, I have always contended that a railroad company ought to own the stockyards, the same as it does its depot.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will be a sorry day for the cattleman if that ever happens.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it would be a good day if we had it right now. It seems to me that is the logical thing. If they ought to own the depot, they ought to own the stockyards.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think a stockyard is analogous to a depot.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that it is a practice of daily occurrence for one stockyard to transfer stock to another stockyard in the country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the stockyard company do it?

Mr. GOODING. Those who are operating in the yard do it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is different.

Mr. GOODING. Men who have agents who have commissions to handle there do it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is different. That is not the stockyard company.

Mr. GOODING. It is a part of the instrumentality that is used in the handling of live stock.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. GOODING. Yes; it must be considered with all the rest of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it is not the same thing at all. It is perfectly true, as the Senator said, that cattle are occasionally shipped from one stockyard to another, but they are not shipped by the stockyard company. They are shipped by their owners. It is the owners who are engaged in interstate commerce and not the stockyard.

Mr. GOODING. It is the commission men who follow the live stock.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, the commission men are different from the stockyard owners.

Mr. GOODING. To some extent. They have rented the stockyards and they have the right to use the yards, so in a sense they are the owners in that respect.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no.

Mr. GOODING. They rent them, they rent their offices, they rent space in the yards, and they handle the live stock there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They rent facilities just as you and I rent a room in a hotel. If we move to another hotel in another city that does not put the hotel itself in the interstate commerce business.

Mr. GOODING. I am not clear as to the point the Senator is trying to make in this matter. Should the stockyards be eliminated from Federal control?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They should.

Mr. GOODING. I know if the Senator had his way he would eliminate the measure entirely.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from New York has a right to his convictions in the matter. I have challenged the right of Congress to regulate a thing which is not engaged in interstate commerce, and which the Supreme Court of the United States has said is not engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. GOODING. It is an instrumentality, however, that must be used in conducting the handling of live stock, and just as essential as the packing house itself to insure an intelligent and proper movement of live stock. However, regardless of all that, it is a part of a great industry of the country which the people believe ought to be regulated.

Mr. KENDRICK. Is it not true, if the Senator will allow a further interruption, that the Supreme Court has rendered a decision that favored the view that it is a public utility?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; a public utility, and that is very different. But the Congress has not the authority under the Constitution to regulate public utilities just because they are public utilities. It has the authority to regulate them only because they are engaged in interstate commerce. The State of Illinois certainly, in my view, unless I am mistaken about the provisions of the constitution of that State, has the right to declare the Chicago stockyards a public utility and to regulate them. The State of Colorado——

Mr. KENDRICK. If they are public utilities in this particular, why do they not become instruments in the movement of interstate commerce?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think that the Constitution goes to the extent of stating that anything that is an instrument used in any way in or as a facility for expediting interstate commerce falls within the regulatory power of the Federal Government. It is the commerce itself.

Mr. KENDRICK. That is exactly the view, as I understand it, expressed in the decision of Judge Stafford, to which I have referred.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know, but Judge Stafford is not the Supreme Court. I have the greatest respect, of course, for the opinion of Judge Stafford, and it takes a good deal of temerity on my part to discuss a legal question, but I think the Senator from Wyoming can not deny that if a stockyard company is subject to the regulatory power of the Federal Government on the ground that it is taking part or is engaged in interstate commerce, then the hotel company is likewise subject to that power. They are on an exact parity. Will any Senator rise in his place in the Senate and contend that we have the right to regulate hotels all over the United States? That is the logical conclusion, and there can be no doubt about it.

Mr. GOODING. Does the Senator say that Congress has not the power to regulate hotels?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do. The owner of a hotel is not engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. GOODING. That is a pretty fine question. There is some question about that, and it is a pretty fine distinction. I am not so sure that the Senator is correct. I know there is a wide difference between the use of a stockyard and the use of a hotel, because all stockyards are rented for one and the same purpose, and that is for the holding and keeping of live stock, and they transfer them from one part of the country to another.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is just what hotels are for.

Mr. GOOODING. Hotels do not transfer from one part of the country to another.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Neither do the stockyards. It is only the owners of the cattle do that.

Mr. GOODING. But the men who rent the stockyards, who rent the space and who transact their business, do it, and that is the same thing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That corresponds exactly to the Senator and myself when we go to a hotel and rent a room.

Mr. GOODING. Not at all. I leave the hotel of my own free will to go wherever I please. I am not shipped over the country by somebody's orders at all.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have not heard the Senator's entire discussion of that question, but I know how he feels about it, as we have talked about it privately. Has the Senator referred to the case of Swift & Co. against the United States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not referred to that case.

Mr. KENYON. In that case, reported in One hundred and ninety-sixth United States, page 375, is a partial discussion of this question I think it is fair to say that in that case the court uses this language:

> When cattle are sent for sale from a place in one State with the expectation that they will end their transit after purchase in another State, and when in effect they do so, with only the interruption necessary to find a purchaser at the stockyards, and when this is a constantly recurring course, it constitutes interstate commerce, and the purchase of the cattle is an incident of such commerce.

The Supreme Court has gone to that extent, holding that the commerce itself is interstate commerce, and that the sale of the cattle in the State to the purchaser is merely an incident of commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no doubt about that, as to the sale of the cattle.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; that is carried on in the stockyards. I grant that it is a very close question whether the stockyard in itself becomes an instrumentality of interstate commerce. The Supreme Court has never squarely decided that question, but they have gone to the extent of declaring that the transactions carried on in the stockyards are interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no doubt about that. I do not deny that.

Mr. KENYON. That is getting pretty close to holding that the stockyards themselves are engaged in interstate commerce because the transactions take place there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I regret very much that I can not cite the decision, but I think that the Senator from Iowa will find that the Supreme Court in another decision clearly held that a stockyard company was not engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. KENYON. I think the cases which the Senator from New York has in mind are what are known as the Hopkins and Anderson cases.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It may be the Hopkins case. I remember that title.

Mr. KENYON. That is found in One hundred and seventy-first United States, pages 578 to 604.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a very long decision, reciting in greatest detail what happens at the stockyards.

Mr. KENYON. That case related to the Kansas City Live Stock Exchange, and the court held there that such exchanges were not engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That the exchanges were not engaged in interstate commerce; that is true.

Mr. KENYON. It was probably true of the Anderson case that the particular transaction in that instance was not in interstate commerce, but I think that the force and effect of those two cases have very largely been destroyed by the decision of the Supreme Court in the case to which I have referred in One hundred and ninety-sixth United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I have that decision?

Mr. KENYON. I have not the decision at present, but was reading from my notes of it. I will send and get the decision for the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator, then, was reading from his notation?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; what I have read is taken literally from the Swift case.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To quote from it, it refers to the sale of cattle as being a sale in interstate commerce; there is no doubt about that. Then the decision reads:

> When cattle are sent for sale from a place in one State with the expectation that they will end their transit after purchase in another State, and when in effect they do so, with only the interruption necessary to find a purchaser at the stockyards, and when this is a constantly recurring course, it constitutes interstate commerce, and the purchase of the cattle is an incident of such commerce.

The purchase of the cattle is an incident of interstate commerce, but the stockyard takes no part in the purchase of the cattle and has nothing to do with it. All the stockyard does is to provide sheds and pens in which other people engage in interstate commerce, but the Supreme Court has held squarely in the Hopkins case, as I recollect, that stockyards or live-stock exchanges of themselves are not engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. The idea which the Senator advances is that the ownership of a stockyard is what takes it out of interstate commerce?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; entirely out of it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is that really the case? Where a railroad leases a bridge or rents the privilege of crossing a bridge which spans a river, would it be the Senator's idea that that bridge was not an instrumentality of interstate commerce because the railroad company did not own it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would say that the owners of the bridge were not to be regulated, but that the railroad is to be regulated, and the bridge for the purpose of regulation is a portion of the system of the railroad.

Mr. CARAWAY. But the use made of the bridge would be a matter of interstate commerce, would it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is all the pending bill seeks to do. It seeks to regulate the use that is made of the stockyard and the transactions which occur there, because the stockyard is an instrumentality of interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not agree with the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator sees it differently?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have argued it back and forth now so long that I do not want to take the time of the Senate much longer.

Mr. KENYON. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate, either, but I want to add in connection with the Hopkins case and the Anderson case that the court said there that there was no showing of any interstate commerce in the live-stock exchange.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That there was no showing of interstate commerce?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not making fun of the bill at all; I do not want to do that; the Senator suspects I am trying to pick flaws because I am not in love with this character of legislation——

Mr. GOODING rose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me finish the sentence.

I do not see what the owner of the stockyard does which puts his business in interstate commerce. He does not buy or sell anything in interstate commerce any more than the proprietor of a hotel buys or sells anything in interstate commerce. All he does is to provide facilities used by other people engaged in interstate commerce, and included among those people are the commission men. I think the Federal Government has the regulatory power over the commission men, because they are buying and selling cattle in interstate commerce; I think the Government has a regulatory power over the trader, if it wishes to assume it, because the trader is buying and selling in interstate commerce, but the owner of the yards does not buy or sell anything in interstate commerce.

Mr. KENYON. In the case which was tried here in the District of Columbia, my impression is that it was conceded by the counsel for the packers in the decree that the stockyards were engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know as to that.

Mr. KENYON. But the Senator knows that a consent decree was entered providing for the divorcement of the stockyards and the packing business.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. That was a consent decree.

Mr. KENYON. It was a consent decree. I saw a statement at the time that counsel had made the concession indicated, but I can not vouch for the truth of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know what the counsel for the packers may have conceded.

Mr. GOODING. Does the Senator contend that stockyards should not be regulated? Is that the contention of the Senator?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not see what function the stockyards perform that requires regulation to the extent that it might be deemed advisable to regulate the commission men and the packers, in the sense of the term as we ordinarily use it.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment. Let me answer the question. But that is not the point. I contend that we have not the power to regulate them.

Mr. GOODING. They are a factor in the business which the Government is trying to regulate, and what this bill proposes to regulate in preparing food for market, and in other respects which go to make up the transaction. They must provide suitable facilities; the stockyards must be kept fit. Does not the Senator think it is very proper to regulate them in connection with this measure?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think it is proper for the Congress to regulate anything that it has not the right to regulate.

Mr. GOODING. It is possible for the stockyards to have a monopoly. Does not the Senator know that they have a monopoly in Kansas City and in Chicago? If I have stock I am forced to ship them to one of those yards for a market. They have a greater monopoly than the packers themselves. Does not the Senator understand that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Monopolies are forbidden by the Sherman law and the Clayton antitrust act.

Mr. GOODING. I understand; but here is a measure under which the Government proposes to make regulations for them to follow in the course of preparing food for the use of the country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is there to regulate in a stockyard other than the price of hay and grain sold to the owner of the cattle?

Mr. GOODING. It must be provided that the yards shall be kept in fit condition; that they are large enough to handle the live stock properly, and that the charges, if you please, be fair and reasonable in connection with the transactions in which they engage.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What charges? The charges for hay, grain, and yardage? Of course, that is price fixing.

Mr. GOODING. No doubt we will have to come to that in connection with this matter, and that is what alarms some Senators, I am quite sure.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will admit it alarms me. I have never seen governmental price fixing succeed, and I will challenge any Senator to point out an instance in political history where price fixing by the Government has survived.

Mr. GOODING. What does the Senator say about the Interstate Commerce Commission? Does he contend that the Interstate Commerce Commission in establishing rates for the railroads is not price fixing? It is fixing prices for services, is it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the Senator say it has been a success?

Mr. GOODING. I would say so——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I doubt it.

Mr. GOODING. Although it has not been the success the people hoped for.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in reference to the proposition announced by the Senator from New York just a moment ago that the stockyards were not subject to regulation because they only afforded facilities for the dealers, and so forth, and did not engage in business on their own account, I desire to say to the Senator that the Supreme Court of the United States in a noted case from Minnesota has passed on a question along that line. In that State there was passed an elevator law, which required all country elevators to take out licenses and operate under the regulations of the State. One elevator company took the stand that it did not propose to store grain for anybody, but simply to buy grain for their own use. Accordingly, because it was engaged merely in business for itself, it did not propose to take out a license. The Supreme Court in that case held that every elevator in the country was a public market place, where the people came to have their grain stored and weighed and graded, and that, conformably to the old rule that prevailed in the English common law in regard to markets overt, the Government had a perfect power to regulate them, because they were open market places.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator refers to the State government?

Mr. NELSON. I will ask the Senator to wait for a moment. The stockyards are public market places, where people send their cattle and stock to be sold, the stockyards furnishing hay and grain and feed and water. They constitute public market places just as much as in the case I have cited elevators were held to be public market places, and on that account subject to public regulation. The mere fact that the organization does not buy and sell cattle does not affect the question, for it is a market place where the buying and selling is carried on, and it is the only such place, if you please. Therefore, on what ground is not such an institution subject to public regulation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to understand the Senator. The decision to which he refers, then, upheld the right of the State of Minnesota to regulate that storage warehouse, or whatever it was.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; the Supreme Court of the United States not only in that case coming from Minnesota but in a case arising in North Dakota so held. I had occasion to keep track of questions of this kind. I will make a confession. I helped to frame the elevator law in Minnesota, and secured its passage through the legislature. I told our farmers that if I were elected governor I would do my best to secure the enactment of such legislation. North Dakota had passed an elevator law similar to ours, and the elevator men in Minneapolis instituted a case in the United States court which was not properly defended. I made up my mind that if that case were adversely decided by the Supreme Court we in Minnesota would be beaten. They had at that time elected as their attorney general a peculiar man who came up into that country from Missouri—I think his name was Stansbury, or some such name—the predecessor of the Nonpartisan League. I sent for him, and asked him to come to St. Paul, and I told him about that case. I said, "You want to defend it. It has been appealed to the Supreme Court. You want to appear in the Supreme Court and defend that case." He never knew a thing about it. He said, "I am not much of a lawyer. I do not understand much about these things." I said to him, "Will you allow me to use your name?" "Yes; certainly." He was very kind, and glad to have me do it.

I had no funds, but I took a little money out of my contingent fund as governor, hired a lawyer here, and they succeeded in winning that elevator case in North Dakota by a vote of 5 to 4. This case in Minnesota succeeded it, and the Supreme Court established the principle in those two cases that in cases of that kind the public had the right of regulation; and there is not any doubt about it. These stockyards are public market places where the public go, as in the old market overt of England. They go there to do their buying and selling, and while they are waiting to dispose of their cattle they get their water, their oats, and their feed there; and why, in God's name, should not institutions of that kind be subject to public control?

I fail to see any constitutional prohibition that excludes them from such control, Mr. President. It is not a matter of regulating prices. That question does not enter into the matter. It is a matter of regulating the business that the stockyards may do. If it is true, as the Senator from New York says, that they are not themselves engaged in buying and selling, certainly the question of regulating the price is not involved as to them.

It is simply a question whether or not you have a right to regulate such public market places; and the importance of the regulation is that the cattle and hogs and calves and sheep that you bring to market are brought to that market place. It is the only place to which you can bring them in a large city, and for that reason people are driven to that very point. It is like the situation in respect to railroads. We have to go on the railroads. We can not go on any outside track, and so when men ship their cattle to those market places they have no other place to go and sell and dispose of their goods than at those stockyards. And since those stockyards are public market places, places where people come to sell and to buy cattle, why is there anything in the Constitution that prohibits the regulation of such institutions?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as I understand, the case described by the Senator was decided by a Federal court.

Mr. NELSON. By the Supreme Court of the United States, here in Washington.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was decided by the Supreme Court?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; two cases.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They came up from the State of Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. One from North Dakota and one from Minnesota; and I want the Senator to understand that those are not slow States. They may not be as quick as New York; but Minnesota is something of a State, I want the Senator to understand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, I know that. I have heard of Minnesota. Those two cases came up from those two States. The question at issue, however, was whether the State of Minnesota had the right to regulate that business, not whether the United States had the right. Of course, the State of Minnesota had the right. It is a sovereign, with police power.

Mr. NELSON. No; but here: The State of Minnesota has a right to regulate it so far as the trade within the State is concerned; but when cattle come to Chicago or Kansas City, they come from all points of the compass. There it is interstate business; it is not intrastate business.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from New York also to the fact that the second greatest stockyard in the country has a State line running right through the middle of it, which would make it physically impossible for either one State or the other to regulate it without the other State interfering.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, of course we can think of most extraordinary cases, such as that just described by the Senator from Wyoming; but, without meaning any discourtesy to the Senator from Minnesota, I do not think the case which he cites bears upon this situation. The right of the State of Minnesota to regulate that public storehouse or public market, or whatever it was, was sustained by the Supreme Court; and all the States, or nearly all the States, have asserted and exercised similar rights. I imagine that the State of Illinois, if it wants to, can regulate the Chicago stockyards. Probably the legislature could declare them a public utility, a public market, subject to the sovereign power of the State of Illinois, in accordance with the old-time principles of the English common law cited by the Senator from Minnesota, but the Federal Government is vested with power over only those concerns or persons engaged in interstate commerce, and they are not engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. NELSON. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, those stockyards are instrumentalities of interstate trade in cattle; and the Supreme Court of the United States as long ago as in the days of John Marshall held that in regulating interstate commerce they had a right to regulate the instrumentalities of interstate commerce as well; and if the stockyards in Chicago are a part of the instrumentalities of interstate commerce, the Federal Government has as much right to regulate them as a State government has.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The trouble is that the Supreme Court has had that very matter before it, and it does not hold the view of the Senator from Minnesota, in the Hopkins case.

Mr. KENYON. Did they hold the Senator's view?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Iowa interrupts with the observation that perhaps they did not hold my view. They certainly declined in that case to render a decision to the effect that a live-stock exchange is engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. President, I had not expected to take all this time. I want to call the attention of Senators who are here to one other thing in the bill which, as the Senator from Nebraska states, really has nothing to do with the structure of the bill in so far as the regulation of these agencies is concerned. I refer to Titie V, which will be found on page 47. It is an entirely separate enactment; at least, it may be considered so. It provides for the voluntary registration of packers and stockyards. The title of the title, however, is broader than the text itself, because in Title V we find language which says:

No registrant shall take title to any products handled by such registrant.

In other words, Title V is supposed to apply only to public slaughterhouses or public processing establishments open to the use of the public, placed at the service of the public. The Senator from Nebraska has stated that this has been inserted in the bill with the hope that it will encourage municipalities to erect public slaughterhouses to which farmers in the adjoining country may bring their cattle, sheep, and hogs, have them slaughtered for a charge fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and have the meat products and by-products sold or disposed of. They are, as I understand, to be in a sense a public convenience. Now, the whole thing is voluntary. If a city or a corporation desires to make this experiment of putting up a public slaughterhouse, the Government, under Title V, invites that city or corporation to take out a license or to register with the Secretary of Agriculture. If the city or the corporation registers under the provisions of Title V, then the Secretary of Agriculture assumes complete regulatory power over this public slaughterhouse. He fixes all its charges. He regulates its sanitary conditions. He regulates how it shall divide the premises so that A may have this space in which to bring his cattle and B may have this space, and C another space. Under this title, once the municipality has registered under its provisions, the Secretary of Agriculture takes complete control. He regulates it from top to bottom.

I invite Senators to read some of the things which occur in Title V.

The commissioner may pass upon the location, character, and extent of the grounds, buildings, and other facilities, the financial resources, the credit, and the standing of the applicant. Then, under the registration agreement, he has charge of the rules and regulations and the orders made applicable to it, and the registrant must provide and maintain, or secure when necessary, adequate railroad connections. It must furnish the services and facilities of its business on fair and reasonable terms and without unjust discrimination to persons applying for them.

It shall also set aside such portion of the facilities of its business, as determined by the commissioner, as may reasonably be necessary to accommodate small shippers and local patrons. It is its duty to impose on them only such charges and rates as are reasonable for the service or facility afforded. It is its duty to exercise proper care of the live stock, in accordance with the regulations of the commissioner, of course; to maintain sanitary conditions, to refrain from unfairly discriminatory or deceptive practices, to keep complete and accurate accounts and records of its business; and otherwise to conduct its business in such manner as may be prescribed in rules, regulations, and orders issued under this section by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

I ask the friends of that title: How many municipalities in the United States do you think are going to put themselves under the heel of the Secretary of Agriculture? We are informed this is to encourage municipal abattoirs, and do you think there is a city in the United States that would issue bonds for the building of such facilities, in the form of public abattoirs, or slaughterhouses, and then submit to the Secretary of Agriculture to have all their prices, charges, practices, and methods rigidly regulated? I can not conceive that a city would go into it.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, the Senator understands it is all voluntary, as he has said?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. This bill does not require any city to do it. Nobody is compelled, whether it is a city, or a corporation, or a philanthropic individual, to do it unless he wants to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly not.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, certainly it will not hurt anybody. If somebody wants to do it, and wants to perform a public service that way, why not let him do it? Then, let me ask the Senator this question: Is it not true that in the committee, where the Senator was making an argument against this title, as he is now doing in the Senate, he used the argument that if we let that stay in the bill all the packers would get in under it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not that true?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; not since the language of subdivision (e) was changed.

Mr. NORRIS. The only change made by subdivision (e) was that it took away the discretion of the commissioner to regulate the taking title by registrants to any products handled by them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That, to my mind, removed that objection.

Mr. NORRIS. Does it not remove every objection?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it does not, Mr. President. I do not say that this thing is epoch making.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has asked the question, and I say that that subject has not been debated much by the friends of the measure. Everybody who is supporting the Senate bill knows that this particular title is an experiment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. We feel that since it is voluntary, there being no compulsion about it whatever, it can not hurt anybody. It could be stricken out and the balance of the bill not affected. It does not affect the regulation of the packers in any way.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have so stated.

Mr. NORRIS. It was put in, in the first place, because it can not possibly hurt anyone. If it is never utilized by anyone, nobody will be hurt. But those who favor it claim that in Europe, for instance, there are a great many municipal slaughterhouses and abattoirs, sometimes run by the municipality, sometimes by individuals, as this provides may be done, or a corporation, it may be big-spirited men who want to establish something of that kind. If you put one into operation in a city that is large enough to maintain it, it comes pretty near taking away all the commissions or profits between the producer of meat and the consumer of it. So that it seems to me whatever might be said about a city ever doing it, it does not make any difference whether they do it or not; they do not have to. But if they do accept, if they do want to come in under it voluntarily, then it must follow, it seems to me, that we must provide that they must submit to the regulations provided for it. Otherwise, we would have insanitary and dishonest manipulation, which we want to avoid.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Nebraska did not intend to misquote the Senator from New York in his argument before the Committee on Agriculture. My recollection of the Senator's contention is that he said if one municipality built a slaughterhouse under the provisions of this act, the benefits would be so great that all private packing concerns would find it necessary to come in under this.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator has an inaccurate recollection of what I said. I was very much opposed to this matter of control until it was made perfectly clear that these could be nothing more than public service agencies or facilities; that is all.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I can not consider legislation from the point of view that the Secretary of Agriculture is not going to be fair, and that he is not going to be honest and just in his regulations, and in all things.

We have to consider, in passing legislation, that those who are going to administer the laws are going to be fair and honest and just. If they are not, then the Government is a failure, and I am supporting this bill because I believe the present Secretary of Agriculture is fair, is honest, is just, and that we have never had a Secretary of Agriculture who has not been fair and just and honest, and I do not think we ever will have one; I hope not, at least.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can subscribe to everything the Senator has said, but what it has to do with this particular discussion, so far as I have carried it, I do not know. I have not said the Secretary of Agriculture could not be trusted.

Mr. GOODING. No; but the Senator did say something about every community being put under the heel of the Secretary.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I used that expression.

Mr. GOODING. I understand "under the heel" means to be ground down.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We will change that, then, and say "under the control" of the Secretary. The Senator will not deny that.

Mr. GOODING. I quite agree.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I apologize for interrupting the Senator, and my inquiry may not be pertinent to the discussion in which the Senator has just been participating. I am advised that this bill permits the Federal Government, by the consent of the municipalities and political subdivisions of States, to enter into States and to control the packing plants, yards, and so forth, that are purely intrastate in character. Where is there any justification, I ask the Senator, for the Federal Government assuming control, even with the consent of the owner, of concerns that are engaged in purely intrastate business?

Is not such a provision, if that is the provision of the bill, a sort of a bait for municipalities and State political subdivisions to put their heads into the noose prepared by the Federal Government, hoping that in the end, while it may be a voluntary placing of their heads in the noose, ultimately it will ripen into a prescriptive right, and the Federal Government may compel recalcitrant municipalities, or attempt to compel recalcitrant municipalities, to perform the like act of suicide? Is it not a scheme, in that provision of the bill, to project the Federal Government into the affairs of the States, hoping that some municipalities, by the allurements which will be held out, will submit to Federal regulation, and after that has been done that it will be used as a basis for attempted compulsory national legislation to force all municipalities and all political subdivisions and all privately controlled enterprises engaged in the stockyards business or in the packing business to submit to Federal control?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, with much that the Senator says I am in agreement; but I think he describes this particular Title V in terms too broad. It would apply only to public slaughterhouses whose patrons are engaged in interstate commerce.

But my objection to it basically is on account of the paternalism inherent in it. I think nothing equaling it has ever been proposed. I know it is made voluntary only; but, nevertheless, there it is to stand on the statute books of the United States as an expression of the hope of the Congress that people will submit to this paternalism, inviting cities, corporations, and persons to come to Uncle Sam and take out a license, and enjoy, while they are doing business under the license, the prestige that goes with it. Mind you, I do not think a city would do it.

I do not think the mayor and the board of aldermen would ever consent to submit to the control of the Secretary of Agriculture in the conduct of their own business, a business built and paid for by the city.

What would happen with private concerns, I do not know; it is hard to say. But let us see how this sounds when put upon the statute books of the United States.

Such certificates—

That is, the certificates of registration—shall be accepted in the courts of the United States and of the States as prima facie evidence of the quality, quantity, or condition at the time and place of inspection of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs covered thereby.

* * * * * * *

Any certificate of registration issued under this section may be suspended or revoked by the commissioner for any violation of this section or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, under such procedure as the commissioner may prescribe.

He can destroy the property by any method or procedure he chooses. To have such a thing put upon the statute books of the United States, even in its tentative form, is abhorrent to me. His mere say-so can close the plant, and there is no method of appeal. The registrant becomes a slave of the Government, compelled to do everything that the Government says he must do, the prices he shall charge, the manner of running the business.

All of the methods, practices, and devices—everything—must be done just as the Government says, or it must perish. I do not like that kind of thing on the statute books.

It may be, as the Senator from Utah has said, that some private individuals will put their necks in that noose. I doubt it, unless the Government, having gotten a few of them to do it, can give them such advantage for the time being over their competitors who have not registered as to induce more to come in, and finally to get everybody in. I think cities will not do it. It may be, however, that one or two or three corporations may be tempted to come in and submit, on the theory that the prestige which they will enjoy, due to the Government's backing, and the fact that the certificate is prima facie evidence that the goods are class A, the finest in the world, which they can put on their letterheads and in all their advertising literature, on that theory some few may come in, and in time bring others in, owing to the competition. But for myself, I dread opening the door to such a practice as that. It is paternalism, Senators, gone wild. There is no limit if we once establish it as a policy that the Government stands ready to do it if it gets the chance. And that is what this Title V means.

Mr. DIAL obtained the floor.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	McNary	Smith
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Smoot
Cummins	Kendrick	New	Sutherland
Curtis	Kenyon	Norris	Swanson
Dial	King	Oddie	Trammell
Gooding	Ladd	Overman	Underwood
Harris	Lodge	Phipps	Wadsworth
Harrison	McCormick	Poindexter	Watson, Ga.
Heflin	McKellar	Sheppard	Williams
Johnson	McKinley	Simmons	Wolcott

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BALL, Mr. BURSUM, Mr. CALDER, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. NICHOLSON, and Mr. STERLING answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. ERNST, Mr. LENROOT, and Mr. HARRELD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

SALE AND DELIVERY OF COTTON.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, unless some Senator cares to discuss the packers bill, I desire to take a few moments on an amendment which I have to the present cotton futures contract law.

I realize that it is getting late, and I am not going to do like the little boy said some time ago. A gentleman was making a speech in a hall and his friend was sitting in his automobile on the outside, expecting to carry the speaker home with him. The friend got very impatient; he waited and waited and waited, and at last the little boy slipped out of the back door and came around to the front, and this gentleman in the automobile said: "Say, Bud, is that man in there through speaking?" The boy said: "Gee, yes, Mister; he's through, but he won't quit." [Laughter.]

I realize that it is getting late, and I am going to quit after a little while.

I desire to amend the present future-contract cotton law. Under that law the seller of a contract has the right to deliver all of the quantity in any grade he may see fit. Under the law these contracts have to be delivered out of 10 grades. The seller has the entire option of delivering all of the quantity in 1 grade or he may mix them up over the 10 grades, as he sees proper. The purchaser has no right except to sell out his contract or to sit still and accept whatever grades are tendered him. To my mind, that is absolutely unjust. It is one-sided. It is not fair. It is not honest. I am here not asking for any appropriation, I am not asking to regulate anybody, I am not asking to abolish the exchanges, I merely want to correct this unjust, one-sided law. To my mind, this law always has been wrong. However, it is somewhat of a new law. It was only about 1914, I believe, when it came into existence.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIAL. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought we passed a law correcting the evil, if it is an evil, just cited by the Senator. For days it was discussed here on the floor of the Senate, and the Senator's colleague [Mr. SMITH], as I remember, had a bill passed, and I think it passed the House—I am not positive, though—correcting the very evil of which the Senator speaks. Did it fail in the House?

Mr. DIAL. No; the bill to which the Senator has reference passed the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Did not that correct the evils that were complained of?

Mr. DIAL. It helped correct the evils, but it did not go quite far enough. Originally there were 32 grades of cotton tenderable on a contract. Later they were reduced to 20 grades; and later, as I understand the law to which the Senator has reference, advocated by my colleague, that law passed, and it reduced the tenderable grades down to 10. To my mind that improved the law wonderfully, and my colleague is entitled to the credit and the commendation of the people not only in the South but the whole United States. That helped some. It helped considerably.

Last year we passed a measure through the Senate, advocated by Senator Comer, known as the Comer amendment. The Comer amendment was driving at the same purpose and object that I am driving at, but I tried to get the Senator to amend his amendment. I had great deference in speaking to him, because he is a very successful man, one of the largest farmers in the South, and a business man of 50 years' experience. I do not claim to be an expert, like Senator Comer, but he was driving in the right direction. In Senator Comer's amendment he sought to let the purchaser of the contract select half of the quantity of the contract in middling and above.

It ought not to be that the seller has the right to select all the quantity. It ought not to be the right of the purchaser to select all of the quantity. I am seeking to let each party to the contract select 50 per cent of that contract.

Senators, it is a complicated proposition. There are 10 grades of cotton dealt in as one article, as it were. Now, let us not confuse the issue. Of course, between those 10 grades there is a graduated schedule of prices, so that you would not have to pay as much for one grade as for another grade. That is regulated by the price. I have no complaint to make of that. In fact, I want to eliminate all of the unimportant matters that I possibly can; so, therefore, do not think that if a man tenders you one grade you have to pay the same that you would for another. If you get above middling, you pay a premium; if they tender you below middling, you get a discount. Therefore you are not hurt in that transaction on that particular ground.

Now, Senators, I want to lay down this proposition to you: According to my way of thinking, the price of the spot market is governed by the contract market. I do not think there is any doubt about that. I do not think I need argue that, certainly with the southern Senators; but possibly you other Senators who are not as familiar with cotton as the southern Senators are might question that. I want to prove it to you by a concrete case, and I shall be brief on it.

I was at home on election day—we all remember election day, of course; some for different reasons. The next day a farmer came into my office—I am interested in a little bank—and he said: "I have sold my cotton, and I want to pay the note that I owe the bank." "All right, my friend; sit down. What did you get for your cotton? Why did you not bring in a check?" "I did not sell my cotton here; I sold it up at the cotton mill." "All right. What did you get for it?" "I got 20½ cents a pound. The wagon just ahead of me got 21 cents a pound. I drove my mules around and fed them, and the next wagon that came up only got 20 cents a pound."

There was that cotton fluctuating 1 cent a pound, $5 a bale, in the space of an hour, or less than an hour. Now, we know and you know that the intrinsic value of the cotton did not vary $5 a bale in less than an hour. No reason had occurred. It was simply the future-contract market coming in. We get it down there in those small towns every 20 minutes; so, the contract market coming in and declining, the price of spot cotton declined with it.

The next morning I told my secretary: "Go down to the warehouse and sell my cotton. It looks like there is no bottom to it." He came back directly, and he said: "They will not bid on your cotton." I said: "What is the trouble?" He said the market had not come in from New York. I knew the buyers would not bid until the market came in, but I did not realize that it was quite that early in the day.

So, Senators, I am not going into numerous cases, but I give you these two concrete cases showing how a farmer has to sell his cotton governed by the future market. That is where I think a great wrong is done our people; and in speaking of our people I want to say this, Senators: It is not a sectional question. It is not a local question. The price of cotton affects every man in the United States, and you gentlemen are interested in that—not, perhaps, to the extent that we are, but to a great extent. Over half of the cotton that we raise is exported to other countries. Those people buy it cheaper, and they deprive this country of that much wealth. We export great quantities to England, France, Italy, Germany, Japan, and other countries.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator claim that the fact that the contract market, as he calls it, or the returns from the speculative market, control the price of the spot cotton as he indicated, has anything to do with the provision of his amendment which would allow the purchaser to select the particular grades which are to be delivered?

Mr. DIAL. A great deal to do with it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not see the connection.

Mr. DIAL. All right. I will try to come to that point, but I want to lay down these general principles.

Answering the Senator's question, here is the way it affects it: I am glad to be interrupted, as this is more of a conference than it is a speech. We are all interested in it. I have the most absolute confidence in the fairness and the honesty of the Senate and of the Congress of the United States. I believe all that is necessary is to get your proposition fairly before them, and if it has merit they will act accordingly.

Answering the Senator's question, here is the way it works: The cotton crop is gathered in practically four months of the year. The world knows that the farmer has to put his cotton on the market rapidly, because it is grown by a very poor class of people in a great measure. Half of the cotton in the South is grown by the colored population. A great many of those, perhaps nearly all of those, and a great many of the white people give liens or mortgages on their crops. In other words, they get advances on the crop before they make the crop. Now, those papers mature in the fall months. They begin to mature in my section of the country about the 1st of October, and between that and Christmas they have to meet those obligations. Those producers owe the local merchant or the local bank; the local merchant owes the local bank, and the local bank has discounted the paper elsewhere, and they want to meet their obligations. Therefore the world knows that the cotton has to be put on the market in a short space of time. The farmer is selling his cotton. He is supplying the legitimate demand. The speculator, knowing the condition of our country, sells cotton short.

Now, the millman comes in and hedges; he makes what they call a hedge, and that is where they say the exchange comes in. The millman, having bought his hedge, when the maturity of his contract arrives, knowing that he has no option under the contract, that he is compelled to take whatever class of cotton is tendered him within the 10 grades, will sell out his contract. He will not stand up and demand delivery of the cotton. Now, right in there is where I see, in answer to the Senator's question, the great injustice of the present law.

Assume that a mill president gets an offer for all the goods he can make for six months. Assume that he uses a thousand bales of cotton a month. He talks to his superintendent and decides to accept the offer. They do not know what the price of cotton is going to be two, three, four, or six months ahead, so they hedge. They wire to New York, to John Jones, to buy 6,000 bales of cotton, delivered in the next six months at the rate of 1,000 bales of cotton monthly. Of course, they have the financial arrangements made. They buy that cotton. Now, that is a hedge.

The way it operates is this: The manufacturer then thinks he is all right; he has sold his goods and he has bought his contracts. The contract ought to represent the actual cotton if called for. I want to eliminate speculation as much as possible. I want that contract to represent something.

The way it operates now is this: The millman will go out, send his buyer on the street, and he will buy up the cotton as best he can, and when he buys 100 bales he sells out a contract, and he keeps on, and he sells out his contracts as he buys his actual cotton. A contract means 100 bales. If the cotton has gone down he has lost on his contract, but he has bought his cotton cheaper than he thought he was buying it when he sold his goods. Therefore he tries to even up. If the price goes up, and he pays more for his cotton than he thought he would at the time he sold his goods, then he has made on his contract, but he has lost on his cotton, and he tries to even it up.

Now, here is where the poor farmer catches it, as I see it, and also the manufacturer, as I see it. As I understand, the mills do not object to high-priced cotton. What they object to is violent fluctuations, so that they will not know where they stand. To my mind there is a stream of sellers all the time on the market. Therefore, if the man who had bought the contracts had an equal option with the seller, instead of selling out his contract and pocketing his loss he would stand up and demand delivery of his cotton. Hence, it would never go down as low as it has gone, when there was such great pressure on it. It is like water running over a dam.

Now, they will say that there must be a purchaser for every seller. That is true. But that is where they confuse us through these exchanges. But it is not necessary that there should be an accepter for every offer. For instance, you have bought your contract ahead and the maturity date is approaching. Under the present law you have no option of selection. You wire your broker: "Close out my contract to-day." We will suppose this is a July contract, and you wire, "Close it out at 12.20." He will wire you back, "I have no offer. I can not get 12.20." Then you wire him to close it out at 11.90. To-morrow he will wire you back that it has gone down, and you have to do something; you have to accept whatever is tendered. You wire him to sell for whatever he can get for it. He sells out. What I want is that they shall not be compelled to sell out. I want them to be able to stand up and say, "Give me half of this contract in the cotton that I want."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. DIAL. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What I wanted to understand was this situation: If the millman, who has made a contract for his thousand bales of cotton, then, as the Senator says, goes and buys the actual cotton, a hundred bales, and then sells out a hundred bales of his contract, why would he not do the same thing if he had the privilege of selecting from 4 or 5 different grades out of the 10 grades of cotton?

Mr. DIAL. I do not think he would sell, because now he knows he has no selection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know; but I do not follow the Senator in this respect: I understood the Senator to say that the man sold out a part of his contract because he had bought that much of the actual cotton; therefore he did not need the whole amount of the contract. I did not understand the Senator to say that the millman who had a contract for a thousand bales of cotton sold out a part of that contract because he was prevented from making a choice out of certain grades of cotton, but because he had bought the actual cotton to the extent to which he had sold out his contract. Which of those is the correct statement?

Mr. DIAL. Possibly I tried to illustrate too much in too short a space of time. Under the present law, he goes out and buys his cotton on the market. If I can succeed in having my amendment adopted, he will not go on the market; he will make the broker deliver. He will have his choice. Then he can get half of the kind of cotton he buys. He will say, "This price is going too low. I am not going to sell out my contract. I will exercise my right to take half of the quantity." He would sell the other half to a neighboring mill or tender it on a contract he would sell. Then there will be less selling on the market.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then the Senator's claim is that the millman, who has the contract for the thousand bales of cotton, sells out a part of his contract because he fears he can not get the right kind of cotton under it when the time for delivery comes?

Mr. DIAL. Absolutely, yes. His mill is rigged up to spin one grade of cotton, and if he sits down and waits until the seller tenders him the cotton, he may tender him a grade of cotton that he could not use in his mill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. So that, when he has this contract, it may be filled in inferior kinds of cotton, unsuitable for his mill?

Mr. DIAL. Unsuitable for his mill and his goods.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And he is still in a dangerous position?

Mr. DIAL. Absolutely.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And if the proper kind of cotton is offered to him at the proper price—cotton which he can use—he will always buy that spot cotton which he can use, and then cancel his old contract?

Mr. DIAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand the Senator now.

Mr. DIAL. Now, let me go along a little further and show how that price is arrived at; and these are figures I do not think have been made public in the United States. I obtained them the other day from the Department of Agriculture. We are told that the exchange is simply a clearing house, as it were; a kind of innocent side show.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Before the Senator leaves the other proposition I should like to inquire, covering this point, if it is a good thing to limit the number of grades so that the purchaser may select at least half of the kind of cotton which he wants, why would it not be a good thing to still further limit it and give to the purchaser the right to demand the whole of the kind of cotton which he wants and not only half of it? If it is a good thing to go half way, why is it not a good thing to go the whole way?

Mr. DIAL. I thank the Senator. Under the present law that is possible; but, as a matter of fact, the New York Cotton Exchange has never put that kind of a contract into operation. They will not trade in it. They will not sell it. I spent days in the Department of Agriculture last summer looking into this matter; I studied it very carefully, and they said that contract had never been entered into. The New Orleans exchange will enter into that kind of a contract to a limited extent. They have the advantage of the farmer and of the millman.

Senators, if I had any favors to give I would give them to the farmer. But I am not here asking favors for anybody. I am not even asking for sympathy. I am asking you to correct flagrant wrongs, to amend a one-sided law, practically a confiscation.

It is said that the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges are merely clearing houses; that they are merely a hedging proposition, just a little innocent thing. I am not trying to put them out of business, for the time being. I am not trying to see whether it is essential that they should operate. I am not caring anything about that feature. I am trying to get an honest and just law on the statute books.

Let me show you how innocent and how little they are. I have the figures here of what they did in 1919. I could not get the figures for the next year.

In 1919 there were sold on the New Orleans Cotton Exchange 33,681,500 bales of cotton. On the New York exchange that year were sold 71,183,600 bales of cotton, aggregating 104,860,100 bales of cotton. I have not the exact figures of the production that year in America, but it was a little less than 12,000,000 bales of cotton.

Every bale of the 12,000,000 bales of cotton which was raised was sold eight times over. If the mills of this country had hedged every bale they needed in the mills, as they used only about 6,000,000 bales, you see that every bale would have been sold over sixteen times in the United States.

What do they do about delivery? What I am trying to get at is that the contract should represent cotton. Let it represent some value. Let it represent something or other, not be just paper.

The cotton that was delivered on those two exchanges that year amounted, in New Orleans, to 19,900 bales, and in New York to 120,000 bales. A little less than 140,000 bales were actually delivered, whereas they had sold over 104,000,000 bales. The point I am making is, they use the exchanges to sell and sell and sell, and put the price down all the time.

There is a little section of our country, about 500 miles wide and 2,000 miles long, with a population of about 25,000,000, half of whom perhaps engaged in agriculture, unorganized, disorganized, raising 60 per cent of the cotton of the world, having no way to protect themselves, and the United States Congress allows this unjust law to stay upon the statute books.

UMI

Answering the Senator from New Mexico further along that line, I will refer to Senator Comer just briefly. Senator Comer advocated letting the purchaser have the privilege of selecting one-half the quantity of the contract in middling and above. That created a great furor in the country, and it was on account of that that I objected to his amendment. It was said if the purchaser selected half of the quantity, he would select a very fine grade, and he would run the price of cotton sky high. That was the argument. I could not see as much wrong in allowing the purchaser to select half of the quantity in one grade, and run the price sky high, as I could see in allowing the seller to sell all of the quantity in dogtail, as we call it, and run the price cellar low. Senator Comer wanted to help the producer, the man who needs help, and his amendment was in the right direction, and it passed the Senate, but the House killed it.

I do not contend that we should compel the purchaser to select half the quantity in middling and above, in high-grade cotton, as we call it; but let each party to the contract select one-half of that quantity. He would select according to his requirements. Coarse-goods mills would demand off-grade cotton.

My amendment is now before the Committee on Agriculture, and I shall wait until the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] returns before I press it; but it proceeds on the theory that we should let the seller select half of the quantity, and let him divide that half equally between the two grades; let the purchaser select the other half, and make him divide that equally between the two grades.

If it is thought best to divide each half between more grades I would not object, but what I do insist upon is an equal division between purchaser and seller.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator explain to one who does not claim to have any knowledge about dealings in cotton why, if a purchaser buys a certain grade of cotton, he should not have the grade which he selects?

Why should there be any law that would allow the seller to say that he will furnish one-half of that grade and one-half of another grade? What is the purpose of such a law? What benefits are to be subserved by it, and why should we not have a law compelling the seller to furnish the kind of cotton he contracts to sell?

Mr. DIAL. We should have, Senator. As I said a while ago, that is the law. They can contract that way if they will, but the seller will not contract. He will not contract as to the specific kind of cotton. The contracts say "cotton," and "cotton" means any of those 10 grades.

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose the person who wants to purchase says, "I will not buy under such a condition. I insist that if I buy cotton A–1 you are to deliver me cotton A–1, or if I buy cotton A–2 that you are to deliver me cotton A–2."

Mr. DIAL. They will not trade.

Mr. McCUMBER. Are conditions such that a purchaser can not buy what he wants to buy?

Mr. DIAL. Yes, sir; that is true, unfortunately. They will not make that kind of a contract.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, under the law we have 10 grades, and you can go into the exchange and contract to buy a contract or a number of contracts. When you come to have your contract filed, the exchange man tells you that he has not the cotton you want, and under their rules he can tender you some of each of the 10 grades, and if you say, then, that that is not what you want and that you can not use it, they settle the difference with you in money; that is, the difference between the price at which you bought, we will say, and the price to which it advanced, which may amount to $5 or $10 or more on the bale, or vice versa, if the price declines.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is that a law or simply a rule of the exchange?

Mr. HEFLIN. I fear that the rules fixed by the exchanges enable them to evade the law. They could not sell and deliver, as has been suggested, 104,000,000 bales out of a 12,000,000-bale crop. Something must be done to require spinable cotton to be delivered on contracts, and I would like to see a record kept of all sales of cotton on the exchanges, so as to obtain information as to just how many bales are sold on contract and how many are delivered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, does the Senator mean to tell me that if a manufacturer of cotton yarn wishes to buy a thousand bales of a certain character of cotton that is necessary to be used in his mill, and he contracts for that thousand bales of cotton, he has no law that will back him in getting that thousand bales, but that the seller can give him half of a different kind? I confess I do not understand that yet.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if my colleague will allow me, there are two distinct operations in the cotton business. This afternoon would not afford half the time that would be necessary to explain the detailed workings of what we know as our cotton exchanges. The contracts to which my colleague refers are employed in the markets where the principal business is done.

We have what is called a middling grade. That is the middle grade, and all prices are fixed with reference to that. The grades below have a discount and the grades above have a premium. All contracts are sold "basis middling." If you pick up your paper in the morning you will see May, June, July, August, September, and October cotton quoted at a certain price, and that is "basis middling."

It is a fact that neither a millman nor a cotton producer nor a broker rarely goes to the exchange to get his contract filled. They simply buy and sell there as hedges against either the purchase of the actual spot cotton or the sale of goods from the mill. They take that as an insurance, hold onto it, and send their brokers into the market to buy the specific grades they desire. The reason why the law does not compel the exchange to deliver the specific grades that a millman may want is because those are simply hedging markets, where the spot cotton is not supposed to be stored and delivered against sales. It is an insurance place.

My colleague [Mr. DIAL] has introduced an amendment looking toward the exigency that in case a millman would desire to have at least half of his contract delivered by the hedge market rather than by his broker on his street, he may have the opportunity of so demanding it from the exchange, but the actual cotton is no more handled on the New Orleans Cotton Exchange—perhaps a little more on the New Orleans Exchange than on the New York Exchange—than is wheat handled on the board of trade. It is simply a hedge against purchase or sale in the general markets.

There is a provision in the present law that gives them the right to specify the particular grade.

If my colleague will allow me just a moment further, I shall conclude. Cotton is of such a peculiar nature that it confuses most of those who are unacquainted with it, both in the production and the handling. It is now divided into 10 grades—11 or 12, in fact, but we have not allowed to be delivered those below good ordinary—on account of color and foreign matter and perhaps inferior fiber.

Most of the mills that buy their cotton buy even running loss. That is the technical term used, which may go from low middling up to as high as strict middling. These grades are used in the same mill to produce the same kind of cloth; and no one would attempt to sell a contract of a specific grade, because he would have difficulty in finding anywhere in the ordinary market that specific grade, but they do sell basis middling and settle on that basis.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I understand. The Senator is not dealing with real cotton that is to be used in the mills, but merely speculative cotton that is to be used as a hedge.

Mr. DIAL. Yes; and that depresses the price of spot cotton. It declined from over 42 cents per pound to around 10 cents within a few months. That is my complaint.

I send to the desk a telegram sent by a member of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], who handed it to me. I desire to have that incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I think the telegram bears out my contention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 5, 1921.

Hon. JOS. E. RANSDELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Your letter April 29 and wire May 3. In my opinion future contract trading is essential. The abolition of the future market would be a vast misfortune to all engaged in cotton production and merchandising. It is true that in the late deflation campaign when constructive speculation was paralyzed and destructive speculation stimulated and, in fact, encouraged by the attitude and acts of one branch of the Federal Government the producers should have been protected from the injurious results of excessive bear speculation and should be protected should any excessive selling develop during the abnormal period of readjustment. But the way to make such protection effective is through temporary prohibition of speculative short selling and not through the destruction of the future trading system. The future markets may be destroyed directly as under the Caraway bill or indirectly as under the Dial bill. Senator DIAL'S fifty-fifty argument sounds plausible enough, but in practical effect it would drive sellers from the future market and make said market innocuous. The fault with DIAL'S argument lies in the fact that obligations assumed by the buyer and seller in the future contract are not equal. If the buyer could demand that even 50 per cent of the contract delivery should be two specific grades, designated by him (the buyer), he would naturally demand the grades which seller would have most difficulty in securing even if he could secure same at all. Such a contract would make seller's position so hazardous that eventually there would be no sellers, either speculative or hedging. Having gone through a period during which the speculative short seller had all the advantage, now that trend of events and the attitude of the administration favors a revival of buying, I think it would be most unfortunate for us by destroying the future markets to deprive cotton of the benefits of constructive buying.

W. B. THOMPSON.

Mr. DIAL. I have in my hand a clipping from my home paper relating that a gentleman whose name I will not mention, living in my neighborhood, the father of eight children, committed suicide the other day on account of the discouraging outlook for agriculture.

I appreciate very much the attention of the Senate, and I am sorry my time is so limited. However, I am glad that Senators will look into the matter, as I know they will. All I ask is a simple amendment to the law, and I feel there can be no opposition to it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to an important fact in connection with cotton. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and Senators on the other side of the aisle who have given the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] such close attention will be interested in this. Except for the cotton exported from the South since 1880, the balance of trade would have been against the United States more than half the years from that time until the last war. The gold reserve that we have had to help this country in the trying times the past few years has been due more to cotton exported than to anything else. Without this cotton the balance of trade would have been against the United States and we would have been sending annually abroad hundreds of millions of dollars. Our Government owes the cotton producers of the South a debt of gratitude, and I hope to see the time when Senators from every section will feel an interest in the welfare of the southern cotton producer, whose product now sells for less than a third it costs to produce. No section has suffered from deflation as much as the South.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the balance of trade between the United States and foreign countries and a statement showing the exports of cotton, which amount to double that of wheat and corn, and showing the amount of gold that cotton we have exported has brought into our country the past 50 years. Also, I wish to insert a copy of the British Board of Trade Journal, showing what Great Britain is doing to encourage the production of cotton. Unless our Government helps the cotton producers, the production will be decreased, our exports lessened, and our gold reserve reduced. I think everything this Government can do should be done to encourage the production and exportation of cotton and financing the cotton producers so as to help the price of cotton. Congress and our Government should leave nothing undone in such efforts as are now being made along this line. When the South receives a fair price for cotton, it not only helps our balance of trade but it helps every industry in the United States.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EMPIRE COTTON GROWING.

THE NEW ORGANIZATION.

It is announced that a preliminary meeting of the members nominated to serve on the administrative council of the Empire Cotton Growing Corporation will be held in Manchester on February 21. This statement indicates that arrangements are nearing completion for the establishment of a permanent organization whose object will be to promote the growing of cotton within the Empire, so that the industry in this country need no longer be dependent on the United States for the greater part of its supply of raw material.

In 1917 a committee was appointed by the board of trade to investigate this problem. The members reported that while they were confident that if proper measures were taken it should be possible to grow within the Empire a very large proportion of the cotton it requires, such an achievement was beyond the powers of any committee and demanded the united efforts of the Imperial Government and the governments of the cotton-growing parts of the Empire, supported by the active interest and cordial cooperation of all who are engaged in the cotton industry in this country. The following are among the recommendations contained in the committee's report published in January of last year (Cmd. 523):

(1) That the agricultural departments in British colonies and dependencies should be considerably enlarged and strengthened.

(2) That a central research institute should be established.

(3) That in order to increase the supply and improve the training of scientific men capable of studying cotton, readerships at British universities should be established in plant physiology, plant genetics, mycology, and entomology, and that research studentships, to be held by graduates, should also be established.

(4) That a bureau for the dissemination of information on cotton growing should be set up.

(5) That the British Cotton Growing Association should act as agents of the committee for marketing crops, where this is agreeable to the local government, and that the association should forego the appropriation of any profits made in business carried on under this arrangement, provided that it is guaranteed against permanent loss arising therefrom.

The president of the board of trade supported the committee's proposals, stating that it was very undesirable that the cotton industry of the Empire should be so greatly dependent upon outside sources and upon seasonal conditions in any one country for its supply of raw material. While recognizing that useful work had been done in the past, he urged that the problem must be handled more systematically and with greater vigor, and that the Government must be prepared to give more active support.

FINANCE OF THE SCHEME.

The committee suggested that the responsibility for financing their proposals might be shared by the treasury and the cotton industry, but that pending the formation of a permanent body competent to carry into effect their far-reaching schemes the committee should continue its work under the support of the Government. This recommendation was accepted and a sum of £10,000 a year for five years was placed at the committee's disposal for secretarial and other expenses and for initiatory work on matters of urgent importance on the lines recommended in the report. The committee were accordingly able last spring to take steps to form an organization for the development of cotton growing within the Empire and to carry out immediately certain of their proposals.

With regard to finance, it was suggested that the contribution from the industry might take the form of a voluntary levy of 6 d. per bale of 500 pounds imposed by the spinners themselves on all raw cotton. The principle of this proposal met with considerable support in Lancashire, and the Government thereupon announced last July that they would ask Parliament to make a grant of £50,000 a year for five years to the body that might be set up to carry out the committee's proposals, subject to the contribution from the industry being forthcoming by means of the levy, which it was estimated would yield a further sum of approximately £100,000 per annum.

PROGRESS OF THE COTTON LEVY.

Notwithstanding the severe depression in the cotton trade, marked progress has since been made in obtaining the approval of the spinning firms to the levy. At present the owners of approximately 75 per cent of the spinning spindles in the United Kingdom have given their assent. The Liverpool and Manchester Cotton Associations have been approached with a view to obtaining their help in collecting the levy, and they have intimated their willingness to recommend to their members the introduction of a by-law to enable them to impose the charge suggested, provided that the consent of the owners of at least 90 per cent of the spindles in the country is obtained. The fulfillment of this requirement would mean that the trade was practically unanimous in its support, and although such unanimity may not be easy of attainment at the present time, the striking proportion already in favor of the scheme gives encouragement to the hope that at the forthcoming meeting in Manchester means may be found rapidly to complete the necessary arrangements.

THE PERMANENT CORPORATION.

In order to establish a permanent body to carry out the committee's recommendations it has been decided to form the Empire Cotton Growing Corporation, to be constituted under royal charter. The funds of the corporation will be in the hands of a board of trustees, which it is proposed should consist of the secretaries of state for foreign affairs, the colonies and India, and the president of the board of trade, with an equal number of representatives of the industry. The governing body will be the administrative council, which will include representatives of the Government departments, the Governments of India, South Africa, and Australia, all branches of the cotton industry at home and in India, the chambers of commerce of the important centers of the trade, the British Cotton Growing Association, the Imperial Institute, the Textile Institute, and the University of Manchester. Considerable progress has been made in settling the terms of the draft charter and by-laws, so that there may be no delay when once assent to the levy has been obtained from the industry as a whole.

MISSIONS AND RESEARCH.

During the past six months the present committee have already been able to make a beginning upon work which it is hoped will be undertaken on a far larger scale by the corporation. Last autumn Dr. Harland, assistant for cotton research in the department of agriculture for the West Indies, resigned this position upon his appointment as botanist to the Cotton Industry Research Association. The committee recognized the importance of securing continuity in the researches which Dr. Harland was conducting on sea-island cotton and appointed Mr. D. P. Montague, B. Sc., to proceed to St. Vincent to carry on the work on the lines initiated by Dr. Harland. They not only undertook the responsibility for Mr. Montague's salary, but also agreed to bear the cost, up to £200 a year, of incidental expenses connected with the research.

Special emphasis was laid in the committee's report on the importance of maintaining close touch with the governments of those parts of the Empire in which cotton growing might profitably be developed and of obtaining accurate information as to local conditions. To further these objects they have appointed Sir Hector Duff to undertake a mission to Nigeria and Maj. Hastings Horne to carry out similar work in Tanganyika Territory, formerly German East Africa. Maj. Horne arrived in the country in November last, and valuable reports have already been received from him. By means of such missions it is hoped to obtain information which will be of immediate assistance to the corporation in enabling them to frame schemes acceptable to the local governments for developing the cotton-growing possibilities of their respective territories.

Numerous witnesses have been examined by the committee, including officials and others familiar with cotton growing in practically every part of the Empire. The knowledge thus obtained can not fail to be of the greatest value to the body about to be established, which will also have at its disposal funds sufficient to enable it to make practical use of it.

A joint standing committee with the Cotton Industry Research Association has been set up, and the two bodies have shared the cost of certain research studentships intended to enable students to qualify themselves specially for the investigation of scientific problems connected with cotton growing.

THE CENTRAL STAFF.

The committee have given much thought to the organization of the central staff of the corporation. Offices are being sought in the neighborhood of Westminster, and in the meantime the board of trade are providing the necessary accommodation. Two gentlemen whose names will command general confidence have been selected for recommendation as director and assistant director, while Mr. L. G. Killby, B. A., B. Sc., formerly superintendent of the department of technology of the City and Guilds of London Institute, and Mr. J. C. May, B. A., formerly assistant resident in the Nyasaland protectorate and assistant political officer in Tanganyika Territory, have been appointed secretary and assistant secretary, respectively. The consideration of other appointments has necessarily been deferred until the formation of the corporation has made it possible for the director to undertake this important part of the duties of his office.

It will be clear from the above that valuable preparatory work has already been done, which will considerably facilitate the attainment of the objects which the Government and the industry, working jointly through the new corporation, now seek to secure. A new departure is thus being made; an important industry, with the cooperation of the Government, is providing a substantial sum of money to develop the sources of supply of its raw material. The importance of the work is acknowledged, and its success is not only of vital importance to the cotton industry but will add materially to the prosperity of many parts of the Empire.

CENTRAL COTTON COMMITTEE—CONSTITUTION AND ORGANIZATION.

As announced in the weekly cable from the director general of commercial intelligence, Calcutta, dated April 4 (see the Journal of Apr. 7, p. 382), a central cotton committee, with headquarters at Bombay, has been constituted as recommended by the Indian cotton committee.

COMPOSITION OF COMMITTEE.

The functions of the committee will be mainly advisory. At the outset it will be composed as follows, but additions to and alterations in its composition may be made from time to time on the recommendation of the committee.

OFFICIAL REPRESENTATIVES.

President: The agricultural adviser to the Government of India.

Members: A representative of the agricultural department in (1) Madras, (2) Bombay, (3) the Punjab, (4) the United Provinces, (5) Burma, (6) the Central Provinces and Berar, (7) Sind, and (8) the director general of commercial intelligence.

NONOFFICIAL REPRESENTATIVES.

A representative of each of the following bodies: (1) The East India Cotton Association, if established, or, in the alternative, the Bombay Cotton Trade Association; (2) the Bombay Millowners' Association; (3) the Bombay Chamber of Commerce; (4) the Ahmedabad Millowners' Association; (5) the Karachi Chamber of Commerce; (6) the Tuticorin Chamber of Commerce; and (7) the Upper Indian Chamber of Commerce.

In addition there are to be two representatives of the Central Provinces and Berar, to be nominated by the local administration from manufacturers or ginners; and also the following: (1) A representative of the Madras presidency, to be nominated by the local government from manufacturers or ginners; (2) a representative of the Punjab, to be nominated by the local government from the manufacturers, ginners, or large producers; (3 and 4) a representative each of Bengal and of Lancashire.

OTHER REPRESENTATIVES.

(1) A member of the cooperative department, official or nonofficial, to be nominated by the Government of India; (2) a representative each of the Hyderabad State; (3) of the Baroda State; and (4) a joint representative of the States in Rajputana and central India.

APPOINTMENTS AND LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS.

The members of the committee will be appointed in the first instance for a period of two years, and steps are being taken to nominate the personnel in consultation with the local governments and administrations and the Darbars concerned. Proposals have been approved by H. M., secretary of state, regarding the appointment of a secretary to the committee, and the officer selected is Mr. B. C. Burt, at present deputy director of agriculture in the United Provinces. On his appointment the secretary will be directed to submit proposals regarding his staff and the place and time of the first meeting of the committee.

The cost of the committee will be met from imperial revenues.

Subject to the submission to them for sanction of any proposals requiring it under the ordinary financial rules, the Government of India leave it to the discretion of local governments and administrations to decide the composition and details of organization of their provincial and local committees.

Mr. HARRIS. I am informed by Mr. R. L. McKellar, foreign freight traffic manager of the Southern Railway system, that the French Government is projecting cotton growing plans in its African colonies similar to the movement outlined in the British Board of Trade Journal for the British Government.

EXECUTIVE SESSION—RECESS.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 15, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

AMENDMENTS TO MEAT PACKING BILL.

Mr. NORRIS submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. KENYON submitted six amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. STERLING (for Mr. McCORMICK) submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 14th instant approved and signed the bill (S. 86) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as amended.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, as that amendment came up yesterday, and some of us are not fully informed as to it, I ask that the Secretary again state it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment as amended will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The committee amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is that the entire committee amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the entire committee amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, if no Senator desires to speak on the amendment, I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a few remarks which I desire to submit.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought it was going by default.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Maine permit me now to offer a couple of amendments for printing which I forgot to offer previously?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator from Maine.

Mr. President, I send to the desk two amendments, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the proposed amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I also send to the desk certain amendments which I desire to offer to the pending bill, and ask that they lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, the bill which is at present under consideration, although a new bill by name, has been before the Congress of the United States, in one form or another, for very many years. This method of procedure in the Government control of industries began nearly 30 or perhaps more than 30 years ago. It has had its ups and downs. This particular bill for the regulation of the packing industry first came to this body, and so far as I know since I have been a Member of the Senate, something like two years ago, possible a little more. Since that time there have been four, possibly five, bills, differing somewhat in their provisions; and I am very frank to say and glad to admit that each one, in my opinion, has been a little improvement over the others. First of all, I wish to congratulate my friend from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] for bringing out at this time a bill which is far better for the people of this country than any bill which has heretofore been framed relative to this matter.

There, of course, must be some very good reason why legislation of this character should be enacted; there should be some pressing demand for it from the people of the country. As a rule, legislation of this kind is urged by competitors of the great packing houses or the great industrial concerns of the country. I have read with much interest and great satisfaction the testimony that has been offered to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, before which committee very exhaustive hearings have been held relative to these bills for the past five years. People from different sections of the country have been here and have offered their evidence pro and con. So far as I am able to adduce from that evidence, no competitors of the packing houses have presented themselves; but I have received very many letters from different packing houses in various States of the Union in opposition to this class of legislation. Raisers of live stock and live-stock associations from all over the country have appeared before the committee in opposition to it, and by letter and telegram also have protested against this class of legislation. Chambers of commerce of nearly every State in the Union and of many cities in the different States have offered their protest. I have read very carefully much of the evidence which has been submitted—and let me say, Senators, that it embraces thousands of pages, almost—by those who have appeared before the committee, but I have yet to learn of any pressing demand from the farmers of the country and from the stock raisers of the country or from any particular source for this legislation.

We hear much nowadays in the Congress of the United States about the farmers, and many of us have bleeding hearts for the poor farmer; but let me say, Mr. President, that this class of legislation has cost the farmers of this country, the business interests, and the taxpayers of the country more than did the European war; and if Senators will give me their attention for the next few hours, I am going to prove to them the exact truth of my statement.

We have had commissions in this country for about 35 years. The great uplift and reformation on the part of the reformers began something like a third of a century ago. We have had reformers who have undertaken to reform almost everything, including our morals and our microbes. This morning I was surprised on opening my mail to find a letter inquiring how many times per diem I took a bath, how I cleaned my teeth, whether horizontally or perpendicularly, and whether I was going to support the Smith-Towner bill. It has gotten so, Senators, that I do not dare to assume that I have a puerile stomach ache for fear that some compulsory educational or health agency will grab me and take me to a hospital and remove my appendix or some other member of my body. I think so much of my appendicle apparatus that I live in constant fear all the time.

These reformers and uplifters are having, or they have had in the past 20 years, a very wonderful and fertile field, until their particular activity has got to be about the largest industry in the United States. It is surpassed only, I believe, by the steel and iron business, by agriculture, perhaps, and pork packing and printing. It has come to have a national association and organization.

Years ago—and I am glad to refer to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], because he has been in the Congress long enough to know it—we used to deal with villages and counties and States, but now we deal with everything under the sun. Any man who has a little hard luck comes to Congress for relief; any State that has a little trouble or uprising anywhere comes to Congress and wants the Congress of the United States to conduct an investigation.

We have been investigating here for 20 years, and it has cost this Government millions and millions of dollars to carry on such enterprises. We have been enacting laws and creating commissions of all kinds. During the World War everybody was willing to submit to the activities of various commissions; everybody was willing to submit to the control of some directing officer; everyone was willing to have his sugar measured and his buns counted and everything he ate weighed. Everyone felt perfectly satisfied because it was for "the winning of the war"; but right on the heels of the Food Administration we saw sugar advance to 35 cents a pound, and so long as we continued Federal control and the Government undertook to manage everybody's business we had high prices. We are just beginning to return to normal conditions.

Then we had a Fuel Administrator. Although we had a Director of Fuel in this country, who met the operators and the miners in the coal fields and determined what advances should be allowed, the matter was carried to the President of the United States, and he created a commission, and because of the rules and practices laid down by that commission we are to-day charged the high prices for coal which we are paying, and many of the coal mines have stopped doing business because they can not begin to produce coal on the basis laid down by the commission.

In 1887 we created the Interstate Commerce Commission. I propose a little later in the day to devote considerable attention to that commission. Six years ago we created the Federal Trade Commission, and to show how these bodies develop and advance and how when a commission is once fastened upon this Government it increases and rolls up, it is only necessary to say that from a small beginning we now have a Federal Trade Commission that costs at least a million dollars a year.

I have said we have had a great many reformers. We have been reforming all sorts of things, and by and by, after we have reformed everything and the reformers undertake to reform themselves, then we are going to have a bad condition in this country, because there will be nothing left for the reformers to do. They have told us what we could eat and what we could drink, and now they are going to attempt to tell us how to regulate a business so that the live-stock grower may get more for his live stock and the man who eats meat may buy it cheaper. If such a result could be brought about and I could understand how it were possible, I should be glad to support this bill.

I repeat that in 1914 we created the Federal Trade Commission. As Senators know, that organization started with a small, moderate appropriation. It consisted of only five members the first year, but there has been an increase in its appropriations, an arithmetical progression from the time of its establishment down to the present day, until now that commission costs a million dollars a year. There are now 418 employees under the Federal Trade Commission, and let me say that I assume that inside of four years every one of those employees will be a "deserving Republican." If we create another commission, it will afford places for more "deserving Republicans" as attorneys, stenographers, bookkeepers, and other employees. Tell the farmers of this country what these commissions have cost and then ask them if they want to continue creating commissions of this kind, and what will their response be? When speaking in the last campaign I confined myself to two issues; one was opposition to the League of Nations and the other was the charge of wastefulness and extravagance. At the completion of my address in every State where I spoke those in the audience who had anything to say at all would say, "Senator, why does not Congress stop the creation of commissions? Why does it not send back home the people who are now in Washington? Why not send them back to help take care of the products of the farm?" Let me say, Senators, that the farmers of this country will be quite satisfied if Congress now drives in a peg to stop the creation of any more commissions. They understand this question well. They are not to be fooled. The farmers of this country are about as intelligent as any particular class we have, and they can not be fooled by being told that we can create a commission here that will give them higher prices for their products or their live stock.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator; certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator repeal the law that provides for the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, my dear Senator, it would be impossible to do that.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not ask that question. I asked the Senator if he would if he could.

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, I do not know; it would not be possible if I wanted to. You once establish a commission here and it is here to stay. It is never abolished. Nobody that comes here is ever sent home. We had 112,000 employees in the Government departments a few years ago, and we have been trying, on both sides of this Chamber, to send some of them home, and we have not succeeded to any great extent.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator further?

Mr. FERNALD. At all times.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator answer my question, if he wants to answer it? I do not mean that he has to answer it; but I am assuming, now, for the purpose of the question, that the Senator has it in his power to abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission. Would he do it?

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, that is a very fair question, and if my friend will just be patient with me I will answer it fully, because, first of all, I want to show him what the Interstate Commerce Commission has done in the last 34 years, and then I will leave it to him as to whether he thinks it ought to be abolished or not. We have only until 1 o'clock to-morrow to discuss this bill. I am willing to be interrupted, and shall be glad to answer any questions; but the discussion of any particular issue would take me very far afield.

Mr. NORRIS. My question does not require that. Of course, I realize that the Senator is under no obligation to answer it unless he wants to, but he does not need to discuss the policy of the Interstate Commerce Commission to answer the question that I have propounded; and, if he will permit me, I will couple it with another one.

Mr. FERNALD. Put them all together, my dear Senator, and I will answer them all.

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator also, if he had it within his power now, whether he would abolish the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; I will answer that right offhand.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, why can not the Senator answer the other question?

Mr. FERNALD. I want to discuss that. The Interstate Commerce Commission has had a great deal to do with the utilities of the country, and I should like to discuss that a little more fully.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. KENDRICK. I understood the Senator to say that he had read the hearings before the Agricultural Committee on the so-called packers bill.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. KENDRICK. Does the Senator recall that in many cases witnesses testified that their principal objection was first to the arbitrary power to be exercised by one man, and that these witnesses who were opposed to legislation stated in numbers of cases that they would not object to a commission to control this situation? Does the Senator recall those statements?

Mr. FERNALD. I am frank to say to the Senator from Wyoming, for whom I have the very highest respect, that in my judgment, while I have not had any conference with the Big Five packers whom this bill undertakes to control, from what I learn I think they care very little about whether this bill is enacted or not. They will be able to take care of themselves, and if any hardship is imposed on them it will be carried on to the consumer; but the people of this Government are opposed to this class of legislation, and the farmers of this country know, because they are very intelligent people, that if we are ever to get back to prosperity everybody will have to be prosperous. You can not make the live-stock industry prosperous unless you make the cotton industry prosperous, and you can not make the cotton industry prosperous unless you make the wool business prosperous, and you can not make any one particular class of individuals in this country prosperous without bringing about the prosperity of the whole country.

I think that answers my friend.

Mr. KENDRICK. I just want to point out to the Senator the fact that these witnesses did testify that they objected to the one-man power given under the provisions of the bill and said they would not object to a commission. Thereupon the form of the bill was changed to meet that objection; and at very recent meetings or conferences of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that form of the bill was changed again to meet the views of those who opposed the legislation, and the commission form of the bill is now eliminated.

First it was put in to meet their objections to the one-man power and to satisfy them on that point. Now it has been changed back, and the commission has been eliminated at the suggestion of those who opposed the legislation. I wanted the Senator to understand that there is no commission provided for.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; I understand that now it is left in the power of one man. There is to be only one commissioner.

Mr. KENDRICK. He is under the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, yes; of course, he has to be under the direction of somebody; but he has authority to employ attorneys, and he has the power to employ auditors and bookkeepers, and he has authority to do almost everything. As the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] said the other day, he has more power than William of Hohenzollern ever had, and you have given him every authority to go into a man's business and dictate just what its policy shall be.

Let me say right here that if you go down to the Patent Office with three kinds of oil, and you combine those oils and make one compound, and any employee there divulges that secret, he can be sent to the penitentiary; and yet under the authority given this commissioner he has a right to go into any packing establishment in this country and get any secret process, because he can demand their books and their papers and every scrap of paper that is in that establishment, and he can commercialize that knowledge and go into business for himself; and I am not willing to grant that authority to anybody. It has taken me 40 years to learn a little something about my business, and now it is proposed to put the packing business under a man who does not know anything about it, who must be practically an imbecile. It says that he can not be connected with and he can not understand anything about the business. You have got to take some fellow who knows nothing about the business, and yet he has the right to go into any establishment and get any information he asks for, and commercialize it, if he pleases, in his own interest or that of his friends.

I started in to tell a little something about the Federal Trade Commission, because I was quite ready to give a very prompt and definite answer to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. I want to read something about it, because after these commissions are created that is about the end of our interest in them. We expect them to go on then and do as they please, but I want the Senate to know something about this commission. I got this information from the Library of Congress legislative reference service, which, by the way, I have found to be very correct, and in any statements that I may make you will find the figures taken either from them or from Poor's Manual or from the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This statement was compiled from the Treasury Department's digest of appropriations for the support of the Government of the United States, with the exception of the two years indicated, 1897 and 1898. That has reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The first appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission about which I am able to get any information was in 1916. The appropriation was $373,333.37. In 1917 the appropriation for that commission was $444,080; in 1918, $822,920; in 1919, $1,677,540; in 1920, $1,205,000; and in 1921, $955,000.

There has been an increase from year to year, a doubling in some cases, but usually an increase of about $100,000 to $500,000; and the number of employees has been increased from five, the first membership, to 418—always enlarging the scope of their activities, always coming to Congress and presenting some reason why they should have more employees and why they should enter into additional lines of activity.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARRIS. I am sure the Senator is not familiar with the work done by the Federal Trade Commission, or he would not make the statement he has just made. I have the highest regard for the distinguished Senator from Maine, and I know he would not intentionally do an injustice to anyone.

During the war, in some of the years that the Senator has mentioned about the appropriations being so large, the Federal Trade Commission did all the cost-accounting work of the Government. All the steel, copper, manufactured goods prices, and all the prices of everything else which the Government purchased, amounting to billions of dollars during the war, were determined by the cost of production that the Federal Trade Commission found. Those cost figures were used in the purchase of these things. The Federal Trade Commission handled the distribution, cost, and price of coal until the Fuel Administration was created, and they did a great many other things not in the line of their regular duties, such as the enforcement of the trading with the enemy act relating to patents, and so forth.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; I am quite familiar with their work. I have had more or less to do with that. I have visited the commission on several and divers occasions, and for many reasons. I regret that my old friend the ex-Senator from Maryland, Mr. Smith, is not present to help me answer the question of the distinguished Senator from Georgia. He, with the present Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] has on several occasions called on the Federal Trade Commission with me, and I should be glad if they were present; but, inasmuch as they are not, I am not going into that matter. I am just going to read a letter here. I have a great many letters, but I am going to read this one because this company is doing business in about 8 or 10 States. It is a very well known company, and I want to show the activity of the Federal Trade Commission. I believe the Senate is desirous of the information that is contained in this letter, and I am sure the people of this country are quite interested.

I knew something about this case, and I asked the president of this company to call on me, which he did recently. He is not one of the Big Five packers, but he is a very large operator in condensed milk, an item which was perhaps of more benefit to this country during the war than any other one particular article; and while we make no claim that the packers did anything more than their honest duty, their patriotic, loyal duty to this country, I want to say that if it had not been for the Big Five packers we would not have been able to feed our soldiers overseas. One company shipped 25,000 carloads of beef during the war. They were called upon to furnish a thousand cars a week, and more than 760,000,000 pounds of meat were furnished by one of the great packers.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator. I do not say that that is any reason why they ought not to come under the general law. They were doing no more than was their duty as everybody undertook to do it in that period.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator have any objection to stating which one of the packers that was?

Mr. FERNALD. As I recall, it was Swift—either Swift or Armour.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator know that in doing that Swift & Co., on a capitalization a great part of which was furnished by the consumers of meat, made a profit of 33 per cent?

Mr. FERNALD. Let me answer the Senator from Nebraska. This opens up a very large question, and I can see where I am likely to be on this floor for a long time. This question of capital stock is not generally understood by a great many of the people of this country. I know concerns that have a capital stock of only $20,000 that have invested capital of hundreds of thousands of dollars. That represents nothing. A man might make 33 per cent on his capital stock and yet not make 2 per cent on his invested capital. That represents nothing. That matter has been thrashed out here many times before.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator know that in this particular case it represented the net worth of the concern, and that a good deal of it was capital which had been contributed by the people, and that the 33 per cent was reckoned on that?

Mr. FERNALD. In answer to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska let me say that I know that the packers of this country did not make one-half what the Government permitted them to make during the war. I think that is a very fair answer to that question. If we undertook to discuss this capital stock and invested capital proposition, it would take more time than I have between now and to-morrow noon. I was talking about this condensed milk company, and what the Federal Trade Commission did for it, and what they are now doing for it; and the reason the business men of this country are so much opposed to Government control.

I know something about the Federal Trade Commission. I happened to be president of the largest industrial business in this country at the time the commission was created. I was for the commission. I felt that it might do a great service to the business men of this country. I wanted new fields opened up in South America and New Zealand and other foreign countries for American products, and I felt through this instrumentality we might possibly do that. I knew there were a great many small concerns doing that particular line of business which were unable to present their wares in foreign countries, but by combination of these small packers we might be able to establish agencies in those countries, and I looked forward to great results from the activities of the Federal Trade Commission.

Just as soon as they got into action they failed to act as an adviser, and you can not get a bit of advice from them now as to any business proposition. They became prosecutors of the business men. They have placed hardships in their way and harassed and heckled them and made it so hard to do business that there is scarcely a business man in this country who favors any kind of Government regulation. The activities of the Federal Trade Commission and the expenses of that commission are what have brought this bill into contempt more than anything else.

Mr. HARRIS. Under the law the Federal Trade Commission has no right to license business and tell business men in advance what they can do and what they shall not do.

Mr. FERNALD. This letter will explain that exactly. That is just what I am complaining about. That is just the reason that I find fault with the Federal Trade Commission. It is their activity and their line of procedure to which I object, and I am going to take up further another commission that has cost a great deal more than this.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in what the Senator has said, and I have been very much interested in the activities of the Federal Trade Commission. It seems to me the Senator is making rather a broad indictment of the Federal Trade Commission. He is criticizing its work as a whole, and it seems to me that he ought to be a little more specific in the references he has made. Of course, I do not mean to criticize the Senator at all for his observations, and believing as he does, he was doubtless justified in saying what he did. But, as I understand it, the Federal Trade Commission has as one of its principal functions the duty of seeing that there is no unfair competition in the country.

I should like to have the Senator point out something which the Federal Trade Commission has done along that line which it ought not to have done.

Mr. FERNALD. I have the evidence right in my hand, Senator, and if permitted to read it, I think I, just a layman, will prove to the Senator, a good lawyer, that what I state is absolutely true.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sure the information will be enlightening, and I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. FERNALD. This letter is from the president of the Helvetia Milk Condensing Co., who have canneries in eight or nine States. I asked the president of that company to write this letter, because his complaint was quite in line with hundreds of other complaints I have had from other business men of the country, and it is the unwarranted interference the Trade Commission are guilty of to which I want to call the attention of the Senator from New Mexico, and which has brought forth this criticism. This letter happens to be from Missouri, and is addressed to me.

I have known this gentleman for very many years as a prominent and honorable business man, like most of the business men of this country. They are not all scoundrels, they are not all crooks, and wherever you find one who is, I am just as anxious as any man in this country to send him to the penitentiary. The letter reads:

"HELVETIA MILK CONDENSING CO.,
"St. Louis, Mo., June 7, 1921.

"Hon. B. M. FERNALD,
"Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SENATOR FERNALD: Following my talk with you in Washington last week on the subject of the Federal Trade Commission, I have given some thought to the subject, and still have the feeling which I expressed to you at the time of our conference; that is, that it is difficult to discuss the functioning of the Federal Trade Commission without seeming to scold.

"I think the idea of the commission as it was originally conceived met generally with some approval on the part of business men. The whole situation under which business interests had to proceed at their peril with reference to antitrust legislation was a difficult one."

Lawyers can hardly understand or appreciate the troubles which come to the business man who is not familiar with legislation or with law. The letter continues:

"There was a very general idea that the Federal Trade Commission would give some assistance to people who wanted to keep within the law and yet carry on their business so as to best serve the public, which is, after all, the best measure of how business can best serve its own interests.

"That hope doesn't seem to have been realized. The Federal Trade Commission, I understand, has steadfastly refused to allow itself to act in any advisory capacity. It has taken the position with regard to its activities that business men must proceed at their peril. It has aggravated rather than improved the situation, in that it has undertaken to exercise a more general regulation than any statutory provision prior to the creation of the Federal Trade Commission contemplated. It has contended that under section 5 the Federal Trade Commission has the power to say that any activity by business concerns constitutes an unfair method of competition. This position has been several times denied by United States circuit courts of appeal, and in the case of, I think, Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, the Supreme Court of the United States denied this measure of authority to the commission.

"It seems, however, rather slow to discard the exercise of such control. In 1918 the commission filed a complaint against Helvetia Milk Condensing Co., charging it with the practice of an unfair method of competition, because of the fact that it guaranteed its prices to its customers against its own subsequent price decline.

"In the evaporated-milk business each packer of evaporated milk who has an established brand sold generally in the markets, announced from time to time its selling price. The Helvetia Co. follows this practice. It publishes prices from time to time to the jobbing trade and those prices are uniform within given territories to all jobbers in those territories. The effect of the guaranty is that on goods sold to-day at, let us say, $5 per case, the jobber is protected on any stocks he may have on hand if the price of the Helvetia Co. two weeks from to-day should be declined to $4.50 per case. On such stock as the jobber had in his warehouse on the occasion of such a decline we would pay him a rebate of 50 cents per case.

"This practice had been under investigation by the Federal Trade Commission for more than two years prior to the time the complaint was filed against this company. The investigators for the commission had the matter in charge. The attorneys for the commission and the economists for the commission have admitted that they had no evidence that the Helvetia Co. had used this practice in any way different from what it had been used by all other companies engaged in this line of business. It was a general practice followed by everybody packing canned milk. The practice had prevailed for more than 30 years."

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator just give me a little bit of information in connection with that?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does this company of which the Senator speaks alone sell a particular article, or is it an article manufactured by other concerns?

Mr. FERNALD. Other companies, very many other companies, and they all had the same practice.

Mr. SIMMONS. Unless there is a trust, a monopoly, which takes in all the producers of this particular product, why would the reduction in the prices of this Helvetia Co. embarrass the sellers of this product, unless that decline took place all along the line, and included all the producers of that product? In other words, is not the letter which the Senator is reading in itself conclusive evidence that this product which he is talking about is a monopolized product?

Mr. FERNALD. No. If the Senator will permit me, I want to explain to him the practice of the trade.

Mr. SIMMONS. I just wanted the information about that point.

Mr. FERNALD. I know the Senator is anxious to have the correct information, and I should be very glad to give it to him, because I think I understand this situation, and the practices and methods of the business along these lines.

First of all, let me say to the Senator that oftentimes, and right now, packers of canned goods and condensed milk go out and make a price on their goods. I will cite my own business, because I know about that, and I know what has been the practice and habit in the canning trade.

Mr. SIMMONS. They all make the same price?

Mr. FERNALD. No. We make our price, for instance, on our brands. I go to you and say, "Senator, our price on corn this year is going to be $1.30." You say to me, "The prices of all kinds of goods are declining. I do not care to buy goods at that figure. If I knew there was to be no decline, I might place an order for my usual quantity of a thousand cases a year."

Later on you write me and say, "I am going to send my salesmen out. I would like to offer that brand I have used for many years. If I can be assured that the price will not be any lower on this, you can book my order for a thousand cases."

I write back to you and say, "I will book your order for a thousand cases of corn at $1.30 per thousand. If before these goods are delivered to you we lower our own price on that brand, you shall have the advantage of that price. If we drop our own price on this particular brand of goods which you are buying 10 cents a dozen or 20 cents a dozen, you shall have the advantage of that decline."

Then you are willing to purchase.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can understand how that might be a proper arrangement.

Mr. FERNALD. That is all there is to this case.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the agreement was, "If the wholesale price or the manufacturer's price of this article shall decline, then we guarantee you the investment," it might be all right; but when it does not include the manufacturer's selling price, or the wholesale selling price, of all the manufacturers, but the contract only provides against a decline by one particular producer when there are hundreds of producers in the country, I do not see how that would help him unless the uniform decline took place all through the country. He does not need protection against a decline in your price unless there is a decline in the prices of other manufacturers. If he does, then that, to my mind, establishes a trust in that article and would imply that the decline which takes place in your goods also takes place in the goods of all other producers.

Mr. FERNALD. Naturally, if other producers or packers made a lower price the jobber would come to me and say, "I can buy other brands of goods at a lower price." That might influence me to reduce my price. But I have no control over what other packers shall do.

It has been a common practice that we might induce the jobber to place his order for goods. Let me say that I have been in the packing business, actively engaged, with my money invested and all that is in me for 34 years. I wish to bring out a fact right now, and I assume that the same fact is true of other packers. In the operation of our cannery there has never been a time in the 34 years, not a single year, that we have not had sold at this time of the year 75 per cent of our goods that we expected to pack in September. This year, up to this date, not a single case of our goods has been sold, for the reason that we are on a declining market. Jobbers are waiting, hoping the price will drop still lower. That is one of the things with which the packer has to contend. If I could be assured that our goods would be sold this year for cost, I would be the happiest man, almost, in the United States.

We have to make our price to the farmers. We have to place our orders for cans. We have to buy our labels. We have to buy and pay for every ingredient that goes into the cans. Yet to-day we do not know what we are going to get for our goods, nor where they are going, and pretty soon they will be in the cans and have to be paid for, and it is going to take a great many million dollars to do that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator, if I may be permitted to conclude the reading of the letter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to get clear in my mind, as I think perhaps other Senators would, what there is about the Federal Trade Commission that prevents the Senator from doing business profitably, and whether he thinks he could do it profitably this year if there were no commission in existence.

Mr. FERNALD. It does not enter into this that I am speaking of now at all. I will take that up later in a general way. I am just showing by the reading of this letter, if I may be permitted to read it, how they are interfering with this man's business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator does not claim that the existence of the Federal Trade Commission now makes it impossible for him to do business at a profit this year?

Mr. FERNALD. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wonder why the Senator insists that his business is so unprofitable this year?

Mr. FERNALD. I merely wish to convey the thought that this is a very inopportune time to place a hardship upon the packers of the country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. During the existence of the Federal Trade Commission the Senator's business has certainly been prosperous?

Mr. FERNALD. If the Senator will permit me, I will show by this letter how it does interfere with everybody's business. I am sorry not to be able to read it without interruption.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator cite any more prosperous period in the history of the United States than during the period covered by the existence of the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. FERNALD. We have had great prosperity in this country, not so great as we had before, and I shall take that up later. I shall show what the railroads have done since we have had the Interstate Commerce Commission and that this year it has cost the country more than a billion dollars——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is wandering.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator is endeavoring to get me far afield from the question I am endeavoring to discuss.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is discussing the Federal Trade Commission, and I challenge him to point to a more prosperous period of business in the United States than the period covered by the existence of the Federal Trade Commission, of which he complains.

Mr. FERNALD. If the Senator will permit me to continue the reading of the letter I shall be glad. The reading has been so disconnected that I doubt if the Senator who inquired for the information in the beginning can get the connection, but it has something to do with the Federal Trade Commission. I hope I may be permitted to finish reading the letter, and then I am quite willing to be questioned on any subject. I read:

"The economists and attorneys for the commission have characterized the matter as an economic question and not a legal question."

That is the very thing I have been speaking about, that if I guarantee my goods and the price of the goods and that if I make a decline in them myself the same price will be made to the jobber who first buys.

"The taking of testimony in this case began in November, 1919."

That is not quite two years ago.

"It has been carried on from time to time, the last session having been held in Washington on the 4th and 5th of May, 1921. Up to date 1,947 pages of testimony have been taken. The next setting of the case is for the 7th of July, in Washington, for the taking of further testimony.

"The methods of the commission in this case involve too many things to discuss in this letter. I shall give attention only to two or three points in that connection.

"Before taking up those points I want to note that it is material to inquire whether the Federal Trade Commission is a prosecuting or investigating body. I do not know what Congress had in mind in creating the commission as to what its functions should be, but I do know that members of the commission and attorneys for the commission in 1916 emphasized the fact that the commission was an investigating body; that the filing of a formal complaint raised no presumption against the respondent, but was merely the method by which the commission started to make its record in the investigation of the subject, there having been previously a mere preliminary investigation for the purpose of determining whether a formal investigation was advisable.

"The present attitude of the commission seems far removed from this idea. In the original investigation of the subject of price guaranty the commission sent out questionnaires to various manufacturers. In reply to those questionnaires they received a number of letters. Those letters were written generally in the early part of the year 1916. The complaint against the Helvetia Co. was filed in December, 1918. The first taking of testimony, as already noted, was in November, 1919.

"A number of the concerns wrote letters in 1916 expressing themselves as opposed to the practice of guaranteeing prices. In the trial of the complaint against the Helvetia Co. the commission offered a lot of these letters in evidence. In most instances the companies which had written letters, after further consideration of the subject, had very much modified their opinions and had come to conclusions very different from those expressed in the letters. The letters generally did not state facts, but merely expressed opinions. In one instance the sales manager of one of the companies which had written a letter to the commission in 1916 was subpœnaed to testify for the commission in the case against the Helvetia Co. This witness came to Washington and informed the representatives of the commission that his opinion was very different from what it was when the letter was written in 1916. The consequence was that the witness was not put on the stand. He was permitted to go home without testifying, but the letter was introduced in evidence. I protested and pointed out that the representative had been there ready to testify and it was neither fair to that company nor the respondent to use a letter more than three years old when first-hand competent testimony might have been had.

"None of the letters introduced was competent evidence. They were objected to on that ground, but were nevertheless admitted by the examiner into the record. Protest was made against the admission of all of the letters, and all of the companies from whom the letters originally came had been permitted to intervene in the case. They were represented by counsel at the hearing, and counsel offered to produce representatives of those companies as witnesses. The record shows this question:"

Now, this is a very important part of the letter:

"Mr. NARDIN. Mr. Davies, I would like to ask if you are willing to produce your clients here to testify?

"Mr. DAVIES. Yes; unquestionably."

Mr. Davies was counsel for the companies whose letters were offered in evidence.

"I offer this little story as an indication of how completely the commission has become a prosecuting agency. The attorneys conducting the case for the commission, the examiners, and the so-called economists all seem to feel that a case had to be established against the respondent in order to justify the filing of the complaint. It is of course possible that employees of the commission should fall into this state of mind contrary to the feeling of the commission, but it was my observation from an argument on two occasions before the members of the commission themselves that the attitude of the commission is that they must maintain the complaint once it is filed.

"It does not require legal training or experience to enable one to see how unfortunate the situation is when the body which is to sit in judgment becomes also the prosecutor in the case. It is as if a prosecuting attorney was to pass finally on the innocence or guilt of the accused.

"One other development of this case is, it seems to me, instructive on the activity of the commission from the business man's standpoint. I have already indicated that the commission has had this matter under investigation for two and a half years before the complaint was filed. In presenting its case against the Helvetia Co., the commission offered as a witness Dr. Kemper Simpson, who called himself an economist. He was 26 years of age at the time he gave his testimony. On cross-examination he gave this testimony:

"'Q. What is your age, Dr. Simpson?—A. Twenty-six.

"'Q. How long have you been out of college?—A. Since 1917.

"'Q. Two years?—A. Since June, 1917.

"'Q. How long were you in college?—A. Seven years.

"'Q. Prior to going to college, what business were you engaged in?—A. The business of college.

"'Q. The business of going to college?—A. Yes, sir.

"'Q. That is the only business in which you had been engaged until June, 1917?—A. Yes, sir.

"'Q. Were you ever connected with the condensed milk industry in any capacity?—A. No, sir.

"'Q. With any commercial establishment?—A. No, sir.

"'Q. With any manufacturing concern?—A. No, sir.

"'Q. You had no experience at all in merchandising or manufacturing business?—A. Do you mean by experience being actually on the pay roll of these companies? If you do, I would say I never had.'

"This witness covered 25 pages on direct examination in undertaking to testify as an expert on manufacturing and merchandising methods. He did not hesitate to express positive opinions on questions of fact, some of which opinions were controverted by direct testimony on points of fact by 15 experienced business men.

"This witness stated that he had conducted an investigation of the milk industry and collected data on which his opinions were based. None of the data was offered in evidence.

"The so-called testimony of this witness was utterly worthless from the standpoint of legal testimony. It was made up either of opinion on points on which the witness had had no experience whatever or of statements of fact which were merely hearsay. On cross-examination an effort was made to get him to answer a hypothetical question; that is, to give the opinion of an expert based on facts which were actually in the record. It took about 30 minutes to get him to answer the question. It was perfectly clear that his answer, from the facts stated, would have to be contrary to opinions which he had formerly expressed, and he was so certain of his opinions that he would not give a contrary answer, even when it was in response to a hypothetical question.

"It requires a reading of this testimony and some analysis of the case to get a full appreciation of the absurdity of the attitude of these employees of the commission—attorney and economist. But the whole story may be summed up in this:

"The commission filed a complaint against us on what they called an economic question. No lawyer for the commission, nor for any respondent, has ever contended that there was any legal point involved. We have been put to the time and expense of taking nearly 2,000 pages of testimony, and the end is not yet. No court would ever sustain a finding that unfair competition had been practiced by any of the concerns engaged in packing evaporated milk when all have followed exactly the same practice in exactly the same way. An investigating body approaching the problem in the spirit of fair investigation must long since have discovered that the whole subject was a matter outside of the commission's jurisdiction, but the employees of the commission and the commission itself, having filed a complaint, now seem to feel the necessity of finding that some wrong has been committed. It seems to me that any unbiased person, with any conception of the problems of business, must concede that it is intolerable to have business under the attempted supervision of a body which proceeds in the spirit of prosecution rather than in the spirit of investigation, which observes no legal rules or legal limitations, which recognizes none of the limitations of rules of evidence, and which once having filed a complaint feels that it must justify its former action by finding that wrong has been done.

"I do not know whether all of this will be of any use to you or not, or whether I have given you sufficient information to show you the picture of the commission as we have seen it function. We are not disposed to scold about the regulation, but we are rather impatient of the months of wasted time and of the expense which we have had to incur in this useless and absurd proceeding.

"Yours, very truly,

"W. T. NARDIN."

Senators, I refer to that one particular letter, because it represents scores of other letters, and I assume that I am not the only Senator who has received such communications.

Mr. HARRIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator does not know, perhaps, that most of the manufacturers who are engaged in the milk business, to which he has referred and in connection with which the Federal Trade Commission stopped certain unfair practices, acknowledged that they were all practicing unfair methods of competition, and they wanted the Federal Trade Commission to make a ruling so that they could stop it.

Mr. FERNALD. I am very glad to have Senators ask questions in reference to this matter, because I think I am rather familiar with business practices along these lines. This has been my business for 35 years. We sell goods in nearly every State—I presume in every State—in the Union; certainly we sell a great many in the State of the Senator from Georgia. The methods have been along the same lines, for all manufacturers have to adopt practically the same methods. If some man in Maine, packing the same line of goods that I do, makes a price, naturally I have got to be within reasonable reach of that price. I may, by having advertised my brands and goods and having a reputation for packing fine articles, be able in some instances to get a little more than some other man; and in some particular line which he packs he may get more than I do; but this business, first of all, let me say, is a business where a man either succeeds or makes a failure, and usually very quickly.

It is one of the simplest problems in the world, that every Senator on the floor can readily understand. There is nothing that appeals to a man so much as the food which he takes into his stomach. Three times a day a man goes to the table, and if there is an article on the table which his wife sets before him, something that is particularly fine, no matter what it is, he asks, "Who packed those goods?" She has already looked at the label and knows who is the packer. The husband says, "This is very fine"—if it is fine—"whenever you get anything more in this line of goods, get the goods that are packed by this packer, because this is the best thing I have ever eaten." That makes the demand for that particular line of goods. If it is very poor, the husband says, "Do not, for heaven's sake, get any more of that brand of goods"; and the manufacturer of that brand goes out of business very shortly. However, after long years of experience, the housewives of this country have become familiar with the names of the packers of various commodities, the name of the packer is on every single can—and those cans run into the millions and millions, and go into the millions of homes in this country—and so the names of the packers have become bywords; they have become familiar. The housewives of the country know the names of the packers as well as I know the names of Senators, because they constantly read their names on the cans.

As I have said, if the packer is a reliable, honest, expert packer and produces goods of excellent quality and sells them at a fair price, his goods become generally known and generally wanted, and he builds up a big business. He may have started in a small way; but he requires more goods, gradually expands, builds more canneries, and by and by gets to be one of the big packers. That is how the business of the meat packers has become so tremendously large. Within my time, and within the memory of other Senators in this body, the fathers of some of the men whose names appear as the Big Five packers were selling sausages from a basket on the streets, but they packed good sausages; they made sausages that the people wanted; and they could get a good price for them. The packer who began in that small way developed his business until to-day, perhaps, his name represents one of the Big Five packers of the country.

It is a business that lends itself to advertising, perhaps, more than any other business. I refer now to the packing of canned goods. Further, it leads either into a big business or, as I have said, the man goes out of business very shortly. That applies to every single element of the business.

I remember in the early days when all of the tin cans in the country were made by hand. We had to employ men to make cans by hand with a tinker's iron. I remember those days. That custom was in vogue when I started in business. We used to make our cans by hand; men worked all winter making cans by hand. Then, in 1888, some ingenious mechanic invented a machine that would manufacture cans and would manufacture a perfect can. In the old days it was impossible to make perfect cans. A man who made cans by hand would become careless and 5 or 6 or, perhaps, 10 or 12 cans out of every hundred would be poor. If the can was poor the contents of the can spoiled and became worthless. However, an ingenious mechanic invented a device that would make cans by machinery, and instead of making 700 or 800 cans a day, as a boy and man would do, that machine would make cans as fast as one could feed the plate into the machine. So cans were made by the hundreds of thousands, and they were perfect cans. The manufacturers of the cans guaranteed that there should be no more than two poor cans in a hundred, and they gave us, as packers, the guaranty that if we would buy the cans which they manufactured, and at the end of the season more than 2 per cent proved to be imperfect, they would not only pay for the cans but they would pay for the contents of the cans. That machine, of course, was bought up by men who had money. The man who invented the machine, like most inventors, was a poor man, and men who had money to develop and build the machine took hold with him as partners and they established great plants in the country for the manufacture of cans. Those plants grew to be very large.

Let me say that in 1888 the price of 2-pound tin cans was $22.50 per thousand, but when the plants for the manufacture of cans became established and they were able to make cans by the hundreds of thousands instead of six or seven hundred cans a day, the price kept dropping and dropping until it had dropped from $22.50 to $11 per thousand. I remember very well talking with the president of a great can manufacturing plant and saying to him that I hoped the day would come when we might buy a 2-pound can for a cent. He said it only costs one cent and a mill to make a can, and I believe we shall be able yet to sell you 2-pound cans for $10 a thousand, or a cent apiece. They have cut the price of cans squarely in two; but this great business, of course, so developed that some people very soon began to call it a monopoly and to assert that one concern controlled the can business, notwithstanding the fact that the price of cans had been cut in two. So an investigation was inaugurated and an indictment brought against the company and a trial was had, which lasted for many months. I remember that as a packer of canned goods I was called as a witness, and I remained in New York for several weeks, because I knew some phases of the canning business. It was decided, after the American Can Co. had been put to an expense of several hundred thousand dollars, that if the organization was a monopoly it was a good monopoly, and it has been allowed to continue business ever since and has proved one of the greatest benefits that ever came to the canning business. The establishment of the American Can Co. and the establishment of other great enterprises have been of vast benefit to the people of this country. I was reading only recently——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator how the decision was reached to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. FERNALD. There was no decision; they allowed that it might be a monopoly, but that its activities brought no harm or damage to the country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Who allowed that?

Mr. FERNALD. The judge of the court. The Senator can find the case, I think.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that it was settled by processes provided by the law creating the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. FERNALD. No; the Federal Trade Commission had nothing to do with it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is not the Senator talking about the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. FERNALD. Does the Senator want me to talk about the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was not the Federal Trade Commission in existence at that time?

Mr. FERNALD. I do not think it was.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I supposed the Senator was making an attack on the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. FERNALD. No; I am not now talking about the Federal Trade Commission, but if the Senator wants to hear a little more about it, there are many more cases that I could cite of its unjust interference.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is very interesting to listen to a practical business man who understands all the details in connection with a big enterprise of this sort, but in order to have the situation a little clearer in my mind I should like to ask the Senator a question. He has referred to cans and to canners and then to packers. It is not clear in my mind whether the cans that he mentions are used for canning vegetables as well as meat or live-stock products.

Mr. FERNALD. They are, Senator; yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator would not call a man who is engaged in putting up vegetables in cans a packer?

Mr. FERNALD. No; we call such an individual a canner. There is a distinction between the canner and the packer.

Mr. FLETCHER. A packer slaughters live stock and puts up live-stock products?

Mr. FERNALD. "Meat products" is the term usually applied.

Mr. FLETCHER. "Meat products"?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. That includes what, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. FERNALD. It includes the slaughtering of cattle, sheep, lambs, hogs, and poultry.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then the canner does what?

Mr. FERNALD. The canner puts up vegetables and fruit; that is the distinction.

Mr. FLETCHER. Are not meat products canned?

Mr. FERNALD. They are put up in cans and they are called "packed canned goods." The distinction is that all the packers of vegetables and fruits are called canners, and the packers of meat products are called packers.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand.

Mr. FERNALD. I have read the appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission year by year, and showed how they had increased from $373,000 in 1916 to $1,205,000 in 1920. The total appropriations for that commission have been $5,477,873.37, and they are still going on. I am not undertaking to abolish the Federal Trade Commission, because, as I said a few moments ago, once a commission is created, like the poor, it is with us forever.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is precisely the point that I am trying to get at—whether or not the Senator is arguing against the present bill because a commission is to be created or a commissioner appointed; that we have had other commissions that were worthless, and so on——

Mr. FERNALD. That is it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And that therefore the Senator is arguing that the Federal Trade Commission has been a useless branch of the Government.

Mr. FERNALD. Precisely.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. In that connection, I happen to have here a brief sketch of features of the legal work of the Federal Trade Commission and the inquiries made by it through its economic division since its organization. I have not studied this document with any great care, but from a mere casual examination of it, it seems to me that the Federal Trade Commission has done a tremendously good work for this country, and that in the face of its accomplishments the Senator ought not to use it as an illustration against the creation of another commission.

The Federal Trade Commission has had under consideration problems of great economic interest to the whole country, and the Congress itself has requested that commission to make various investigations, which it has made, upon subjects in connection with which the reports of the commission have been of very great value to the Congress. I am not sure but that I ought to ask to have inserted in the RECORD at this time this brief sketch of what the Federal Trade Commission has done. I think that it would be enlightening to the Senate and to the country; and, Mr. President, I will ask that this brief sketch of features of the legal work of the Federal Trade Commission be inserted in the RECORD. I think it will demonstrate that the commission has justified its existence; that it has rendered a return of advantage to this country a thousandfold in excess of the few dollars which have been appropriated for its activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. FERNALD. I will be very glad to have the sketch referred to by the Senator inserted in the RECORD, but I would prefer that it should not be inserted in the midst of my remarks.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have no objection to its being inserted after the Senator's speech.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I was about to make that suggestion.

Mr. FERNALD. I thank the Senator; I am perfectly willing to have the sketch inserted after the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FERNALD. I am sure that every Senator who speaks here speaks with a great desire to impart absolute facts.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question right along the line of the expense of the Federal Trade Commission? As I remember the figures that the Senator read, they show that in the last year there was paid to keep the Federal Trade Commission going something over a million dollars.

Mr. FERNALD. In 1920, $1,205,000.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator that that is almost as much as Swift & Co. paid for advertising in the same year.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that the Federal Trade Commission turned back to the Treasury some two or three hundred thousand dollars, and for that reason the appropriation for the commission this year is very much less than it was then. They are the only department of this Government that have turned back into the Treasury money appropriated to them, because they could not use it.

Mr. FERNALD. I am very glad to hear that. The appropriation this year, as I understand, was $955,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right; yes.

Mr. FERNALD. $100,000, I think, was added in the Senate to the House bill for the Federal Trade Commission; was it not?

Mr. JOHNSON. Last session; yes.

Mr. FERNALD. Last session an extra $100,000 was added to the House bill.

I started to say that I have the utmost confidence in every Senator, and that he desires to get at the facts of these matters; but very carelessly a statement was made on the floor the other day by one of the Senators that this pure-food legislation had been opposed by the packers of the country, and that every time any legislation was suggested the packers would show up and oppose it. I want to read something to show that that is not so. I happened to be present at a meeting of the canners of this country, and let me say that some of the packers are members of the National Canners' Association, and I want to prove my statements as I go along. Sometimes, in quoting figures, where there were millions of dollars I have refrained from mentioning the thousands or the hundreds, and I want to be correct about this thing.

These are excerpts from the report of the Annual Convention of the Western Packers' Canned Goods Association and the Atlantic State Packers' Association held at Buffalo, New York, February 12-16, 1907, at which meeting the National Canners' Association was formally organized. I read from the report on the president's addresses.

The committee to which you referred the president's addresses—

That means the addresses of the president of the association—

Does hereby respectfully make as a partial report the following:

First. That one of the principal purposes which inspired the formation of a national association of packers of pure canned food, which had its inception at Columbus two years ago, namely, the passage of a national pure food law, has been accomplished. That during the consideration by Congress of the pure-food legislation said national association, particularly through Mr. Frank E. Gorrell, of Bel Air, Md., secretary of the executive committee, performed valuable services in connection with the passage of a law in its present form, and for which services the canning industry should be exceedingly appreciative.

* * * * * * *

ADDRESS OF SAMUEL F. HASEROT, OF CLEVELAND, OHIO, ON THE SUBJECT OF "THE SELLER'S GUARANTY."

* * * * * * *

A year ago, in convention assembled at Atlantic City, you voted unanimously in favor of the passage of a national pure food act. Back up your records of a year ago by coming squarely out in the open with your hand outstretched and presenting not only to the buyer but to the people of this Nation your sellers' guaranty written in broad, readable, unequivocal terms, so that there can be no question of your platform.

I want it understood, Senators, that the packers and the canners of this country did not oppose the pure-food legislation, but as I recall—and the present Presiding Officer of the Senate [Mr. LADD in the chair] will bear me out, I believe, in this statement—they were desirous of pure-food legislation and did everything possible to promote its passage. The Western Packers' Association was inaugurated before the National Canners' Association and the Atlantic States Packers' Association were inaugurated. They joined in Columbus and created the National Canners' Association, and I think the present Presiding Officer of the Senate will bear me out in the statement that the canners of this country were the first to propose pure-food legislation, and, working through and with Dr. Harvey W. Wiley and the present Presiding Officer of the Senate, produced the pure food bill. Now, let it be understood from now on, forever, that that matter shall not be charged up against the packers of the country, because they were the very men who suggested that class of legislation.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. HARRIS. When President Roosevelt recommended the passage of the meat inspection law, if the Senator will refer to the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] he will find that the packers opposed that law so vigorously that the Senator from Massachusetts, representing the President of the United States as floor leader, denounced them, as I recall, on the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was here at the time. I remember that the bill was introduced by Senator Beveridge, of Indiana. It was one of the hardest fought bills I have ever known here upon this floor. The debate lasted for weeks. They fought it.

Mr. FERNALD. Which bill—the pure food law?

Mr. OVERMAN. The inspection bill recommended by President Roosevelt, to insure our having good, pure food.

Mr. FERNALD. That was before my day. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think possibly the Senator was referring to some remarks I made the other day.

Mr. FERNALD. I do not recall who made them. I know that if the Senator made them he wants to be set right.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not set me wrong. What I said was that the packers themselves had fought the meat inspection bill just as they were now fighting this regulation bill, and yet that the packers themselves now have come to realize that the meat inspection bill was not only a salutary thing for the health of the consumers but was a good thing in the justification of foreign trade. I was not certain whether the Senator was referring to my remarks or not.

Mr. FERNALD. I do not know who made the remarks. I remember that they were made, and have on many occasions been made, to the effect that the packers were opposing all sorts of legislation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is not any doubt in the world that they opposed the meat-inspection bill, which they now admit is a good thing, and there is not any doubt in the world that when the pure-food legislation was up somebody fought it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think one of the Senators is referring to one thing and the other to another. The meat inspection bill was one piece of legislation. The pure food bill was another. At the time that Mr. Roosevelt sent his message to Congress, after having read Sinclair's "Jungle" book, and all that, there was an immense excitement, and the packers very strenuously opposed that meat-inspection proposition, to some extent justified by the fact that it came in the shape of an attack upon them; but, independently of that, they did oppose it, and the pure food bill was another and a different piece of legislation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; but, as I recall, the pure food bill also was opposed.

Mr. FERNALD. That is a mistake.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It did not go through here without a fight. Dr. Wiley raised a storm of protest all over the country from certain manufacturers, and they fought his program.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not remember what attitude they took upon the pure food act. I remember that they fought the meat inspection bill very vigorously for a long time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Dr. Wiley was the victim of an outrageous attack for a long time because he was endeavoring to provide some governmental protection for the health of the American people.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a very clear recollection of Dr. Wiley's interest in the pure food bill, and I recall very well that I was present at this meeting of the Western Packers' Association when we decided as an association that some legislation along those lines was needed; and I recollect that we gave it our earnest support, and that we sent to Washington a man who is as well versed in the canned-goods industry as any man in the country. He is now secretary of the National Canners' Association, down at 1739 H Street; and he came here and gave his undivided time while the pure food bill was pending. It had the indorsement of the association of canners, and I spoke from the platform with Dr. Wiley myself at that time, and I recall what happened, and I do not think anybody can make statements about that matter without my giving some special knowledge and dates about it, because I have them before me.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Was not the great contest in that legislation over the question of whether or not certain preservatives were harmful?

Mr. FERNALD. I think it was; yes. It entered into a very wide discussion of what constituted pure foods, and all that; but the matter was very carefully considered, and the packers and canners were intensely interested. It has proven to be a good bill, and we have always felt pleased that it was enacted.

I have spoken along the lines of development of the canning industry. On two or three other occasions I have spoken on this bill from the packers' standpoint, and how it would affect the business interests of this country. To-day I am discussing the bill from an entirely different attitude and position. I am trying to discuss the bill from the standpoint of an American citizen, and what is going to happen to the business of this country if we continue this everlasting regulatory system of procedure against business houses.

Why, my dear Senators, everybody knows that we are having hard times in this country. Almost every Senator, as he greets you in the morning, asks you how business is in your State. There is not a place on this continent that I know of that to-day is prosperous; and of all the times since I have had any experience in public affairs or with business, there has never been so inopportune a time to enact legislation that will place hardships on any business as right now. Business has been interfered with; people are going out of business, and still we go on with this extravagance. We go on creating commissions.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to read the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to which I referred just now.

They are very short. Here is what he said on June 30, 1906, when the meat inspection bill was before the Senate, showing the attitude of the packers then:

What has been the history of that group of men who run those packing establishments? It has been a history of utter defiance of law and of public opinion. * * * But I say, Mr. President, and I say it in all seriousness, that those packers in Chicago * * * have done more to advance socialism and anarchism and unrest and agitation than all the socialistic agitators who stand to-day between the oceans.

Mr. President, when the legislation was before the Senate in the matter of railroad rates the meat packers were interested in their refrigerator cars. I know personally that the packers had one of the most successful legislature lobbyists that we have ever had come here, from my State, and he stayed here for weeks while that legislation was pending.

Mr. FERNALD. That brings me back to the packers again. I want to say that I had intended to discuss the matter from an economic standpoint rather than from the packers' end. The packers, as I understand, have very little interest in this bill. I have never heard from any one of them or from any representative of theirs; I do not know whether they want it or not; but I know what these commissions have cost this Government, and I am going to cite you to the figures, so that the people of the country may know that when you create a commission here you get it fastened on this Government, and if you make an appropriation of $1,000 the first year it will amount to $1,000,000 in 10 years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator, when he gives the cost to the Government of these commissions, give at the same time some brief recapitulation of what they have done?

Mr. FERNALD. I will, sir. I shall be very glad to do that when I get to it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand that in the case of the Federal Trade Commission they have rendered very valuable service; and, if the Senator is so familiar with this matter, he is the one to lay before the Senate the vast benefits. The Senator here a little while ago voted $500,000,000 for a navy. He did not think much of economy then.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; I did.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But now, when it comes to a commission that has unquestionably rendered very valuable service, he talks to us about economy. He voted for a navy four times as much money as Congress voted annually before the war, and he has done that in spite of the fact that there is a strong protest against it. The Senator voted for a bill appropriating $500,000,000, and yet when it comes to something less than a million dollars for a valuable commission he is impressed by the need of economy.

Mr. FERNALD. As I recall, Mr. President, a few years ago we found ourselves in need of a larger army and a greater navy. If we had made greater appropriations previous to that time we might have been a little better prepared, and I think the best way to be prepared, so that we may force other Governments to stop the building of navies and stop the creation of armies, is to appropriate sufficient money that we may be prepared to meet those people if it seems necessary. I believe my attitude, since I have been a Member of the Senate, has been along the line of economy. I have been chairman of a committee which has had opportunity to expend millions of dollars, but not a single appropriation has come out of that committee. That is about as good a record as any man may have for economy and the practice of economy in public affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the Senator's argument, but he has been deflected from the main line of his argument and has been talking about something else. I want to ask the Senator a question in connection with a remark just made by him. Does the Senator think the way to persuade another man to disarm is to scare him?

Mr. FERNALD. I think so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not found it so in life. I have generally found that if I scared him he went off and armed himself.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator and I agree about a great many things, and I am sorry if we do not agree on everything. It does not trouble me at all to be interrupted, and any time any Senator wants to ask a question I shall be very glad to give my time.

We have had a most marvelous development in this country along all lines of business, as everybody knows, in the past hundred years. It is only about 50 years since this packing business was really established, and it would be very hard to feed the people of this country now without the packers. I remember the day when practically all the butchering was done in the little butcher shops in the villages or towns of the country. The business has grown to such enormous proportions that now in every city and in every village of the United States we get our meats from the valleys of the Mississippi and the far West where they raise cattle. We can no longer raise cattle in New England. Our farms suitable for raising of cattle are being used for other purposes, and we have to depend upon the people in the West for our meats.

I remember reading recently of that great man who left northern Illinois along in 1845, Brigham Young, and who with his people crossed the prairies with oxen and with horses and on foot, and it was months before they reached the State of Utah. I thought of the development we have had since that time, just a little before my birth; of how the railroads sprang up, and that when my father was 10 years old there was not a single rod of railroad in the United States. From 1830 to 1887 we had a most marvelous development. We had men whose minds and careers were centered on that one thing—to develop the great valley of the Mississippi and the far West, even on to California.

We had men who could go to the bankers of this country and secure all the money that was necessary for such projects. They could go over to the banks in New York and get all the money that was necessary for the development and building of railroads.

That day has passed; that generation of men has gone on. They have sometimes been spoken of in a very light way; but I recall the days of James J. Hill and E. H. Harriman, and the Flaglers, down in the State of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], when they connected your two coasts, and of the wonderful development of this country which came about from the railroad building. It was the most marvelous in the history of the world. Nothing like it had ever occurred in this country, and from 1830 to 1865 that great development was going on.

Now, I want to read some figures which show what has happened. In 1887 we began to think of the gigantic proportions railroads had attained. People said that unless the railroads were regulated they would own the whole country, and we started in then with the first of our great and expensive commissions.

We created the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I want to read you something about that. Understand, now, I find no fault with the personnel of these commissions. I have not any criticism of the men who have been appointed to the commissions. I have no doubt they are just as good men as could be found now or ever could be found. But it is impossible to find men not acquainted with a great industry who can take hold of it and carry it on successfully. A man who undertakes to run my business, which I have been 40 years studying in every detail, would find some little trouble, as much as I would in undertaking to deal with a law case, knowing nothing about the law. Every man learns his own business, and the success of that business depends upon its management.

Up to 1887 the railroad business of the country had been managed by men who knew something about railroads. People had confidence in them. The bonds of the railroads could be placed anywhere and at any time. As I have said, it was felt that the railroads were growing large and gigantic, and the Congress of the United States created the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The figures I am about to quote to the Senate are very important. The Interstate Commerce Commission was created February 4, 1887, and the first appropriation, in 1888, was $100,000. In 1889 it was $150,000, and a deficiency of $25,000 was created, so they had to make a little larger appropriation. In 1890 it was $200,000. In 1891 it was again $200,000, but in 1892 it was $225,000, and another deficiency of $25,000 was created. In 1893 it was $225,000, with a deficiency again of $15,000. In 1899 it was $250,000. In 1901 it was $265,000. In 1902 it was $275,000 and a deficiency of $51. In 1903 it was $285,000 and a deficiency of $321.50. In 1904 it was $325,000 and a deficiency of $20,000. In 1905 it was $355,000 and a deficiency of $15,000. In 1907 it was $456,000 and a deficiency of $45,000.

Then it began to take on some proportions. In 1908 it was $828,245. In 1909 it had reached a million; it was $1,225,000 and a deficiency of $10,000. In 1910 it was $1,160,000 and a deficiency of $10,000. In 1911 it was $1,361,833.89.

Let Senators tell their farmer friends what economy is being practiced in the creating of these commissions.

In 1912 it was $1,815,000. In 1913 it was $1,750,008.83 and another deficiency of $10,000. In 1914 it was $1,795,000 and a deficiency of $15,000. In 1915 it was $4,075,006.52. In 1916 it was $5,265,003.88. In 1918 it was $5,467,177.29. In 1919 it was $5,732,401.13. In 1920 it was $4,596,616.03. In 1921 it was $5,442,906.28.

The cost directly of that commission since its creation has been $51,323,313.19.

But, Senators, that is a mere bagatelle, a little over fifty millions. When they started out it was a very modest, little commission. They had 5 members and 14 employees. To-day they have 2,200 employees, and 1,100 of them have been casting about the country for eight years undertaking to determine the physical value of the railroads at an expense of $18,000 a day, and every Senator on this floor knows that they are no nearer finding the valuation of the railroads than they were when they started, and if those same men could live 1,800 years they would not be any nearer than they are now. Tell that, my friends, to the farmers of this country and ask them if they want this Congress to create another commission which will cost them more than $50,000,000, in my judgment, because this commissioner and his associates would have to traverse this whole country outside of Chicago, to govern and regulate every little butcher in every little village of the country.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, did the Senator give the total?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; I gave the total.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator repeat it? I could not hear it.

Mr. FERNALD. The total is $51,323,313.19.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator realizes, of course, that that is not all. Every State is appropriating a lot of money to regulate the railroads also. Has the Senator those figures?

Mr. FERNALD. No; I have not.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will agree with me that that would add to that total a very great deal, perhaps more than double it? Yet the Senator does not want to abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. FERNALD. I did not say that.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I understand the Senator did not answer my question definitely.

Mr. FERNALD. I think the Senator will probably be answered in a way to satisfy him when I get through with these remarks.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably I will. I regret, however, that the Senator refuses to answer directly.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator does not want to charge me with any discourtesy?

Mr. NORRIS. No; certainly not. I concede that the Senator does not have to answer unless he wants to.

Mr. FERNALD. I want to look into it a little more before I give a definite answer.

Mr. NORRIS. While the Senator is telling that story to the farmers, add to it the expense of all the State regulation, and the fact that nobody is ready to repeal the laws and have no regulation; tell that story to the farmers, and they will probably all be in favor of Government ownership before you get through. Regulation is costing more than the railroads are worth.

Mr. FERNALD. I am just going to show what the Interstate Commerce Commission has done in the past 34 years. The direct expense of fifty-odd million dollars is a mere bagatelle——

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. FERNALD (continuing). Compared to what it has cost the people of this country, and I want the farmers of the country to know they have one friend here. And, first of all, let me say that I have not stated my particular interest in this bill.

I wish to say that if there is or ever has been a farmer in the Senate, I am that farmer. I was born on the farm that more than 130 years ago had been taken up by my great-grandfather, and there has been a Fernald on it ever since and I still live there. My interest in the bill is from the standpoint of the farmer. When Senators rise here, with bleeding hearts, in the interest of the farmer and say that every appropriation they ask for is in the interest of the farmer, I want the farmers of the country to know who their friends are. I want them to know when we create a commission here and start with a small appropriation that it soon spreads out and goes into the millions and millions and the farmers have to pay the bill, and for the payment of that bill they do not get a single thing in return. My friend the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator just made a statement that the people do not get a single thing in return——

Mr. FERNALD. For the legislation that I am going to speak about now.

Mr. LENROOT. Speaking of the Interstate Commerce Commission, he said it cost $50,000,000. Will not the Senator concede that there was one single year when in refusing to grant the increases that were requested and that were afterwards shown to be unnecessary, the farmers and shippers of the country were saved in that year more than all the Interstate Commerce Commission has cost since its creation?

Mr. FERNALD. No; I am not going to admit that. I am going to discuss that question right now. I am not going to admit anything of the kind, because we are having to settle right now for everything that the Interstate Commerce Commission was unwilling to grant at that time, because the railroads could not afford to grant it. I am going to show to the Senator and to everyone else that since the Interstate Commerce Commission was created it has cost the Government and the people more than the war with Germany. That is a pretty broad, bold statement, but I have the figures to back it up right here.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. Just a moment. Let me say that the figures I am going to furnish to the Senate were taken from Poor's Manual of Railroads, 1888, the compilations of the Bureau of Railroad Economics, the statistics of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the reports of railways to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I yield now to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The computation the Senator makes of the total appropriations for the Interstate Commerce Commission since it was organized was something like $52,000,000.

Mr. FERNALD. Fifty-one million dollars plus.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That covers a period of something like 34 years.

Mr. FERNALD. It does.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator consider that a large amount?

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, no; I do not consider anything less than a hundred million dollars a large amount. In discussing the question I just mentioned those figures, but anything under a billion dollars I do not consider large.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator voted for twice that amount to be appropriated for two battleships this year and for ten times that amount for the Navy as a whole.

Mr. FERNALD. That is all behind us now. Let us not go back to that battle.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; we are right up against it now. The people have to find the money to pay the $500,000,000 which the Senator has voted for the Navy.

Mr. FERNALD. They will be very glad to pay it in order to protect the boys and the people of the country. If we had had a little more money to start with when we began the war and had had a little larger Army and a few more battleships I do not believe the people would have felt very sorry at the time. However, that is past history, and I do not wish to yield to discuss that any further, because that is an old issue. What does the Senator wish to know? I thought he wished to ask a pertinent question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know whether the Senator thinks $52,000,000 is a large amount to spend?

Mr. FERNALD. I told the Senator I do not think it is a large amount nowadays.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know whether he thinks it a large amount to spend in 34 years for the Interstate Commerce Commission, when he has just voted ten times that amount to be expended by the Navy for one year and when he has just voted more than that amount for only two battleships?

Mr. FERNALD. I thought I had answered the Senator, without going into a discussion of the general question of battleships and armies, by saying that I considered it a wise provision. I thought the committee had made a very wise decision in their provision for the appropriation of that money and how much should be appropriated. However, I had not begun to discuss this very thing. The $50,000,000 I had just mentioned in a casual way. I do not consider that——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit me to interject as a casual suggestion that $51,000,000, the total that has been paid by the Government for the Interstate Commerce Commission in 34 years, is in round numbers just one-half of what Armour & Co. issued as stock dividends in the same length of time.

Mr. FERNALD. We have already thrashed that out. When we get into the question of stock dividends and matters of that kind, it is a pretty big question, and I know the Senator from Nebraska does not want me to take up all the time of the Senate. I am coming back to the railroad question again.

The expenditure of fifty-odd million dollars is a mere bagatelle. That amounts to very little. The people of the country do not care much about $50,000,000 or $100,000,000. The farmers even talk about more than that, and the larger amount they may be able to borrow on a day's notice. I wish to show what the real expense of the Interstate Commerce Commission has been since 1887 in addition to its direct appropriations of $51,000,000.

Up to 1887 the railroads of the country had been managed by railroad men. They had had a pretty free hand in developing the railroads of the country. I mentioned a few moments ago about Brigham Young leaving northern Illinois away back in 1845, within the memory of men who are now Members of the Senate, I believe, and crossing the prairies where now the corn and wheat grow in luxurious and bountiful harvest for the reaper. That movement has developed that whole country, and what are needed out there now more than anything else are canning factories. All through many of those States the condition exists where they have not had any development along that line in 10 years, not a single thing. We have built up the great industries in the country. The railroads have done a marvelous work toward that development. We would have in the Middle West no such development as now exists had it not been for the railroads. We would not have had in California any fruits produced for our breakfast tables, and we in New England would not have had the cereals grown in the Middle West had it not been for the railroads and their development.

In the period from 1830 to 1887 we had built in this country 165,000 miles of railroad. Nobody had ever before heard of any such development in any kind of industry or of any development in any way to be compared with it. About that time the Interstate Commerce Commission which I have mentioned was created. I wish to make some comparisons and I challenge anyone to state that they are incorrect or that they are not applicable to the situation.

First of all, let me say that in the development of the railroads up to that time—and I read from the record—the following situation is disclosed: In the year 1890, as I have just said, we had built 163,597 miles of railroad. During the next 10 years we built 29,748 miles more, and in 1900 we had 193,345 miles of railroads. In the next 10 years from 1900 to 1910 we built 46,947 miles of railroad, the most marvelous building of railroads that has even been known in the world's history or that ever may be known again. In 1910 we had 240,293 miles of railroad.

From 1910 to 1915, a period of five years, we built 13,000 miles more, about one-third of what had been built in the previous decade, and in 1915 we had 253,788 miles of railroad. In 1919—just notice this, please, Senators—we had decreased, and we had 636 miles less of railroad in 1919 than we had in 1915. That shows the decline in the building of railroads.

The great Northern Pacific Railroad had a bonded indebtedness which they had to refund at 7½ per cent. In the old days I think Mr. Hill—was it Hill or Harriman who built the road?—got the money at 4 per cent, because he was a railroad man and the bankers of the country and the people who had money were willing to invest it in railroads because they expected the railroads to be managed by railroad men. Instead of that, however, we had a commission created, made up of lawyers. I have the greatest respect for lawyers, and if I should ever get into trouble I should go to a lawyer, but I would never get a lawyer to come and undertake to run my business. When you undertake to run the great railroad business of the United States by a lawyer you have made a mistake, unless that lawyer has had some experience in railroad training. He can not do it any better than anybody else. You had better have a farmer run the railroads, because he at least has studied economy.

So the railroads began to dry up, like all other kinds of business——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is from New England?

Mr. FERNALD. I am.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is familiar with the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad?

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, well——

Mr. LENROOT. I will ask the Senator whether the wrecking of the New Haven road, with which the Government had nothing to do, but which was accomplished by the so-called railroad managers, and the wrecking of some other roads, did not do more to lose the confidence of investors in railroad securities than any other one thing?

Mr. FERNALD. I wish to answer the Senator, because I have great regard for his judgment and I know he is an exceedingly fair man, that there are crooked railroad men, just the same as there are crooks in other lines of business. When one at the head of a railroad develops that character, he becomes a subject for the penitentiary and ought to be sent there. I do not know anything about the management of that railroad. I have no doubt every one of its guilty managers ought to be in the penitentiary. I have known even ministers to be crooks, and I have known one or two lawyers that were bad men, but because one man in a particular business has wrecked a railroad or wrecked a particular business, should all the other railroads and all the other lines of business in the United States be demolished, or should all the other railroads because of that one fact be turned over to a commission to be managed by somebody who does not know anything about the railroad business?

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator did not get the point of my inquiry.

Mr. FERNALD. I think I did.

Mr. LENROOT. The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad was regarded, I think the Senator will concede, as one of the best railroad properties in the United States. Committees came here to Washington within six months of the time it was wrecked and begged that there be no investigation of it. The point is that when the supposedly best-managed railroad in the United States was wrecked as that was, very naturally confidence was lost to a very large degree in all railroads.

Mr. FERNALD. I am sorry to be led so far afield in my argument which I had started to make about the Interstate Commerce Commission. However, what the Senator has to say is applicable to every business in the country. I have not any question that there was mismanagement of the New Haven Railroad.

The Pennsylvania Railroad, for instance, has always been a well-managed road that has always had men at its head who understood the railroad business, and yet that railroad has had its stock cut squarely in two. That is what I am coming to now, to show the loss by mismanagement or misdirection.

Let me say before I go further that I wish to establish two fundamental principles of fact on which everybody I think will agree with me. First of all I wish it understood that I believe, and I think everyone will agree with me, that property is worth just what it will sell for. When it gets into the probate court or when an estate has finally to be settled, or if for any reason through the process of law or for any other reason property has to be sold, the real value of that property is what it will bring on the market. I have sometimes had horses that I thought were very valuable, and after a time I had to sell them, and I found that they were really not worth nearly so much as I had believed. If they had been left to my heirs they would have found that their real worth and value was just exactly what they would sell for. I think this is applicable to all lines of business. Does the Senator from Wisconsin agree with me in that?

Mr. LENROOT. No; not as to a forced sale. The rule is, of course, that property is worth what——

Mr. FERNALD. It is worth what it will bring.

Mr. LENROOT. It is worth what anyone who is willing to sell but not compelled to sell can get for it from one who is willing to buy but not compelled to buy.

I wish to ask the Senator, now that he applies that rule, if he contends that the railroads to-day are worth only what their stock-market values will bring? Does he apply the rule he has just laid down to the railroads? Is it the Senator's position that the railroads of the United States to-day are worth only what their stock-market values will bring?

Mr. FERNALD. I am going to allow that if a man owns stock in a railroad the amount which he may receive for that stock is precisely what it will bring in the market.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, does the Senator think that the Interstate Commerce Commission in fixing rates should take into consideration the present depressed market value of railroad stock and allow only such rates as will pay a fair return upon that market value?

Mr. FERNALD. No; I think the stockholders have been robbed by the Interstate Commerce Commission; that is what I think.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator has just said that Congress has no power to fix a different basis of return. A railroad is entitled to a reasonable return upon the actual value of its property. If the Senator says now that the railroads are only worth what the stock market quotations show, he himself would cut down their return by one-half.

Mr. FERNALD. If we proceed along the line of argument of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin we can make those stocks valueless, and they are going lower about as fast as they can. Would the Senator think that after we put the railroads out of commission and the stock is not worth anything that we ought not to charge anything for freight and passenger traffic?

Mr. LENROOT. No.

UMI

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator's argument would end there.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is putting words in my mouth that I have never said. He says property is only worth what it will bring.

Mr. FERNALD. I think that is true.

Mr. LENROOT. If that is true, it necessarily follows that, for rate-making purposes, they would not be entitled to more than one-half as much as they are receiving to-day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon one suggestion?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think again the railroads have a double status. A railroad may be worth just exactly what the railroad may bring, and the railroad stock may be worth just exactly what the stock will bring; but there may be a very wide divergence between what the stock is worth and what the railroad is worth, if the property has been properly capitalized; but is it not true that a railroad, independently of its stock, is worth exactly what it would bring?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not agree to that. If the railroads were put up at auction at any of the present markets of the country, and if the railroads should be valued at what they would bring on the market to-day, the stock which has been already cut in two would be cut in two again.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Maine yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FERNALD. I will be glad to yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, I listened with great regret to the attack of the Senator upon the Interstate Commerce Commission; but with respect to the present suggestion, what is the use of discussing it? The Supreme Court of the United States—and I understand the Senator does not want to abolish the Supreme Court——

Mr. FERNALD. Oh, no.

Mr. CUMMINS. No matter how much it costs—the Supreme Court has, over and over again, settled the basis of rate making and the value of railroad property for rate-making purposes. It has said that the railroad property of the United States is worth what it would cost to reproduce it; that is all. It is perfectly easy to ascertain what the value is—I mean the principle is easy—although it takes a good while to apply that principle to the facts as they develop.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon me for just a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In normal times, of course, what any sort of piece of property is worth is what it would cost to reproduce it if it is an article that can be manufactured. If it is live stock, its value would be what it would cost to raise it; but there is no excuse for mixing up the stock of a railroad with the physical plant. They do not represent the same thing.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; the Senator from Mississippi is right. When we passed the valuation act of 1913 we required the Interstate Commerce Commission to ascertain, first, what the railroads cost originally, and, second, what it would cost to reproduce them; and we are not left in any doubt with regard to the manner of ascertaining the value of railroad property in order to attach certain rates to the service which they render.

Mr. FERNALD. First of all, I want to say that I do not wish to make any unjust criticism of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I simply say that the result has been just what would come from any regulatory body that has had no experience in the particular line of work. I think the Interstate Commerce Commission has been made up of honest and fair men, men who are disposed to do the best they can; but the inexpediency of appointing men to the commission to take charge of and to regulate a business when they have had no experience in that particular kind of business is clearly exhibited by their action. I do not want it understood that I am making an unfair criticism of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and what I started out to prove is entirely foreign to the Senator's suggestion. I simply laid down the fundamental principle—and I believe it ought to be accepted by everyone—that property is worth what it will bring. If a man dies and leaves an estate which has to be settled, all of his stocks, if they must be sold, must be sold on the market, as also must be his real estate and his personal property. Whatever he may have acquired is sold, and it is worth merely what it will bring. Is not that good law?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; Mr. President, I do not think it is good law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it is good common sense.

Mr. CUMMINS. The railroads are not sold in the market.

Mr. FERNALD. I am not suggesting that. I am merely stating a fundamental principle that applies to all property, and why should it not apply to railroad stocks?

Mr. CUMMINS. Property is ordinarily worth what it will sell for on the market, under reasonable conditions, if there be a market for the sale of that kind of property; but there is no market in which railroads may be sold.

Mr. FERNALD. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. One can not ascertain the value of a railroad by resorting to the market price of railroads in a particular market; there is no such thing. Therefore the rule, which I grant is applicable to a great many kinds of property, is not applicable at all to railroads.

Mr. FERNALD. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. One may ascertain the value of a bushel of wheat or of a bushel of corn or of 100 pounds of fat cattle, because people are constantly, every day, in the public markets buying and selling such things; but that is not true of railroads. Therefore we can not resort to a market price in order to ascertain the value of railroads.

Mr. FERNALD. I am always delighted to listen to my friend from Iowa; he is very clear on the railroad question, much more so than I am, of course; but if the principle I have stated is not law, then it is good common sense, that property is worth what it will bring. Suppose a man dies and leaves an estate, and the judge decides that that estate must be settled up. The man held 100 shares of railroad stock; it becomes necessary to sell that stock, and what the stock will bring on the market is all it is worth, and it is exactly what it is worth. Am I right about that?

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose the Senator is quite right with regard to the value of the stock to which he refers, but he is not right at all if he attempts to apply that principle to the value of the railroads.

Mr. FERNALD. I am not applying it to the railroads; I am applying it entirely to the stock of railroads. I should like to have the Senator answer me definitely about that, because he is pretty definitive in his understanding of things.

Is it not correct that if a man has a certain amount of stock, and his estate has to be settled, there would have to be turned over to that estate whatever that stock would bring in the market? Is that correct?

Mr. CUMMINS. What it would bring in the market or anywhere else.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose that is true if the stock were sold. If the Senator were attempting to ascertain the value of the particular shares of stock which he has in mind, he would resort to a market place, and if that stock were habitually sold in that market place the quotations there found would be a guide as to the value of that stock, and, I have no doubt at all, would be accepted; but that has nothing to do with the value of the railroads or the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission, for this reason: The Interstate Commerce Commission, by attaching unduly low rates to the service rendered by the railroads, can affect the value of the stock in the market without reducing at all the legal value of the railroads themselves.

Mr. FERNALD. I thank the Senator. I believe he and I agree so far as the value of the stock is concerned. What I want to say here is that the stock has depreciated 50 per cent since the Interstate Commerce Commission was created in 1887. I am going to read into the RECORD the market value of the stock yesterday, and I am going to show that the depreciation in the value of that stock since the Interstate Commerce Commission was created has been $4,500,000,000, by actual figures. That is what I am undertaking to prove. I am not discussing whether the Interstate Commerce Commission can work out the problems of the railroads or whether the Interstate Commerce Committee can do so, but I am going to show that property is worth what it will bring, and is not worth any more; I am going to show that the property which is made up of the stock of the railroads has depreciated, and I want to read what some of these stocks are worth:

Stock.	High June 1, 1887.	High June 1, 1921.
Chicago & North Western	126⅜	65½
Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul	94¼	28⅜
Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific	136¼	33⅜
Illinois Central	137½	91
Pennsylvania	56¼–56½	35½

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. Prsident, I can anticipate the outcome, for I am fairly familiar with the subject; but while the Senator from Maine is establishing what he proposes to establish, he will also establish that if the Interstate Commerce Commission had permitted rates that would have maintained the market value of the stock as it was in 1887 somebody would have had to have paid the necessary rates. I hope he will give credit to the Interstate Commerce Commission for saving that situation to the people who pay the rates, although it may have been pretty hard on those who owned the stock.

Mr. FERNALD. What I am going to attempt to prove is that we are paying right now for the mismanagement from 1887 down to date; and I am going to try to prove that if the rates which were applied in 1887 had been applied to the business in 1920, instead of rates that did exist from September 1, 1920, to December 31, 1920, there would have been a difference of $964,201,903; that is, the rates would have been that much less than they actually were in 1920.

Mr. CUMMINS rose.

Mr. FERNALD. Let me finish; I am not quite through. I want to go on with that statement. If the rates which have existed since January 1, 1921, had been the same as the rates in 1887, it would have made a difference of $1,512,809,328. What I am going to claim is that if the railroads had had an opportunity to manage their own business in their own way they would have kept the level up, so that we would not have been obliged to pass through the period of railroad administration and depression from which we have suffered and are suffering now, and which has cost this Government vast sums. Of course, the business is much greater now than it was in 1887, but if there had been an increase of one-half in the business since 1887 it would have made a difference to this Government—and when I speak of this Government I mean the people who live under the Government—of more than $25,000,000,000. There can be no mistake about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine seems to me to ignore in the statement he has just made the fact that during the last four years the expenses of operation and maintenance have more than doubled. In many instances and in many departments of this activity they have more than trebled. If you should apply the costs of 1921 to the revenues of 1887, not only would there be no net income but there would be a vast deficit; and I hope the Senator from Maine will give some attention to that side of the ledger when he is stating this account.

Mr. FERNALD. I thank the Senator. What I am going to show by the figures—and I believe no one disputes their correctness—is that not only has the stock of the railroads been cut squarely in two but the Senator from Iowa realizes and, of course, knows much better than I that the stock of the railroads represents about 45 per cent of the valuation as made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as nearly as they can get at it, and the bonds represent about 55 per cent of the real value of the railroads. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not quite, as I remember. Taking the capitalization, including stocks and bonds, of all the railroads in the United States, the bonds represent, speaking roundly, 66 per cent of the capitalization and the stock 34 per cent.

Mr. FERNALD. That takes in all of the class 1 roads, as I understand.

Mr. CUMMINS. All of the roads which report to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. FERNALD. I have gone into that matter at considerable length. I have undertaken to show that the expense which has been attached to the creation of these commissions has been very great; that when once established we are never able to abolish them. I realize that in the past few years, or since a few phrases have been coined, these reforms have gone on at an unprecedented rate. It was but a few years ago that we began to hear about "the common people." I suppose there are some, but I never saw any. To me they are all as uncommon as the flowers in the field. We have heard about "the toiling masses." Since these phrases have been coined great progress has been made in these methods of reform. We have undertaken to reform everything. There is hardly anything or any kind of business but that the Congress of the United States has been asked to regulate it.

I realize that I have spoken for nearly three hours. I want to insert in the RECORD, in my time, without reading, if the Senate will permit, an article. Some time ago, when we had rather more time than we have now, I undertook to insert in the RECORD an article which appeared in one of the farming papers of the country, the Nebraska Farmer. At that time the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] objected; but now I am going to ask that this be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. As a part of the Senator's remarks?

Mr. FERNALD. As a part of my remarks. There appeared in this paper, the Nebraska Farmer, I think of June 19, 1920, an article by the very distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. The Senator is a very distinguished lawyer and a very fine gentleman, whom I regard highly, although I have not so much regard for his judgment about the packing business; but he wrote an article on the packing business, and a man who, I think, does know something about the business replied, and I am going to ask as a part of my remarks that this article be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I inquire who is the author of the article to which the Senator refers?

Mr. FERNALD. Thomas E. Wilson.

Mr. NORRIS. He is the president of Wilson & Co., one of the five big packers?

Mr. FERNALD. I think so.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator object to inserting my article and his article in parallel columns?

Mr. FERNALD. I shall be very glad to have that done.

Mr. NORRIS. All right; I shall be glad to have that done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this article was a reply to mine, and I should like to have the Senators read in parallel columns just how he replied and how much he had to say about the charges that I made in the article that I wrote.

Mr. FERNALD. I think it will be fair to insert the Senator's article and the article from Mr. Wilson. I think that is all that is necessary.

Mr. NORRIS. In parallel columns?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

The articles referred to are as follows:

SOME SIDE LIGHTS ON THE PACKERS, BY SENATOR GEORGE W. NORRIS.

It was Sunday morning, the one day of the week when we can afford to have meat for breakfast. As I took my slice of nice crisp bacon, I asked my wife what it cost. She said it was 60 cents a pound. I had just been reading from a western country newspaper that the price of hogs on the western prairies was from 10 to 12 cents per pound. It occurred to me that the producers and the consumers ought to know something about the middleman's profit on this necessary article of human food.

I wonder if the farmer in the sod house on the prairie and the laboring man in the overcrowded city of the East really understand that this mighty space between them is inhabited by a multitude of unnecessary profiteers who are living in luxury upon the toil of the two extremes of this great equation. It ought to be interesting to the underpaid producer and the overcharged consumer to get a view of some of the side lights; some of the overhead charges and expenses that oil the machinery of the mighty corporations which control most of the lines of the food products of the world.

Under existing conditions the producer and the consumer are so far apart that they live almost in different worlds. They do not realize the network of machinery existing from one end of the country to the other, having within its grasp the most mighty financial institutions and under its control the dissemination of news and literature of the day by which the very atmosphere of both consumer and producer is saturated with a false knowledge of the necessity of all this useless and expensive machinery, thus keeping them both in ignorance, with a natural tendency in each to fear that the other is getting the best of the deal. They both realize that middlemen are necessary, and that machinery is essential to make over the product of the farm into a suitable commodity for the table. They do not fully understand that they are both bowed down in poverty because they contribute day by day and year by year to the immense fortunes of many millionaires, who are living in compara-

HOW SHALL THE PACKERS BE REGULATED?

(By Thomas E. Wilson.)

(In recent issues of the Nebraska Farmer there were published two articles by Senator NORRIS opposing the settlement agreed to by the Attorney General and the big packing interests and favoring more drastic regulations of the packing industry. Believing that it is no more than fair to present all sides of the question we have asked Mr. Wilson, president of the Institute of American Meat Packers, and also the head of one of the large packing companies, to give in this issue the packers' side of the question. In later issues more articles on this important subject will appear.—The editors.)

Since writing the article on the subject of packer legislation, published in the June 5 issue of the Nebraska Farmer, my attention has been called to two articles by Senator NORRIS.

It is to be regretted that the Senator representing a constituency of producers of live stock and a State where the packing industry constitutes so important a part of its industrial life did not discuss some constructive measure calculated to improve the industry in general, rather than to indulge in criticism of the business and those engaged in it. If there is anything wrong with this industry or with those responsible for its management, surely there must be some measure that would correct it.

One would naturally hope or expect from one occupying so exalted and important a position something other than impugning references and artful insinuations intended to discredit this vital industry, impair its efficiency, and destroy public confidence in its integrity.

It is much easier to tear down and destroy than to plan and construct a great enterprise. It has become a favorite pastime with many men anxious to be regarded as statesmen to attack successful industry. A careful study of the two articles written by the Senator fails to disclose a single constructive suggestion looking toward improving the economic condition of the producers of his State or the country at large.

Successful business enterprises can not be built and maintained

tive idleness and luxury upon the toil and the sacrifices of the two extremes. It ought to be interesting to consider briefly a few of these unnecessary and exorbitant overhead expenses which they contribute to the oiling of the great international machinery operated by the packers. This information has been taken from hearings before Senate committees and the Federal Trade Commission.

WHAT ONE YOUNG MAN DID.

Several years ago a very bright and enterprising newspaper man in Philadelphia moved to Washington. He came to the Capital City as the Washington correspondent for a Philadelphia paper. His ability as a writer soon brought him additional clients. It was not long until he became an editorial writer for a well-known eastern magazine. He soon became a regular contributor to a Wall Street publication on financial subjects. He was taken on as one of the editorial writers of an economic magazine, a publication with a circulation all over the United States, having for the main object of its existence the maintenance of a high protective tariff. He was soon employed as a writer on a magazine known as the Fourth Estate. This is a trade publication for newspapers, and goes to practically every newspaper office in the country. He likewise became an editorial writer on a trade publication for manufacturers. He was likewise one of the editorial writers on a Washington daily.

In the meantime he had built a large office force, maintaining two offices in Washington, and was surrounded by quite a number of able assistants. It can be seen at a glance that this man's work was going into not only the homes but the business offices of the country, particularly those offices that have to do with the creation of public sentiment on various public questions.

In the meantime he developed into a great social leader. His dinners were attended by members of the Cabinet, Members of the House of Representatives, the United States Senate, foreign ambassadors, and other prominent people influential in national affairs. It is quite apparent that his influence and his power in the building up of any sentiment throughout the country for the control of legislation in a silent and unseen way would be of wonderful force. It was noted by those who knew him best that he was an intimate and close friend of the private secretary to the President of the United States.

It became known that it was almost a daily occurrence for these two men to be lunching together at one of the most exclusive and expensive hostelries in Washington. All of these various occupations and activities of Mr. Logan are in themselves perfectly legitimate. They are, however, exceedingly important when taken into consideration with what follows—and the reader must not minimize his social activities.

In every great capital of the world many thousands of dollars are spent in social affairs, innocent on their face, legitimate of themselves perhaps, but having a sinister, powerful, silent, and perhaps unconscious influence on the control of legislation and the activities of executive officials in the enforcement of the laws. It might be said in passing that this is illustrated by the public announcement recently made through the press that the British ambassador has been allowed by his Government nearly $100,000 annually for social entertainment.

MONEY FROM EVERYWHERE.

No one suspected that Mr. Logan was on the pay roll of a large number of great corporations, and while we are considering him now only in his financial connection with the packers, it is interesting to note that he received large salaries not only from the packers but from many other large corporations, notably Standard Oil concerns, which always have been interested in and which always have spent immense sums of money to control not only the laws of the Nation but of the States. It was discovered upon investigation that Mr. Logan was getting $500 a month from Swift & Co., $500 a month from the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, $500 a month from the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, $700 a month from the Atlantic Refining Co., $500 a month from the Freeport Sulphur Co., and $500 a month from the General Electric Co. This may not be a complete list of his clients, but when the reader considers these salaries, together with the compensation he received from the various newspapers and magazines which he represented, it can at once be seen that his income compared favorably with the great magnates of the corporations which he represented.

In addition to all this, it should be said here that while Mr. Logan was drawing these salaries he made a trip to Europe at the request of Mr. Hurley, a Government representative. His entire expenses from the time he left America until he returned were paid out of the Treasury of the United States. He testified that Mr. Hurley wanted, in addition to paying his expenses, to pay him a salary, but he was too modest to accept it; and at the time he gave his testimony the question had not yet been determined whether he would be paid a salary in addition to his expenses. Mr. Hurley, representing the Government of the United States, seemed to be insisting that he should be paid a salary, Mr. Logan declining to accept it. Whether the matter has yet been adjusted or determined I do not know. How much, if anything, has been paid from the Federal Treasury to Mr. Logan I can not say. He claimed that when he went to Europe he went as a sort of adviser to governmental officials. It seems that those who represented the Government and who controlled the purse strings felt that the editorial writer who was getting so many salaries as a business adviser to great corporations should also be paid by the Government of the United States for giving advice to governmental officials in order that they might more efficiently conduct the business affairs of the United States in Europe.

AN EXPERT ADVISER.

No one has ever charged Mr. Logan with making an attempt to directly control the vote of any Member of Congress. Excepting as they were invited to meet him at social functions, they were, as a rule, unacquainted with him, and when they did not meet him they had no idea that he was writing editorials for these various magazines that were building up a public sentiment favorable to corporations, or that he was on the pay roll of the great corporations that I have enumerated. His time was too valuable to be used for the purpose of directly controlling a vote. His energies were spent upon the broader and more influential plane of building up a sentiment favorable to his clients through his editorial writings and of giving his clients direct information as to the condition of legislation and as to contemplated legislation, so that they might be able to prepare either to influence it or to meet it.

When put on the witness stand and questioned as to what he did to earn his salary for Swift & Co. and these other corporations, he said that he was an expert adviser; that he advised his clients how to run their business and how to enable them to serve the public good. He admitted that he had never written an advertisement for Swift

PROFITS OF THE PACKERS.

The business is conducted on the smallest margin of profit of any basic industry, averaging about 2 cents on each dollar of sales. This is a great benefit to both the producers and consumers. These figures have been questioned and criticized by those unfriendly to the industry, but they are true, nevertheless, and have been verified time and again by certified public accountants and agents of the Treasury Department of the Government, who are interested in our income-tax returns.

The aggregate net profits of the five large packers, according to verified reports for the year 1919 on business transacted in this country, amounted to $34,329,471. When these figures are thus grouped they appear to be a very substantial gain, but when they are analyzed they are not only found to be reasonable, but beyond all criticism.

During the year 1919 the five large packers slaughtered nearly 40,000,000 head of live stock in this country, consisting of 7,088,468 cattle, 20,716,515 hogs, 8,931,757 mutton, and 2,486,201 calves. The net profit to the packers derived from the sale of this immense quantity of meat and all the by-products derived from those animals, as well as all profit from all other sources of business transacted in this country, when divided by the number of animals, show the startling results of an average profit of only 87½ cents per head.

No farmer would be willing to slaughter the animals on his farm for such a small profit per head, to say nothing of finding a market for the meat and by-products. The packers could not do it, either, were it not for the immense number handled and the efficient distributive system they have developed through which a hundred million consumers are provided with fresh and wholesome meats for every meal every day in the year. All these things and more have contributed to the welfare of the country and the stabilization of industry and should be the subject of gratification rather than of abuse and condemnation.

VICTIM OF UNJUST CRITICISM.

No industry in the history of this country has been the victim of so much unjustifiable criticism. It has been charged with everything from causing the war to spreading the "flu." If prices of live stock decline no matter what the cause, it is charged to be the fault of the packer; if there is an advance, the consumers are told that the packers are profiteering.

Many stock-jobbing enterprises, organized to enrich their promoters, attempt to excuse their own shortsighted mismanagement by charging the packers with a conspiracy to destroy them. When the packers are forced to utilize the press of the country to correct the false statements made against them, their motives are questioned, and the integrity of the press is impugned. If one of the packers employs a representative in Washington for any legitimate purpose, all the packers are charged with dark designs to overreach unsuspecting officials.

Designing politicians, in and out of Congress, taking advantage of the general unrest and disturbed condition of the times, are exhausting all their energies in hunting for trivial and inconsequential incidents which they can twist into something to discredit one of the most vital industries of the country.

In such a business, employing multiplied thousands of men of every kind and character, of every creed and nationality, it is to be expected that mistakes will occur which the management condemn quite as readily and as vigorously as the public. The critics who can so readily find fault, but have so much difficulty in devising constructive reforms, never discuss the great achievements which have been wrought out in the interest of the producing and consuming public. They ignore the fundamental fact that the packers improved and made efficient the stockyards, they invented and developed the refrigerator cars and the refrigerator autotrucks. They established branch-house and cold-storage systems, which changed the marketing and distribution of perishable farm products from a local and seasonal business to a year-around business on a national and international scale. They have established and maintained a daily market, where food products of the farm and ranch find a certain and ready sale for cash on the spot, regardless of how much is sent to market.

PUBLIC-SERVICE REWARDS.

While it is true that these things have been wrought out as a matter of business, there have been rewards in other ways. There is a sense of satisfaction in performing a great public service, in doing a really constructive work that adds to the general progress and welfare of the age in which one lives. Those whose vision has not been clouded by the prejudices and jealousies engendered against this industry have expressed the opinion that it was a happy and fortunate thing for our country, during the war, to possess such well-developed business as the packing industry. In cooperation with the producers it met every duty and obligation placed upon it by the Government in an efficient manner and contributed its part in the greatest crisis of the world's history.

Instead of devising plans for the greater usefulness of this industry and of improving the economic welfare of the producers, some statesmen seem to deem it of greater importance to discuss matters that are only useful in a political way. Thus my personal salary and the consideration under which I undertook the responsibilities of the company I now represent have been discussed with unusual solemnity involving some improper transaction to be publicly condemned.

More than a year ago I voluntarily appeared before the Senate Committee on Agriculture during its hearing on the Kenyon-Kendrick bills, at which Senator NORRIS was present. At that hearing I gave all the facts in relation to the terms under which I accepted the presidency of this company. I was drawing a salary equally as large from another company before I accepted the presidency of this company, and under the circumstances I trust it will not be deemed immodest for me to say that I worked my way up from a salary of $20 per week.

SALARY CONSIDERATIONS.

This company was in difficulties at the time I took charge of it. Its common stock had no market value. The stock given me as an inducement to assume the responsibilities of its rehabilitation and also that upon which I took an option at a price far in advance of its then market value was not treasury stock or stock belonging to the company as inferred in the article by Senator NORRIS. It belonged to New York bankers who were heavily interested in loans and other financial obligations of the company. All this stock had been fully paid for when originally issued by the company but had lost its value on account of unsuccessful business & Co. He claimed that he earned his salary by telling them how they should run their business so as to best satisfy the public. When called upon to produce a single letter or memorandum in which he had given such advice, he was unable to do it. Mr. Swift, the head of Swift & Co., and Mr. Veeder, their general attorney, both corroborated Mr. Logan in his statement that he was employed simply as an adviser. They were both asked to produce a single letter or a single written statement of any kind that he had ever given them along the lines of his ostensible employment, but, like Mr. Logan, they were unable to do so.

It did develop, however, upon the investigation that he had given them information about affairs in Washington along lines that were entirely foreign to what they claimed was his duty as an employee of Swift & Co. In fact, in every case where any activity of Mr. Logan was disclosed in regard to Swift & Co. it always appeared that what he did had nothing whatever to do with what he claimed was his line of employment. For instance, it was disclosed that he had given to Swift & Co. advance information as to just what the food bill would be and as to just what would be required of the packers under the law. Even before Congress knew what kind of a food control act they were going to pass Mr. Logan had outlined the plan in full to his clients, Swift & Co. He gave them direct information of some disagreement between the President and Mr. Hoover, on one side, and Mr. Houston, Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, on the other; and when it is remembered that Congress was more or less a rubber stamp under the control of the President, the value of such information can be fully appreciated and understood.

Swift & Co., through Mr. Logan, knew before the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Houston, knew that Hoover would have complete control of the Food Administration, and that he would not only control the packers in this country, but that he would do the buying for the Allies as well as for the United States Government. Mr. Hoover and the President were in private conversation on the night of the 14th day of May, 1917. They went over the entire situation, and the legislation needed was at that time agreed upon and outlined. The next morning Mr. Logan reported the substance of the conference between Mr. Hoover and the President to his clients, Swift & Co. How he got his information, or who it was that told him what happened at that secret conference between the President and Hoover, can only be conjectured from the facts that I have outlined above.

When Congress appropriated the money to make the investigation of the packers by the Federal Trade Commission, it was Mr. Logan who gave to them the first information that the appropriation had passed, and in the notice he gave them he explained that there was no cause for worry; that he believed the status was satisfactory; and that the plans should not be changed until advised. It is quite apparent from the evidence that Mr. Logan possessed superior facilities for gaining inside information, and that, as a matter of fact, he was paid this magnificent salary by Swift & Co. partially for the inside information he was able to get and partially because they desired to contribute, in connection with the other great corporations, their share of the fund that would enable the trade journals and the political magazines to be editorially controlled by friendly minds.

"DIAMOND T."

The investigation by the Senate Committee on Agriculture disclosed the existence of a mysterious character who was very valuable to the packers in giving them advance information of possible legislation in Washington. This character was never designated by name. Wherever reference was made to him in the packers' memoranda it was by a character drawn with pen and ink. This character was represented by the letter "T" inclosed in a rectangular figure the shape of a diamond, but because the printer does not have any character that properly represents it I refer to the character as "Diamond T."

It is quite evident that "Diamond T" was a very important person. Nothing was developed in the evidence that ever disclosed anything that he had written or anything to which his signature was attached. Reference to this character only appears where information is given from one official to another that certain information had just been received from "Diamond T." It was from "Diamond T" that information was given of the beginning of the movement to fix maximum prices. In other instances reference is made to information from "Diamond T" which is not plain, and which is not explained by any other evidence. It is quite evident that the investigation only disclosed a small part of the information that was thus received. In one memorandum prepared by one of the officials reference is made to receiving valuable information, without disclosing what it was, with the statement that the matter referred to would be looked after at once. Another memorandum written by an assistant of one of the packers refers to a note from "Diamond T" in regard to the investigation about to take place before the Federal Trade Commission, and it is stated in this memorandum that "Diamond T" would be glad to have any suggestions that the packers desired to make. This memorandum likewise disclosed the fact that Mr. Veeder, the attorney for Swift & Co., was to see "Diamond T" the following Monday.

Another memorandum disclosed that on the 20th day of June, 1917, information was received by Mr. Veeder from "Diamond T" telling what had happened at a meeting of the Federal Trade Commission. The packers are told in this information from "Diamond T" that there will be enough delay to give plenty of time for readiness, and he suggests that they have everything ready in regard to high prices and their causes. This memorandum also suggests that Mr. McManus (another packer attorney) would be helpful at the Washington end "immediately." "Diamond T" at this time advised that even the exchange of telegrams would not be advisable, and so important was it to conceal the identity of "Diamond T" that the official who prepared the memorandum of information received from him asked that even the memorandum be destroyed "immediately."

DID NOT KNOW WHO HE WAS.

Mr. Swift, who handled some of this memoranda, on the witness stand denied all knowledge of the identity of the person known as "Diamond T." Mr. Veeder, general attorney for Swift & Co., when on the witness stand, likewise denied any recollections whatever of "Diamond T," although some of the memoranda referring to information received from "Diamond T" was prepared by Mr. Swift, and at least one of the memorandums disclosed the fact that Mr. Veeder was to meet in consultation with "Diamond T." There is no one who heard the testimony of Mr. Swift and Mr. Veeder, but must have been impressed with an irresistible conclusion that neither was telling the truth.

One might as well argue that a farmer who bought a run-down and worn-out farm in Nebraska and by good business management increased its fertility would not, after making it productive, be entitled to the increased value his energy and industry had created. There is no watered stock in this company. There are now real assets of a value in excess of all the outstanding stock issued.

The Senator devotes much space to a discussion of a case in Washington involving purely a technical violation of the law relating to weights and measures. One of the vegetable canning plants formerly owned by this company put up a limited number of cans of catsup in 5-gallon cans for the hotel and restaurant trade. The canning process necessarily required the material to be heated to a very high temperature and sealed while hot. The cans were filled with the full 5 gallons, and they were so marked. It was later discovered that when they cooled the expansion caused by the heat disappeared and there was a shrinkage—not in weight, but in volume. If our agents had marked the weight rather than the gallons on the cans, there would have been no case.

THE SHRINKAGE IN THE CATSUP CANS.

The cans were filled full, but the subsequent shrinkage which was unavoidable showed us that such packages should be marked with the net weight rather than by quantity in gallons. The judge and the district attorney both said that they were satisfied that there was no improper motive or purpose on the part of the company, and therefore fixed a purely nominal fine, as the statutes had been technically violated because of the shrinkage in volume and in measurement of quantity—something we did not foresee nor did we have any knowledge of it until the complaint was filed.

The Senator seizes upon this isolated incident to attack the integrity and honesty of this great industry, and, without any facts to support the charge, he recklessly states that we have probably violated the pure food law in every city and hamlet in the United States; but he admits he knew of no other case where any penalty was assessed, nor have we had any complaints from any other points. Catsup in 5-gallon cans is not sold in every place, but is put up specially for a limited trade among hotels and restaurants, so the assumption was wholly unwarranted.

The movement, primarily begun with a view to improving the economic position of the feeders of live stock, has been largely obscured by other radical forces, who are keeping alive this fight for other purposes.

RADICAL ELEMENTS INVOLVED.

It is high time that the real producers of live stock who have the best interests of the industry at heart should understand that there is now much more involved in this fight than matters which affect their own welfare. The most radical and un-American elements in our national life have seized on to this movement and are using it as a means to inaugurate the nationalization of all industry.

Some of these forces have established legislative bureaus at Washington and are posing as the representatives of the farmers and are demanding in their name the passage of all kinds of radical and un-American legislation for the sinister purposes above stated. Radical elements of the labor organizations are attempting to form a coalition with radical farm organizations for the purpose of controlling legislation, and have threatened with defeat all Members of Congress who refuse to obey their mandates.

Only recently a very drastic bill regulating the packing industry was introduced in the House at the behest of these forces. It was not prepared by the producers of live stock but by the radical elements of organized labor. It does not deal with any question of labor but is offered for the benefit of the producers. It is a combination of the most drastic provisions of all preceding measures offered in Congress on this subject.

These so-called representatives of the farmers and producers carried their propaganda to such an extent as to arouse the real American farmers and producers. Their cause was being placed in a wrong light before the country. Attempts were being made to force through vicious legislation in their name. They decided to call a halt on this movement.

IDEAS OF FARMERS' ORGANIZATIONS.

Being imbued with the spirit of true Americans and opposed to the efforts to put this Government into private business, a joint meeting of the executive officials of seven of the largest and most representative national agricultural organizations was held at Washington on January 28, 1920, for the purpose of memorializing Congress, the object of which was to repudiate the radical views of those self-styled representatives of the farmers and to express correctly the sentiments of the real and patriotic farmers of the United States concerning matters of national concern pending before Congress.

The organizations joining in the memorial were the International Farm Congress, the National Grange, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Farmers' Union, the National Milk Producers' Federation, the Farmers' National Congress, and the American Cotton Association. I wish space would permit quotation in full of what these organizations said to Congress. It emphasized very forcibly what to my mind are the true fundamental principles of American institutions.

I will quote a portion of the memorial, as it clearly sets forth the principles I have discussed in these articles. They said:

COUNTRY AND FLAG FIRST.

"The first and constant obligation of every citizen and of every organization of citizens is undivided loyalty to our country. Its institutions must be protected and its traditions preserved and respected.

OBSERVE ECONOMIC LAWS.

"The attempt to thwart natural economic laws by legislation is useless. The laws of supply and demand should have full sway. Government price fixing interferes with the operation of the law of supply and demand and disturbs the equilibrium established by that law. If a price so fixed is higher than is justified by supply and demand, it is unjust to the consumer; if lower, it is unjust to the producer. We are therefore opposed to governmental price fixing, and in the event that the State does fix the price of any essential commodity, we insist that it shall at the same time fix prices on all other essential commodities. To compel any group of citizens to sell their products in a regulated market and to buy their supplies and necessities in an unregulated market is an unjust and dangerous discrimination.

PROTECTION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY.

It is only in the safeguarding and protection of every right of private property that there can be perpetuated the full measure of individual initiative and emulation upon which a democracy is based and by which its future is assured.

A day or two after Mr. Veeder had emphatically and persistently denied on the witness stand that he had any recollection or knowledge whatever of the identity of "Diamond T" he returned to the witness stand and stated that Mr. Logan had told him that he (Logan) had sent in the information referred to in at least one of the "Diamond T" memorandums. To me it looks as though this secondary evidence was given for the purpose of shouldering the identity of "Diamond T" upon a person already identified, and thus prevent, if possible, any further investigation as to his identity. It is quite evident that "Diamond T" had no reference to Mr. Logan, because where information was received from Logan, there was no disposition to conceal that fact.

How much "Diamond T" received in the way of compensation, or who he was, will perhaps always remain a mystery. That he was some one high in official councils, and therefore a very expensive character, and that he was able to give the packers exceedingly valuable and inside information, will not for a moment be questioned. That the men who were dealing directly with him in such important matters, where many millions of dollars were involved, should completely forget his identity when they had taken such great pains to conceal it is completely beyond comprehension; and when these men go upon the witness stand and deny any knowledge of the identity of this mysterious individual they not only convince the honest man that they are guilty of falsehood, but they make themselves ridiculous in the eyes of all honest people. Such testimony, if given by the ordinary person, would be at once branded as false, but when testified to by those who represent hundreds of millions of dollars it escapes notice in the news items of the day.

ADVERTISING.

One of the most remarkable attempts to control the public sentiment of the country through the instrumentality of the public press has been going on for the last three or four years. The packers are not the only corporations engaged in this great undertaking. There are many other great corporations that are equally guilty. It is a nation-wide campaign to build up a reactionary sentiment in favor of the great corporations of the country. But in this article we are dealing only with the packers, and I confine myself in my comments to the part which they have taken in this colossal undertaking. I do not want to be understood as claiming that all of this advertising was unnecessary or subject to criticism. Neither do I argue that because a newspaper accepts advertising it is necessarily controlled in its editorial policy. The assertion is made, however, that the advertising of the packers is far beyond any legitimate, fair, or even liberal allowance for that purpose, and neither can there be any doubt but that some newspapers are controlled in their editorial policy by the advertising end of the business. Many others remain silent in their editorial columns when they would otherwise condemn, if it were not for the oiling of the business machinery through advertising.

There can be no doubt but that one of the objects of this campaign was to mold public sentiment, and to close up the criticism that their acts would otherwise receive at the hands of newspapers. There was evidence developed upon the investigation to show that this was the real intent and purpose of a large portion of the advertising. The packers carry large page and half-page advertisements in all the newspapers of the United States. No country paper was too small to be taken into consideration by them. Large display advertisements appeared in newspapers that had only two or three hundred subscribers. Moreover, the greatest of this advertising took place at a time when no advertising was needed in order to sell their products. It took place at a time when there was a shortage of production, when they were positively unable to supply the hungry with the food which it desired.

APPRECIATION OF COUNTRY.

This is the best country the sun shines on. Its opportunities are boundless and are open to every individual who cares to avail himself of them. Its Government is the best in the world. There is nothing fundamentally wrong with it. A people who would not appreciate and defend it would be unworthy to exist as a nation. A man who would injure or destroy it is unfit to live under the protection of its flag.

In my opinion, there has never been expressed a clearer declaration of the American principles. These American farmers also told Congress that they were emphatically opposed to Government ownership or continued operation of the railroads.

Those of us who are charged with the responsibility of preserving this industry and of protecting the interests of our stockholders, as well as those of the great producing and consuming public, fully realize the import of many things not yet manifest to the general public.

We have felt the presence in all this agitation of forces who care no more for the producers than they do for the packer. These forces are filling the press with false and misleading information and are striving to keep alive the flames of passion and prejudice in the hope of launching this country on a career contrary to all the best principles and traditions upon which its greatness has been achieved.

This agitation and the unwarranted attacks growing out of it have not benefited anyone, and sooner or later it will be found that anything which handicaps the packer and makes it more difficult and expensive for him to distribute his products will in the end militate against the interests of the producer and consumer as well.

THE GRONNA BILL.

The Gronna bill now pending in the Senate, in my opinion, will interfere with private initiative. It delegates to a commission very arbitrary powers, which, according to our experience under similar agencies, will prove to be a detriment rather than a benefit. Producers who are vitally interested in this important subject should write for a copy of this bill and study its provisions. Find in it, if you can, anything calculated to benefit any branch of this industry.

Among its many drastic features is one which will prohibit even the smallest packing plant, even if owned by a cooperative organization, from owning any interest in the stockyards around the plant. Who will build such yards around small plants in remote sections?

This bill is held out as one designed to encourage the establishment of cooperative packing plants, yet one may read the entire measure without discovering the slightest reference to such concerns. Section 25 of the bill purports to offer some advantages to concerns that register with this commission, in the way of information, but there is not a benefit promised that any citizen can not now obtain from the Department of Agriculture, information secured and compiled under laws already in existence. Yet under the Gronna bill the packer who agrees to register is bound to obey every rule and regulation made by the commission, which includes the power to prescribe the conditions upon which the packer shall take title to any commodity handled. The commission would have the power to fix the price of everything purchased by such registrant.

Much more could be written on this subject and concerning the organized efforts and propaganda to shackle one of the most important American industries.

THE PACKERS' DEFENSE.

The only defense the packers made is that this advertising was necessary in order to show up the erroneous conclusion that they claimed the Federal Trade Commission had reached in its investigation. An examination of the subject, however, will disclose that this advertising campaign was on in full blast long before the Federal Trade Commission's report was given to the public. An examination will also disclose that a very large part of the matter included in the advertising had no reference whatever to the sale of any of their products and made no attempt to refute the charges of the Federal Trade Commission.

The advertising campaign of the packers is akin to the former practice of railroads in issuing passes to all influential people, particularly those who had to do with the making of laws controlling the railroads or the enforcement of them. The person who received a pass was not requested to use his influence in their favor, and it does not follow that because a man received a pass he was in any way influenced; but on the whole it was universally conceded that the promiscuous issuing of passes was an evil; that it interfered with the enactment of railroad laws and the administration even in courts of justice where railroads were parties litigant. The enlightened public sentiment of the country condemned the practice, and nearly ever State in the Union has made it illegal.

I have before me the Sunday edition of a great metropolitan daily, published in the latter part of 1919, in which Armour & Co. have more than 15 pages of advertising. The matter is highly and beautifully illustrated, and a great deal of the space is taken up with a showing made in behalf of the philanthropic treatment on the part of this great corporation of its employees. One would think in reading over the very well written articles that Armour & Co. is organized more for philanthropic purposes than for financial reasons.

I have searched hundreds of country newspapers coming from the smallest villages and have never yet found a paper that was not patronized by the packers in the way of advertising. I have a copy of a small newspaper, published way out on the frontier, in a small country town, that contains a half-page advertisement, signed by all five of the great packers, in which they make common cause to demonstrate that it would be difficult, indeed, for the country to exist without them.

On February 28, 1918, Swift & Co. had a large display advertisement in practically all of the great newspapers of the United States, in which they devote the entire space to a demonstration that the employees of Swift & Co. are patriotic. Nothing is said in it about anything for sale and nothing is said in regard to a defense of any of the charges made by the Federal Trade Commission; but for some reason they seem to be imbued with the idea that some one had charged their employees with being unpatriotic, and they rush into print, wrap themselves in the American flag, and proclaim their patriotism from the housetops. During the war this was a favorite pastime for all profiteers. When a big corpora-

HAVE BEEN PATIENT AND TOLERANT.

Clever advantage has been taken of the general dislike of the so-called high cost of living and the general antagonism stirred up against the larger packers through misleading and unjustifiable attacks. Throughout all this agitation and general disturbance of business we have tried to keep a spirit of patience and tolerance, trusting in the final judgment of the people for a proper understanding of our problems. In the meantime we have stood in the forefront of the fight against those who are seeking to revolutionize American institutions through Government ownership or operation of private business.

The packing business is a manufacturer operating on a very slender margin of profit between millions of producers on one side and millions of consumers on the other. Dealing in essential food products, it represents a fertile field, in which agitators can sow the seeds of unrest and discontent.

No form of legislation yet proposed can or will allay this discontent, however much the politicians may promise it can be done. What is most needed is a more sympathetic understanding and cordial cooperation between different interests in the industry. We need an era of peace, for readjustments of commercial relations which were thrown out of gear through the vicissitudes of war. We need a revival of the spirit of good-fellowship and of patriotic pride in American achievements. Let us all do our part toward these ends and many of our apparent differences will disappear.

tion was about to cut a melon or a few millionaires were about to rob the Government in some unconscionable contract, they always made an attempt to distract attention by parading in public under the Stars and Stripes.

SPENT HUGE SUMS.

For the year 1918 Swift & Co. alone spent over $1,600,000 for advertising, and Mr. Swift himself admitted that they would spend $2,500,000 in the year 1919. This would mean more than $200,000 a month, about $7,000 per day. Assuming that the other members of the "Big Five" spend one-half of what Swift & Co. spends, which everybody will admit is way below the actual fact, we find that the great packers on this basis spend more than $8,500,000 annually for advertising. This would be more than $1,000 for every hour of the 24.

This cost only includes what is actually paid to the newspapers and magazines. To keep the machinery going and to employ the necessary men to prepare the advertisements entails an additional expense of enormous amounts. It must be remembered that this is only one corporation. If you spread this over the country at the same rate, it means that trainloads of paper are used in this wonderful propaganda, 90 per cent of which is useless so far as any legitimate object is concerned. This wonderful advertising of great corporations, if reduced to its legitimate sphere, would of itself alone settle the acute question, which is now country-wide, of a paper shortage. It must be remembered, too, that these great corporations do not in reality pay one penny of all these enormous expenses that I have enumerated. The wonderful financial outlay, enormous as it is, is placed upon the unwilling and overburdened shoulders of the producer and the consumer.

For the last 50 years the packers have been growing in size, and as they have grown their disposition to avoid the law has increased with their size. They have been fined an innumerable number of times for violation of the criminal statutes. Their attempt to control the prices of the country through their lavish expenditure of money is partially accounted for by their desire to conceal publicity of their transgressions. While they are fighting before a referee in Chicago with their employees, who are seeking better working conditions, they are advertising in Minneapolis the alleged advanced sanitary conditions of their packing establishments. By their utilization of newspaper space they are making it physically impossible for newspapers, even if they desired to do so, to give proper publicity to the cases where they have been found to have violated the law. They have spent many thousands of dollars in the use of special trains to carry delegates to various conventions where editors, particularly of farm journals, have been invited to be their guests for the real purpose of indirectly influencing the news columns of such magazines and for the purpose of suppressing from the people a knowledge of their shortcomings. The editor of the Nebraska Farmer could undoubtedly tell of such an invitation that he recently received himself.

On the 7th day of March, 1919, a Washington paper, on an inside page in a very inconspicuous place, gave an account of the trial and conviction of an agent of one of the "Big Five," who, in the city of Washington, had violated the pure food law by selling catsup in original packages which were short in actual measurement. It was shown at the trial that the cans of catsup were marked as containing 5 gallons each, and that upon actual measurement they were considerably short of that amount. One can was shown on actual measurement to be 2 quarts short. A third can was taken by the officials and brought into court unopened, and upon the trial of the case the prosecution offered to rest its entire case upon the unopened can. It was proposed that the can be opened and that if it was full measure the prosecution would be dismissed.

The great packing concern, however, declined to accept this proposition. The result was that the agent making the sale was found guilty, and he was fined the enormous sum of $10. It is fair to assume that these cans were no exception to the general rule, and that this great corporation had sold thousands, perhaps tens of thousands, of these same cans, all of which were undoubtedly short in measure. They had probably violated the pure food law in every city and hamlet in the United States, but so far as I have been able to learn this was the only place where they paid any penalty.

A DIFFERENT KIND OF STORY.

It happened that the same paper containing this announcement contained a column article written in behalf of this same packer. It was only one of many that had been printed in practically all the papers of the United States—a nicely written article, directed to "Dear Folks," and signed by William C. Freeman, of New York City. The ordinary reader would not get the idea that it was an advertisement, but these series of articles contain a most ingenious and misleading argument in behalf of the honesty of this member of the "Big Five." In one of their articles Mr. Freeman tells about his visit to the plant; how satisfied and enthusiastic all the employees were; and with what marvelous consideration every whim of the faithful employee is looked after by this great corporation. In other articles he speaks, as do the advertisements of the packing company, of the guaranty of the company's brand. The slogan, "The Wilson Label Protects Your Table," has been printed a million times and is familiar to every citizen of the United States.

These articles, paid for by the producers and consumers of our country, attempt to demonstrate that when you buy of Wilson & Co. you run no chance of being defrauded; that the brand of this company is a guaranty of purity, of quality, and of quantity; and yet, while this enormous propaganda is going on over the country this great corporation is violating the law and practicing deception, which if committed by the ordinary, common individual would cause him to be driven out of the community as a citizen unworthy of belief.

BIG SALARIES PAID.

It will be found upon investigation that the middle men who handle the food products after they leave the producer and until they reach the consumer are receiving salaries that in many cases are altogether out of proportion to the work they actually do. In fact, many of the men who are engaged in the packing business devote most of their time and most of their energies to concealing the true situation. Let us take Wilson & Co., one of the "Big Five," as an example.

Several years ago Mr. Wilson was elected president of that corporation. He was given a salary of $125,000 a year, which he still draws. In addition to giving him that salary they gave him outright $100,000 as a bonus in cash. In addition to this they gave him $1,500,000 of the common stock of the company without the payment of one cent. In addition to all this they gave him an option on $3,500,000 more of the common stock, at $10 per share, which option he afterwards exercised. When he exercised this option and purchased this stock, he did it without the payment of a dollar of his own funds. He simply sold some of the stock that had been given him, at from $50 to $55 per share, and purchased the option at $10 per share; so when the transaction was completed he found himself the owner of 43,000 shares of the stock, of the par value of $4,300,000, which cost him nothing. In 1917 this stock paid a little over 16 per cent, and, according to Mr. Wilson's own statement, is worth much more than par. We can, therefore, sum it up by saying that out of this transaction, within two or three years time, Mr. Wilson found himself with a salary of $125,000 a year, a cash bonus of $100,000, and a gift of stock worth more than $4,300,000—all without the investment of a dollar; all paid for by the producers of hogs and the consumers of meat.

Little transactions like these have been going on for many years and are going on now. The public is turning water into a steady stream of gold that goes to men who neither toil nor spin, excepting as they manipulate figures and prices. The producer is still toiling. The consumer is still suffering. Their suffering and their toil have made possible the luxury of many of the so-called great captains of industry.

DISHONEST EXPENDITURE.

No one will probably ever know just how much money has been spent by the packers to control legislation, to appoint officials, and to deceive the public. It is doubtful whether packers themselves could give this information correctly. For instance, the books of Swift & Co. would nowhere show the payment of any salary to Mr. Logan. There is no item anywhere which would indicate how much money was paid to "Diamond T." It appears, for instance, that Mr. Veeder, the general attorney for Swift & Co., was paid $71,000 in one year, but he was drawing a salary of less than $25,000. While he was getting a salary of about $25,000 his expenses amounted to about $50,000. Mr. Swift seemed to be unable to tell definitely just what Mr. Veeder's salary was. He was unable to tell why they paid him over $70,000 when he was getting a salary of less than $25,000. An examination of the evidence also discloses that Mr. Veeder was in the habit, outside entirely of his expense account, of acting as the middleman by whom sums of money were transferred not only from his client but from all the other packers to various officials. So that the enormous discrepancy between his salary and his expenses, in addition to the various sums of money, amounting to many thousands of dollars, which passed through his hands from the packers to almost numberless persons who were carrying out their plans in various localities, remains unexplained.

Large amounts of money were spent in political contests. Contributions to elect Members of Congress were made by the various packers. Large sums of money were expended to handle legislation in a large number of State legislatures. In one case the evidence shows that the packers took part down in Oklahoma in the election of a local assessor, and they were so careful that the assessor should be friendly that they contributed to both sides of the contest. A contribution of $2,000 was made by one of the big packers to a firm of attorneys in Texas for legal services and "legislative services in Austin." Instructions were sent from Chicago that a receipt should be taken "in accordance with the understanding had with Mr. Veeder in his office in Chicago on May 21, 1908."

In another case a check for $500 was sent to an attorney at Fort Worth, Tex., in which Mr. Veeder asked the recipient to use the money "in accordance with our conversation." He also notified the attorney that he would receive the same amount each from Armour & Co. and the Stock Yards Co. In Illinois the evidence shows that various sums at various times were contributed to influence the legislature. They did their best to defeat the eight-hour law for women. They took an active interest in defeating the bill in regard to renovated butter that the farmers desired put on the statute books. They used their power against the enactment of laws regulating the cold storage of meat, fish, eggs, and poultry.

BUY UP TRADE PRESS.

The National Provisioner is a trade publication published by the Food Trade Publishing Co. of New York. Its subscribers consist mostly of packers and dealers in various articles of food. For many years the general manager of this concern was a man by the name of McCarthy. Mr. McCarthy was also the secretary of the American Meat Packing Association, an organization composed of all the packers, big and little, throughout the United States. Holding these two positions, it is quite evident that Mr. McCarthy could be of inestimable service to the Big Five if he were so disposed. The National Provisioner went to most of the customers and as secretary of the American Meat Packing Association he came into direct contact with all the packers throughout the United States. The evidence disclosed that Mr. McCarthy was secretly paid a regular yearly salary of $5,000 a year by Armour, Morris, and Swift. It is denied by the owners of the National Provisioner that they had any knowledge of this secret bonus of Mr. McCarthy.

The American Meat Packers' Association, that was supposed to be operated in the interest of all packers, big and small, had, of course, no knowledge that their secretary was getting a salary on the side, contributed secretly by three of the Big Five. It further appears that after we got into the war and after the establishment of the Food Administration, in making up some of the various committees to properly carry out the administration of the law, Mr. McCarthy, because he was secretary of the American Meat Packers' Association and was therefore supposed to be fair and unbiased and well acquainted with all of them, was requested by the Food Administration to suggest the names of some of the small packers who would be suitable for appointment to such committees; and that before he took action on this request he communicated with the packers who were contributing this money on the side in order to make a selection that would be satisfactory to them. He was thus giving ample evidence to the big packers that he was earning the secret salary they were paying him. This is only an illustration of the method employed by the packers in the control of all kinds of associations. They scatter thousands of dollars around over the country in the payment of secret salaries to persons having official connection with organizations that have anything to do with the meat or food business.

LOANING OF MONEY.

The packers are heavy borrowers, as everybody knows. They continually borrow many millions of dollars, and their paper is scattered all over the country. You would not suppose therefore that an ordinary individual could go to the packers and borrow money; but in order to borrow money of the packers it is only necessary for them to be convinced that you are able to build up public sentiment in their favor or to be influential in the handling of a public official having to do with their business or to be of assistance in the preventing of any unfriendly legislation or in securing the passage of desired laws.

This practice is well illustrated by what happened just before the war in Fort Worth, Tex. Both Armour and Swift have packing plants at Fort Worth. Together they own the stockyards at that place. The evidence discloses that they loaned money to a man by the name of Armstrong, in Fort Worth, for the purpose of buying an interest in a daily paper there which had been advocating the control and regulation by the Government of the meat-packing business. They considered the paper unfriendly. Both Armour and Swift loaned money to Mr. Armstrong. It is noticeable that after the money was loaned and Armstrong became a part owner the policy of the paper changed. In writing to the packers for a renewal of the loan Mr. Armstrong called attention in his letter to the fact that he had gone into the newspaper business to be of service to Mr. Armour and Mr. Swift, and also called attention to the editorial policy of the paper "before and after taking." It is unnecessary to say that he had no difficulty in getting an extension of his loan.

The men who were running this paper, however, were not aware that their competitor, the other daily newspaper published at Fort Worth, was likewise having its machinery oiled by packer money. The president of Swift & Co., in a letter, asked his attorney whether they had better comply with the request of this other paper for a "donation" of $1,200, which should be given ostensibly in return for a "page devoted to hogs and hog raising." In this letter Mr. Swift called his attention to the fact that Armour & Co. and the Stock Yards Co., of Fort Worth, were each contributing like amounts. In addition to this, it seems that the editor of this paper was loaned $5,000 by Swift & Co. He did not pay his interest promptly, and Mr. Swift asked his attorney whether he thought it would antagonize this editor if he sent him a bill for the interest, saying that the editor also owed Armour & Co. a like amount, and he had paid the interest. The attorney, however, asked Mr. Swift not to present any bill for interest at that time, because they had some important litigation pending in Texas, and he thought it would not be wise to ask for the payment of interest from the editor until this litigation had been disposed of.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

It must be remembered that the Federal Trade Commission recommended that prosecutions be commenced against the packers. They turned the evidence over to the Attorney General at the time they made their report, more than a year ago. That the evidence shows plain violation of law there can be no doubt whatever. The violation of the Sherman antitrust law, in some instances, could have been proved by their own correspondence, signed by their own officials. They were liable both criminally and civilly. At a recent hearing before the Senate Committee on Agriculture, the present Attorney General, Mr. Palmer, testified that this evidence submitted by the Federal Trade Commission showed that the packers had violated the law, but that he had decided not to commence any criminal proceedings against them. Instead, he determined to commence a civil suit. For weeks the papers were full of announcements that the Attorney General was about to proceed against the packers. I think the country generally understood that the suit was actually commenced and was pending. The people would be perfectly justified in reaching this conclusion from the announcements that were made at various times in the public press. A suit was finally actually filed and judgment rendered on it, but it looks as if it had been agreed upon in advance between the attorney and the packers before it was actually filed. How many of the people really believe that the Attorney General had accomplished the great things that he so bombastically boasted of in the headlines of the newspapers?

The ordinary individual, the common citizen, who violates the law and commits a crime has no opportunity to make an arrangement with the prosecuting attorney by which a civil suit shall be commenced, satisfactory to both sides, with the understanding that no criminal prosecution shall take place. The ordinary thief would be glad, indeed, if he could agree with the prosecuting attorney that an injunction suit should be commenced in court against him and an injunction issued restraining him from further commissions of crime, if by such an agreement he could escape punishment for his criminal act. The trouble with the ordinary petty thief is that he does not steal enough to come under this new and humane rule of the Department of Justice. In his newspaper campaign to reduce the cost of living, the Attorney General can not stop to consider any of the little fellows. It would appear upon careful analysis that his boasted suit against the packers consisted in agreeing in advance with the attorneys for the packers upon a petition, an answer, and a decree, and that no papers were filed until this agreement was reached, and the Government and the packers both voluntarily went into court, presented the decree, and asked the judge to sign his name upon the dotted line.

MORE MIGHT BE SAID.

In the foregoing sidelights I have made no attempt to exhaust the subject. The facts are that the subject is almost inexhaustible. We approach the domain of the great packers as a little child would approach a giant. At every step we are impressed with their wonderful power, their inexhaustible resources, the infinite network of connection with the most powerful financial institutions of the country. Their paid emissaries are in every locality. They are secretly entrenched in politics, in all kinds of business, and in nearly all the activities of human endeavor. To carry out their ends they have all kinds of instrumentalities. They are equipped to go into the church, and are likewise prepared to send the bum into the saloon. They have an army of highly paid, useless employees, who can give no honorable reason for their packer connections. Their agents are at the meeting of every legislature and in the Capital City at Washington. Their control of human food is so great that expense is a secondary consideration. They know that, after all, all these expenses are paid and all this machinery is oiled by the consumers of the country. If their expenses increase, they have but to lower the price that they pay to the producer, or increase the price that they charge the consumer, or both. The competition of the independent dealers is negligible. In fact, the existence of independent packing establishments is desired by them, so long as they do not develop in size and their competition becomes dangerous. They fix the price, and when they have fixed a price that covers all their unnecessary extravagance and expense, it naturally follows that a multitude of little packers can follow along in their tracks and make big profits.

I have made no attempt in this article to discuss what I believe to be the fundamental reasons for their great power. Neither have I suggested a remedy. It will be found upon a full and impartial investigation by the honest student that their privately owned refrigerator cars, their ownership and control of stockyards and refrigerator plants, together with their intimate connection with large financial institutions, are the main sources of their power. It is not my purpose to discuss the remedy here, but in conclusion I desire to say that by the ownership and control of refrigerator cars and stockyards the packer question is inseparably intermingled with the question of railroad control, and it will be found impossible to properly control one without controlling the other, and mainly in this I think can be demonstrated the remedy that must ultimately be applied to narrow the present mammoth and expensive gulf that exists between the producer and the ultimate consumer.

Mr. FERNALD. Not everyone that saith "Lord, Lord," shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but only those that do the will of the Lord.

I realize that at almost every session some Senator rises in the interest of the farmers of this country. I have already stated that my sympathies are with them. My feelings are with them. I have lived among them, and no man ever had a greater interest in the farming industry of this country than I have. I realize that the farmers have many hardships to endure. I fully realize that they work more hours and harder and for less pay than any other class of people in the world, and I also realize that the farmers of this country are not going to be fooled by any sort of legislation represented to be in their interest unless it is in their interest. You go over this country from one end to the other, and you will hear one slogan from the farmers: "Why don't you economize? Give us some economy." And, my dear Senators, instead of economizing, we have been going on here creating commissions and making places now for deserving Republicans, making places in the past for deserving Democrats. You create this commission, and inside of five years it will cost a million dollars a year, at least, and there will have to be places for five or six hundred deserving Republicans.

Why, this reform business has gone on, Senators, to such an extent that it is getting to be about the sixth largest industry in the United States. It is surpassed only by the steel and iron and cotton businesses and agriculture and printing. All you have to do to start a reformation down here is to create commissions.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, does the Senator mean that the Government commission business has gotten to be the largest?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; it has gotten to be the largest in the world. I used to think, as a young man, that beginning a reform was a sort of indoor duty; that it ought to begin at home; that everybody, if they were going to reform their habits, should begin at home; but I find that I was entirely mistaken on the subject. It is an outdoor sport, and you have to create a commission down here, and you have to have $10,000-a-year men. You can not have men who are paid any less. Just start in with $10,000-a-year men, and you have to have agents to go about, and you have to have public men to assemble in different places and talk this thing over, and you have to have women advocates to go over the country and tell the people about it. You once get a commission started and the farmers of this country may have millions and millions added to the burdens that they now carry.

You can not fool the farmers of this country. They know what they want, and they know that if they are to have any prosperity all the business of the country must prosper. You have to have prosperity everywhere. You can not make the farmers prosper without this. The farmers of my State realize this, and the farmers all over this country realize it.

Senators, I may have to talk a little more about this tomorrow. I have been on the floor for nearly three hours. I have before me here a document under whose provisions all citizens are guaranteed protection in life, liberty, and property. It is called the Constitution of the United States; and I will ask you, Senators, to give pause to this one word "liberty," for upon it the whole fabric of this Government is founded.

Recently, sailing into New York Harbor, I was inspired, as I always am, by the vision of that noble Statue of Liberty—"Liberty enlightening the world." If this vital element of which that magnificent statue is a symbol be taken from our Government, and our people regulated by bureaus and commissions created by Congress, then tear down the monument; pitch into the sea that symbol of Americanism and patriotism for which our fathers fought. Let the waters close over it forever. Blot from the pages of history that inspiring speech of the great and immortal Webster, who, returning to his native town in the old Granite State, on a memorable occasion, speaking to his people, looking off to the West on the grandest panorama of mountain scenery that human eyes had ever witnessed, said, in one of his most eloquent perorations:

Yonder, my friends, you see a mountain whose peak rises above us. Still farther west is another whose crowning point is higher still. Higher yet is the eagle's flight; but above all is the eternal principle of justice.

I repeat, if our people are to be deprived of the principles of justice by legislation, then such words of glowing patriotism by those who helped to found this Republic become as sounding brass or tinkling cymbals. If our citizens are to be deprived of their rights, then pull down that old ensign which has heretofore been the banner of the free, strike down the Liberty pole and rear in its stead on a brazen staff the red flag of bolshevism.

Ah! Senators, these things can never be. That old ensign, for which thousands and hundreds of thousands of the bravest boys in the bravest Nation of the world have been willing to die, shall continue to stand for liberty, for freedom, for justice. I can not believe, I will not admit that bureaucracy is to be the policy of this Government. I have faith in the Senators and Representatives in this assembly. I believe we shall meet this matter in a spirit of fairness; that when the clouds clear and the mists rise, we too shall rise, inspired and stimulated by a desire to reestablish the doctrines and principles of our fathers, and once more give to our citizens, so long as they shall act within the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, the right and opportunity to exercise their ambition and their initiative; and that we shall bequeath to our children and our children's children in its full significance that flag which was carried by our grandsires in the dark days of the Revolution, by our fathers over the plains of Mexico, by our brothers at Manila and San Juan, and by our sons at Chateau-Thierry and the Argonne, and a nation governed, not by bureaus and commissions, but a government of the people, by the people, for the people—sovereign, grand, and free.

The following paper was presented by Mr. JONES of New Mexico during Mr. FERNALD's speech and ordered to be printed in the RECORD at the end thereof:

"BRIEF SKETCH OF FEATURES OF THE LEGAL WORK OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION AND INQUIRIES MADE BY IT THROUGH THE ECONOMIC DIVISION SINCE ITS ORGANIZATION.

"ADDENDUM—COMPLAINT AGAINST UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION ET AL.

"Since the preparation of the statement herewith, the commission has issued and served its formal complaint against the United States Steel Corporation and 11 of its subsidiaries, in connection with the so-called 'Pittsburgh plus' price for steel.

"This complaint is the result of applications for complaint filed with the commission in 1919 by the Western Association of Rolled Steel Consumers and other users of steel products, and is the outgrowth of conditions complained of by more than 2,700 fabricators of steel in Chicago, Duluth, and Birmingham districts, the legislatures of three States, by several municipalities, and chambers of commerce and business organizations throughout the United States.

"In the opinion of Judge Gary, of the Steel Corporation, the question involved in this proceeding is one of the most important the commission has ever had before it. He strongly urged the commission to assume jurisdiction, adding that one reason why he believed it to be of such great moment was that a decision in the steel industry would have a marked effect on a great majority of the other basic industries of the country.

"Generally speaking, under this 'Pittsburgh plus' price device all steel—except rails—wherever made and whether made by the Steel Corporation plants or by independents, is sold at the f. o. b. Pittsburgh price, plus an amount equivalent to the freight to the point of destination, which means, for instance, that the Gary, Ind., steel fabricator who runs his own truck to the steel mill at the place and purchases steel manufactured at that plant must pay the price charged in Pittsburgh plus an amount equaling the freight rate from Pittsburgh to Gary.

"As a matter of fact, under this system the price of steel manufactured at Gary is $7.60 per ton more than that manufactured in Pittsburgh, notwithstanding the fact that steel is manufactured in Gary by the respondent at much less cost than Pittsburgh. Again, the price at Atlanta, Ga., on steel manufactured at Birmingham and transported at a comparatively small cost to Atlanta is $12.50 per ton greater than its price in Pittsburgh, notwithstanding the fact that steel is manufactured at much less cost at Birmingham than at Pittsburgh.

"The complaint alleges, among other things, that the Steel Corporation and its said subsidiaries and their competitors engaged in the manufacture of rolled steel utilize the discriminatory Pittsburgh plus price to accomplish, and in fact do accomplish, the following purposes:

"(1) Secure for the Pittsburgh steel manufacturers substantially 50 per cent of the steel manufacturing business of the United States, discouraging the establishment of steel fabricating factories outside of Pittsburgh and encouraging their establishment and maintenance in Pittsburgh.

"(2) Maintain for the steel manufacturers of the United States substantially uniform prices, which they could not otherwise do, as the use of such price enables them to know at all times the exact price which every manufacturer of rolled steel would charge therefor at all points of the United States and to readily detect any manufacturer who deviates therefrom.

"(3) Fix and maintain for the high-cost steel-manufacturing plants at Pittsburgh sufficiently high prices for their product to operate at a profit without having their business jeopardized by the lower-cost steel-manufacturing plants in other sections of the United States.

"(4) Secure for the low-cost steel-manufacturing plants outside of Pittsburgh not only the profit which the high-cost Pittsburgh steel-manufacturing plants secure, but unduly large additional profits, because they manufacture rolled steel at a much lower cost than at Pittsburgh and they charge a much higher price for the same, namely, the Pittsburgh plus price.

"(5) Increase, as far as the steel manufacturers outside of Pittsburgh are concerned, their profits each time the railroad transportation charge on steel is increased, since the said price is increased to correspond with each freight-rate increase.

"Under the law the respondents are given 30 days after service of the complaint to file their answers, after which time the case will be set down for trial on its merits. Issuance of the complaint means that a majority of the commission has reason to believe that the respondents are using an unfair method of competition in violation of section 5 of the commission's organic act and section 2 of the Clayton Act.

"A BRIEF SKETCH OF FEATURES OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION'S LEGAL WORK.

"(1) STATISTICS AS TO APPLICATIONS FOR COMPLAINTS, AS OF APRIL 1, 1921.

"There have been 2,305 applications for complaints before the commission. Of these, after ex parte examination, 1,273 were dismissed without public notice or knowledge; 465 are now in process of such examination. With respect to the remaining 567 applications, the commission instituted formal proceedings, resulting in 750 formal complaints, the excess being due to the fact that in some applications there were a number of respondents who were proceeded against individually.

"Of these 750 adversary proceedings, 463 have been disposed of, while 287 are pending. Of the 463 disposed of, 96 were dismissed, the respondents having made sufficient showing of defense. In the remaining 367 cases, the commission's order to cease and desist was issued.

"(2) LIST OF THE MORE IMPORTANT CASES (WITH THEIR RESULTS, IF THEY HAVE GONE TO CONCLUSION).

"As noted above, the commission had issued and served a total of 750 formal complaints through the close of business March 31, 1921. There is given below a list of 50 of the more important of these cases, showing (1) docket number, (2) name of respondent, (3) brief summary of allegations classified by the sections of the statutes under which the commission functions, (4) statement of present status of proceeding.

"DOCKET NO. 233: THE NEW JERSEY ASBESTOS COMPANY.

"F. T. C. act, sec. 5: Unfair methods of competition in the manufacture and sale of engine packings to the extent that it has been giving to employees of its customers and prospective customers, and of its competitors' customers and prospective customers, gratuities, such as liquor, cigars, meals, theater tickets, etc., and to the extent that it has been secretly paying sums of money to such employees as an inducement to influence their employers to deal with respondent.

"Order to cease and desist from giving gratuities, May 27, 1919. Order reversed, U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, second circuit, February 26, 1920. Federal Trade Commission petition for review granted May 13, 1920.

"DOCKET NO. 241: MALZO COFFEE COMPANY.

"F. T. C. act, sec. 5: With the intent of stifling and suppressing competition, respondent in 1914 began to sell, offer to sell, and advertise 'Malzo' coffee, such simulation being designed and calculated to deceive the public into believing that respondent's coffee is one and the same as that of Mazo Brothers.

"Order to cease and desist, September 12, 1919.

"DOCKET NO. 243: ALUMINUM COMPANY OF AMERICA.

"Clayton Act, sec. 7: Acquiring and holding a large part of the stock of the Aluminum Rolling Mill Company, a corporation engaged in commerce, the effect of which, by the use of the stock by voting or granting of proxies or otherwise, is to substantially lessen competition between the respondent and the Aluminum Rolling Mill Company, or to restrain commerce in certain sections and communities, or to tend to create a monopoly.

"Order to divest stock, March 9, 1921.

"DOCKET NO. 254: (1) WESTERN SUGAR REFINING COMPANY AND CALIFORNIA-HAWAIIAN SUGAR REFINING COMPANY; (2) HAAS, BARUCH & CO., STETSON-BARRET CO. ET AL.; AND (3) THE C. E. CUMBERSON CO., THE COLBERT CO. ET AL.

"DOCKET NO. 702: WESTERN ELECTRIC COMPANY (INC.).

"F. T. C. act, sec. 5, and Clayton Act, sec. 3: The respondent, engaged in the manufacture and sale of telephonic appliances, equipment, and supplies, functions as the manufacturing department of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company and competes with other manufacturers and dealers for the business of independent telephone companies. Unfair methods of competition and the creation of a virtual monopoly are charged in that the respondent (a) contracts for the sale of its goods at fixed prices on condition that purchasers will not use the telephonic equipment sold by competitors of the respondent, (b) makes false and misleading statements to the effect that independent companies using its equipment will thereby secure better terms from the 'Bell system' for toll service or will be unable to secure long-distance or toll connections without the use of respondent's equipment, (c) utilizes the influence of banks to induce independent telephone companies to purchase their appliances, equipment, and supplies from the respondent, (d) procures the cancellation of contracts entered into between independent telephone companies and respondent's competitors by special reductions in its prices to such prospective customers, and (e) falsely represents that certain of its competitors are going out of business or closing branch offices and that the customers of said competitors will thereupon be unable to secure repair parts and additional equipment. Not disposed of.

"DOCKET NO. 709: CIGAR MANUFACTURERS' ASS'N OF TAMPA, FLA., ET AL.

"F. T. C. act, sec. 5: Unfair methods of competition are charged in that respondent cigar manufacturers, in an effort to restrain competition in the sale of cigars and to create a monopoly of the supply of an essential element in the sale of cigars, entered into an agreement with the respondents' cigar-box manufacturers, the intent and effect of which was to vest in the respondent association control of the supply of cigar boxes upon which the manufacturers of cigars in Tampa and vicinity are dependent, the respondent association employing its control of the supply of cigar boxes to deny to and withhold from nonmember and competing cigar makers their necessary supply of boxes. Not yet disposed of.

"(3) IMPORTANT WORK DONE BY THE COMMISSION IN 'CLEANING UP' INDUSTRIES.

"(A) Commercial bribery—In general: The commission has done very effective work in eradicating unfair competition methods in different industries. Commercial bribery, one of the most widespread and far-reaching evils encountered in the business world, has received special consideration in this connection. This vicious practice consists of the payment of money, or the giving of presents, gratuities, entertainments, etc., or both, usually by a salesman of the seller to the purchasing agent of the buyer, for the purpose of influencing him to give a preference to the seller's goods. Where money is paid, the unlawful purpose is presumed, but where there are presents or entertainment only, their value and the extent of the practice are taken into consideration, with the special circumstances of each individual case, in determining whether an unlawful purpose is present.

"The business enterprises covered in the commission's investigation of commercial bribery relate to paint, oil, and varnish; printing ink; dyestuffs and chemicals; textile soaps; the ship chandlery and repair industry; and other miscellaneous branches of trade. Each of these phases will be treated in detail under its proper heading below.

"Commercial bribery—Paint, oil, and varnish and allied products: The commission's first work in connection with commercial bribery was done in this field, its first application for complaint having been docketed as early as April, 1917.

"A total of 27 applications for complaint have been docketed against concerns engaged in this industry, of which 14, after ex parte examination, have been dismissed and 2 are still pending; the remainder, 11, having gone to formal complaint, and resulted in the issuance of 55 formal complaints, the excess of complaints over applications being due to the fact that in some applications there were a number of respondents who were proceeded against individually. As a result of these 55 adversary proceedings, the commission entered 50 orders to cease and desist and 3 orders of dismissal, 2 cases being now pending.

"The widespread interest aroused by the commission's activities in this field caused the paint and varnish manufacturers to organize, on January 1, 1918, the unfair competition bureau of the paint and varnish industries, with an office in Washington. Mr. M. Q. MacDonald, formerly an attorney with the commission, and a man of wide experience in commercial bribery matters, was placed in charge. This bureau has more than justified its existence by its work in eliminating not only commercial bribery but other evils prevalent in the trade, such as misbranding and false and misleading advertising. It has been effective as a clearing house for complaints, in keeping its members from backsliding after having eliminated graft, in aiding the commission to find evidence against offenders, and in many other ways.

"Commercial bribery—Printing ink: On November 24, 1917, at the request of a number of prominent printing-ink manufacturers, a meeting of representatives of the industry was held before the commission. During the course of this hearing it developed that only the day before, at the instance of the National Association of Printing Ink Manufacturers, a conference purporting to represent 90 per cent of the printing-ink manufacturers had been held, at which a stipulation was entered into by all those present that every effort would be made by members of the association and by nonmembers to discourage anything indicating bribery or other unfair practices in their particular field. The stipulation was filed with the commission, and the understanding was that if any of the signatories violated its provisions, such breach was to be reported to the commission by such others as might have knowledge thereof. The conferences and stipulation referred to were the direct result of investigations conducted by the commission's examiners in connection with applications for complaints already docketed.

"Early in 1918, as a result of applications for complaints filed with it, the commission undertook to rid the entire printing-ink industry of the practice of commercial bribery. It investigated four large concerns, and as a result issued complaints against all of them. Other applications followed until a total of 15 were docketed and investigated, resulting in the dismissal of 8 and the issuance of 9 complaints in the other 7 cases. The total number of orders issued against concerns engaged in this industry has been only seven, but the effect has been very beneficial, and with the cooperation of the majority of the manufacturers, who have always supported the commission in this work, it has not been necessary to proceed in a large number of cases.

"Commercial bribery—Dyestuffs and chemicals: Another important branch of business in which the commission has done effective work is the dyestuff and chemical industry. Forty-eight applications for complaints have been docketed, 20 of which have been dismissed and 6 of which are still pending. In the other 22 cases an equal number of formal complaints were issued and served, resulting in 8 orders to cease and desist, 1 order of dismissal, with 13 cases still pending.

"Conditions in this industry were somewhat difficult, because the evil had a strong hold and cooperation has not been as strong as in other industries, although the lack of support is probably due to skepticism in reference to the commission's ability to cleanse the trade of this taint, rather than to any positive opposition.

"Commercial bribery—Textile soaps: A total of 30 applications for complaint have been docketed in connection with this industry, of which 11 have been dismissed. The other 19 have gone to formals, resulting in an equal number of formal complaints, of which 1 has been dismissed and 2 are still pending. In the other 16 cases, the commission's order to cease and desist was entered.

"Commercial bribery—Miscellaneous: A total of 25 bribery cases of a miscellaneous character have been docketed as applications, the most important industries covered being road-building machinery and printers' rollers. Of lesser importance are a few cases relating to boiler compounds, printing and publishing, sizing paste, rags, horseshoes, lubricating oils, paper-coating materials, lacquer, corsets, music rolls, advertising matter, etc. Nine of these applications have been dismissed, 4 are pending, while 12 of them went to formal complaints, resulting in the issuance of 30 of the latter, the excess of formals over applications being due to the fact that in some applications there were a number of respondents who were proceeded against individually. Of these 30 adversary proceedings 17 are still pending, and orders to cease and desist have been entered in the other 13 cases.

"Commercial bribery—Ship chandlery and repair business: The commission began its work in this industry in the fall of 1918, its investigator going to New York for that purpose. During the course of his activities there he met the officials of the Association of Ship Store Dealers of the port of New York, an organization formed somewhat earlier in the same year to combat the practice of commercial bribery—and was able to secure the cooperation of this organization.

"Of late the commission's work for the suppression of commercial bribery has been confined almost entirely to the ship chandlery and ship repair business. On account of the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the second circuit in the New Jersey Asbestos Co. case, that commercial bribery is a matter between individuals and not one so affecting the public as to be within the jurisdiction of the commission, the work in that circuit has been stopped temporarily and the commission's recent efforts centered on the coast cities from Norfolk to Galveston, and with important results, finding the decision of the United States Supreme Court on the commission's jurisdiction.

"As of April 1, 1921, a total of 92 applications had been docketed against concerns engaged in this industry. Of these 20 have been dismissed and 9 are still pending—the other 63 having gone to formal complaint and resulting in an equal number of such formal complaints. In these 63 formal complaints there have been 53 orders to cease and desist and 3 orders of dismissal; the remainder—7—are still pending before the commission.

"Deep interest in this phase of the commission's work has been shown at every port. Expressions from all persons interviewed and investigated have been practically unanimous in the desire to see the bribery custom eradicated. The evidence indicates that it has cost some firms as high as $50,000 to $80,000 in a single year. Amounts given to captains or other officers of vessels to secure good will and orders for supplies or repairs have ranged in many instances from a few hundred to several thousand dollars. Although 5 per cent of the purchase price of the commodities was once the general or commonly accepted percentage allowed, competitive bidding at times has brought this figure up to 10 per cent and 20 per cent, and even as high as 100 per cent, as evidence before the commission shows. This necessarily induces short weights and measures, inferior qualities, short deliveries, and a train of conspiracies between officers of ships and unscrupulous dealers to defraud shipowners far beyond the amounts involved in the mere giving of the gratuities.

"Encouraged by the efforts of the Federal Trade Commission along this line, in which they had already earnestly cooperated in their individual capacities, a group of progressive concerns in marine circles organized the American Ship Service Corporation in February last and established headquarters at Washington, D. C. Mr. C. E. La Vigne, a former examiner of the Federal Trade Commission and a man of wide experience and marked success in investigating commercial bribery, was placed in active charge of the work.

"The activities of this new corporation are intended to be national in scope. Its charter membership includes representative business concerns engaged in different phases of shipping at ports extending from New York City to Galveston. Its principal object is close cooperation with the authorities charged with the enforcement of Federal and State laws against unfair practices in shipping circles. Membership in the corporation carries with it the pledge that no gratuities, systematically lavish entertainment, so-called commissions, or other thing of value will be given to any person whatsoever, directly or indirectly, to influence the placing of orders in connection with the shipping business. The corporation, during the short period of its existence, has accomplished a great deal, and should accomplish more and more as its membership increases. Through the efforts of this organization, the trade press has taken a leading part in directing attention to the fact that America is in the process of building up a great merchant marine, and that one of the vital factors in success is in keeping it clean and overcoming one enormous and unjustifiable item of waste, to wit, graft.

"It is interesting to note that two Norfolk concerns have recently appealed from the orders of the commission to the circuit court of appeals for the fourth circuit. These cases differ from the New Jersey Asbestos Co. case, in that the evidence taken in both of them disclosed the fact that 'large sums of money' had been given by the respondents to captains of vessels to which they furnished supplies. While testimony showed that the New Jersey Co. had given gratuities, such as liquor, cigars, meals, theater tickets, and entertainment, there was no evidence to show the use of money.

"(B) Lottery schemes: The commission has also given some attention to this matter. Acting on applications for complaints filed with it, it issued 24 formal complaints against concerns (all but one of which were engaged in the tea and coffee business). The allegations in these complaints were that these companies were giving and offering to give to customers and prospective customers, as an inducement to secure their trade and patronage, certain coupons or certificates which were redeemable in various prizes or premiums consisting of personal property of unequal values, the distribution of which was determined by chance or lot. Nineteen orders to cease and desist have been entered, the other five cases having been dismissed for failure of proof.

"(C) Trade practice submittals—In general: A formal definition of a trade practice submittal has not been made by the commission. One short definition which has been suggested is 'A trade practice submittal tenders to the commission the judgment of industry upon practices prevailing therein.' It is a procedure adopted first by the commission, to afford members of an industry the opportunity to meet, to define, and by mutual agreement among themselves, to eliminate at one stroke without legal proceedings, unfair, harmful, and wasteful practices generally prevailing in the industry. The commission is not a party to the agreement. A trade practice submittal contemplates a public meeting of industry, in the presence of the commission, either upon the initiation of the commission or upon application of the industry, to discuss the merits and demerits of business practices which have been generally complained of to the commission as being unfair, to the end that the expert opinion of a given industry as to the fairness or unfairness of various competitive methods may be crystallized and recorded. The findings of the meeting are submitted to the commission as the judgment of the industry, and are accepted by the commission in an advisory capacity as authoritative, evidential data available to the commission and in aid of proceedings by the commission under the statutes enforceable by it.

"The practice has been followed in a number of industries, as follows:

"Trade practice submittal—oil industry: Two meetings of interest to this industry have been held, the first on June 22, 1920, at Chicago, and the second on August 19, 1920, at Denver. The Chicago conference was called at the instance of the Independent Oil Men's Association and the American Independent Petroleum Association and was the result of a number of complaints from the trade which had been investigated by both associations and which were considered of serious enough import by these organizations to solicit the aid of the commission. A member of the commission was present and presided at both hearings.

"A number of rules were adopted at both conferences condemning some practices and recommending affirmative action as to others. Among the practices condemned were: (1) False representations as to the actual value of a competitor's products; (2) attacking a competitor as to his financial standing, personal integrity, or ability to serve the trade; (3) condemning a competitor because of the size of his business; (4) advertising so as to imply that competitors are not selling good products; (5) misrepresenting or misbranding of any petroleum products; (6) all forms of secret rebates or settlements whereby books and accounts can be so manipulated as to cover up the actual conditions; (7) commercial bribery; (8) making of contracts with ultimate consumers or users of oils, gas, etc., at a fixed price guaranteeing against an advance and protecting against a decline; (9) tank wagon or service station sales on a credit basis. Regulations were also prescribed with reference to sales on a quality basis, service and filling stations, commission-agency agreements, the leasing and selling of curb pumps, tanks and barrels to retailers, and cash discounts.

"More than a third of the United States was represented at these conferences; the one at Chicago embraced representatives from the States of Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, northern Oklahama, and Kansas, while the one at Denver covered the States of Colorado, Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Utah, and New Mexico.

"Trade practice submittal—pyroxylin plastics industry: This was held in May, 1920. The trade was represented by delegates from various associations of manufacturers of the basic materials, by numerous manufacturers of articles fabricated from the basic material, also wholesale and retail dealers in the finished product. A report was submitted and adopted by the whole conference of the industry, and submitted to the commission, which accepted it and placed it on file.

"The industry went on record as being opposed to the use of the words 'ivory,' 'shell,' 'amber,' 'jade,' 'coral,' in any other than an adjective sense, and then only when coupled with the name of the material or some other qualifying term, such as color, finish, etc. Illustrative of the foregoing, the following and similar terms would be permissible: 'Ivory celluloid,' 'ivory pyralin,' 'ivory fiberloid,' 'ivory viscoloid,' 'ivory-color celluloid,' 'imitation ivory,' 'imitation shell,' etc. The following and similar terms would be considered objectionable: 'French ivory,' 'Parisian ivory,' 'tortoise shell,' 'jade necklaces,' 'coral necklaces,' etc.

"The representatives of the industry further expressed themselves as being opposed to the use of the words 'French,' 'Parisian,' or any other geographical designations in connection with the material, or articles fabricated therefrom, unless they truly express the point of origin and are coupled with some other qualifying term, such as color, finish, etc.

"In regard to marking or branding of the industry's product, the commission took the attitude that it would not attempt to force the members of the industry to brand or mark their goods as to quantity, quality, or substance, but that when the members of the industry do mark or brand their goods, such marks or brands should be so definite and correct as not to deceive the purchasing public.

"Trade-practice submittal—Used typewriters: This was held on February 27, 1920, and was representative of manufacturers and dealers in second-hand, repaired, and shop and factory rebuilt typewriters from all parts of the country. It was the result of numerous applications by members of the industry to the commission for the issuance of complaints against other members of the same industry. The representatives present agreed to use their influence in discouraging, among others, the use of the following practices:

"(1) The offering of rebuilt typewriters as new.

"(2) The offering of repaired typewriters as rebuilt.

"(3) The sale of used and partially cleaned machines as rebuilt typewriters when, in reality, no competent man has touched the machines, and they are not even properly adjusted.

"(4) The misuse of the term 'rebuilt,' as in the case of removing the carriage, brushing it, applying a small amount of enamel paint, and calling the machine rebuilt.

"(5) The sale of old machines slightly repainted and fixed up as rebuilt.

"(6) Applying a coat of varnish to a machine, which is air-dried, and spending an average of three hours repairing a machine, and calling it rebuilt.

"(7) The sale as rebuilt machines of those which have only been refinished.

"(8) The practice of guaranteeing a machine sold by the dealer who is not himself a competent workman and does not employ a skilled typewriter repair man or service man.

"(9) The making of misleading guaranties of machines sold on mail orders long distances from the place of business of the dealer.

"Trade practice submittal—knit goods: On October 7, 1920, the commission addressed letters to the knit-goods manufacturers of the country inviting them to attend a trade practice submittal to be held October 20, 1920. The purpose was to consider a plan by which there might be a general elimination of such methods of competition as were admittedly unfair as promptly, and with as little inconvenience to the trade as possible; and, second, to get the views of the members of the industry concerning the practical operation of certain methods concerning which the commission desired further information. Some of the methods which had been complained of were: Misbranding in many forms, weighting of silk, false advertising, price maintenance, guarantee against decline in price. The meeting was held in due course, and the methods just mentioned, with some others, discussed at length. As yet, however, the knit-goods manufacturers have not gone as far as those engaged in the pyroxylin plastics industry.

"Trade practice submittal—Guarantee against decline: Under date of December 26, 1919, the commission sent out a questionnaire asking for a discussion of the question of guarantee against decline in price, which had been the subject of a great many complaints before it.

"This inquiry resulted in expressions from more than 350 manufacturing and selling concerns, including trade associations whose represented membership must have been more than double the number of individual statements. From the scope of the inquiry, and the number and variety of replies, the results shown may be taken to be fairly representative of the difference in business opinion on this subject. The inquiry by questionnaire was further supplemented by hearings before the commission on October 5 and 6, 1920, at which both those favoring the practice and those opposed thereto were heard at length.

UMI

"On February 15, 1921, the commission announced that it would consider each case of complaint involving this practice upon the facts shown to exist in the specific case, applying the legal tests thereto, this action involving neither the approval nor disapproval of the economic soundness of the arguments advanced for or against the practice.

"Trade practice submittal—Macaroni industry: A conference was held on June 25, 1920, with representatives of the package goods macaroni manufacturers. Among those present were representatives of the National Macaroni Manufacturers' Association; Cleveland Macaroni Co., of Cleveland, Ohio; the Creamette Co., of Minneapolis, Minn.; the Foulds Milling Co., of Chicago, Ill.; the Fahringer Macaroni Co., of Milwaukee, Wis.; the American Macaroni Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.; the Briggs Cereal Products Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio; A. Zerega's Sons, Consolidated, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; and representatives of the Armstrong Bureau of Related Industries, of Chicago, Ill., and the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture.

"The conference was called by the commission in the public interest and at the suggestion of the industry to discuss a number of practices prevailing in the package goods macaroni trade.

"After full discussion the conference expressed its disapproval of the following practices: (1) Slack-filled packages, (2) the subsidizing of salesmen of wholesalers and retailers to push the sale of the goods of a particular manufacturer in preference to the goods of his competitor, (3) the giving of premiums and rebates, (4) the use of the diminishing size package, (5) false and misleading labels.

"Trade practice submittal—Book and writing paper manufacturers: Following two conferences held before the commission in 1919, nearly 600 dealers and manufacturers of book and writing paper signed an agreement wherein they pledged themselves: (1) Not to label papers as 'handmade' unless they were actually made by hand and not by machine process; (2) not to label, advertise, or sell papers that are given fabric or other material names because of a finish applied to them intended to resemble such fabric or other material, under such name, unless a qualifying word or words be used to indicate that such fabric or other material name is applied to such paper to indicate such finish only; thus, 'linen finish,' 'nainsook finish,' 'onyx finish,' etc.; (3) not to label, advertise, or offer for sale under a foreign geographical name, or under a partly foreign geographical name, papers not of foreign make, without the use in conjunction therewith of properly qualifying words indicating its domestic manufacture; thus, 'Made in U. S. A.,' etc.; (4) not to label, advertise, or sell paper sold as parchment paper, without the use in the name of a qualifying word or words to indicate its true character; thus, 'artificial parchment,' 'vegetable parchment,' etc.

"Trade practice submittal—Creamery industry (Omaha): There having come to the Federal Trade Commission various complaints of unfair practices in the creamery industry, notably in the Mississippi Valley, there being a striking similarity in the complaints made, and these complaints covering a rather wide range, the commission considered whether or not, before issuing its formal complaint in individual cases, it would not be better to determine how widespread and general were the trade practices complained of.

"On invitation of the commission, representatives of the industry to the number of about 40, from six or seven States, met with one of the members of the commission in Omaha on October 3, 1919.

"An informal discussion was had, and it was arranged that definite action should be deferred until there could be brought about a meeting more completely representative of the industry and covering a wider area.

"As a result, on November 3, the commissioner again met with representatives of the industry to the number of about 125, coming from 14 States. At the outset, each of those in attendance declared his purpose to aid in the formulation of rules defining, expressing, and prohibiting methods, practices, and acts recognized as unfair, wrongful, invalid, or detrimental to the public and to the industry.

"The commissioner stated that the Federal Trade Commission was making no rules, expressing no opinion, and rendering no order; nor was the purpose of his visit to interfere with or attempt to direct the business conduct and practices in the creamery industry. He further stated that his visit was for the purpose of gathering the best judgment of the representative members of the industry as to whether certain practices were fair or unfair and were in or against the public interest. It was understood that the judgment of the industry, as expressed, should be for the guidance of the commission and should be regarded as, prima facie, law merchant for this industry.

"Certain practices were considered and in nearly every case condemned by unanimous vote. In every case the condemning vote was by a substantial majority. The following acts, methods, and practices were declared unfair, harmful, bad business practice, and unlawful, and therefore to be refrained from:

"(1) The willful interference by any person, association, or corporation, by any means or device whatever, with any existing contract between an employer and employee or agent of such employer in or about the production, manufacture, transportation, purchase, or sale of any dairy product or the performance of any contractual duty or service connected therewith, such interference being for the purpose or with the effect of dissipating, destroying, or appropriating, in whole or in part, the patronage, property, or business of another engaged in such industry.

"(2) The intentional overtesting, undertesting, or in any manner making or declaring a false return or report on the test of the quantity of any dairy product or any constituent thereof purchased or sold.

"(3) The use without the consent of the owner of any can, cream-station equipment, or other property used or employed in the shipment, purchase, or sale of any dairy product with the intent or effect of appropriating the patronage, property, or business of another.

"(4) Furnishing or lending to any producer, dealer, or shipper of dairy products any can, cream-station equipment, or other property for the purpose and effect of influencing shipments of such products to the furnisher or lender of such article or property.

"(5) The making, causing, or permitting to be made or published any false or untrue statement of or concerning the business policies or methods of a competitor.

"(6) Paying or rendering, directly or indirectly, to any agent or employee of a common carrier, any consideration or reward for the purpose or with the effect of influencing such agent or employee to solicit patronage or divert any shipments of dairy products from the originally intended consignee.

"(7) Obtaining any information from a competitor by making any false or misleading statements or misrepresentations or by false impersonation of one in authority or by any method of espionage.

"(8) Failure to pay or render in accordance with advertisement or holding out to the shipper or his representative the full price for dairy products purchased; failure to deduct full transportation cost when such product is purchased on delivered basis; failure to deduct actual cost of hauling when such products are gathered by wagon or truck.

"(9) The purchasing or offering to purchase dairy products at prices not warranted by market or trade conditions or paying higher prices to one class of shippers or sellers than to another, or the paying of different prices at different points at the same time, except differences occasioned by freight rates and quality of commodity bought, or the paying of the same price at nonchurning points as at churning points, or differences made in good faith to meet fair competition, as distinguished from price discrimination, intended to or having the effect of the creation of a monopoly.

"(10) Where cream is purchased on what is known as the station plan, the payment of any commission in excess of 3 cents, including station expenses of every kind and character.

"(11) The giving of premiums or other valuable things as an additional reward or compensation.

"Trade practice submittal—Creamery industry (Dallas): Having received complaints of an alleged unfair method of competition practiced generally by manufacturers engaged in shipping butter, for resale, to Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and other States of the Southwest, the commission, in order to afford a remedy more speedy than could probably be obtained by the issuance of formal complaints, invited representatives of manufacturers competing for the butter trade of the Southwest to assemble at Dallas, Tex., on April 2, 1920, for the purpose of furnishing the commission the opinions of those engaged in the industry (but more particularly those making use of the practice complained of) as to whether or not the practice was, in fact, fair or unfair, and whether it operated for or against the interest of the public and of the industry. After informal discussion the representatives expressed their unanimous opinion that the practice of packing in cartons, prints, and rolls unusual or odd-size quantities of butter, which quantities vary in weight from the recognized standards of one pound, one-half pound, and one-quarter pound, was an unfair method of competition and against the public interest, and asked the commission to proceed against all manufacturers, makers, or shippers of butter who, after August 1, 1920, persisted in the practice.

"(D) Investigations at instance of Department of Justice—Raisin case: Under date of September 30, 1919, the Attorney General requested the commission to make an investigation of the California Associated Raisin Co. This was for the purpose of: (1) Obtaining information as to whether or not the company in question was obtaining and maintaining more than fair and reasonable prices for its products; (2) having the commission, under authority of section 6 of its organic act, make recommendations for the readjustment of the business of the company, in order that it might hereafter maintain its organization, management, and conduct of business in accordance with law.

"In accordance with the foregoing request, the commission instituted an inquiry, giving notice thereof to the Raisin Co. A large amount of testimony was taken, and, in addition, arguments heard and briefs received on behalf of the company in question, as well as on behalf of the American Seedless Raisin Co., the Bonner Packing Co., Rosenberg Bros. & Co., Guggenhime & Co., and Chaddock & Co., packers of raisins, and the National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States.

"As a result of its investigation, the commission, on June 8, 1920, made a report (1) describing the general relation of the California Associated Raisin Co. to the raisin industry; (2) concluding, in the absence of a showing of a greater increase in the cost of production, there having been no diminution in production but rather a slight increase, and after considering the diminishing purchasing power of the dollar, that the price fixed by the raisin company for the 1919 crop was in excess of a fair and reasonable price; and (3) making certain recommendations for the readjustment of its business, among which may be named the cancellation of all contracts fixing selling prices, on the condition of exclusive dealing, the separation of plants leased or purchased from competitors so far as may be necessary to insure freedom of competition, the abandonment of purchase of carry over and curtailment of production as incidents of business, the abandonment of 'firm-at-opening price' and 'guarantee against decline' devices in marketing when these practices in combination with other acts tend toward the creation of monopoly.

"It may be of interest to note that as a result of the commission's report the Department of Justice instituted proceedings against the California Associated Raisin Co. under the Sherman law, which have been halted. Recent reports indicate that the control of the raisin crop has reached 92 per cent.

"It should not be assumed that the result of a trade practice submittal is the complete elimination of the practices defined as unfair. It is an expression of the opinion of the more progressive and clear-thinking minds in an industry, and is the basis upon which these men in the industry and the commission cooperate to deal with that fortune of the industry which persists in the use of such practices.

"INQUIRIES MADE BY FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION SINCE ITS ORGANIZATION.

"When the Federal Trade Commission was organized on March 16, 1915, it absorbed the personnel and equipment of the Bureau of Corporations and the work it was doing as provided by law. At that time there were about six investigations that had been almost completed and for which the printing and proof reading was nearly completed. These reports of the Commissioner of Corporations were finished during the early days of the commission while it was planning its organization and methods of conducting its work.

"There were also several investigations that the Bureau of Corporations had been directed to undertake which had not been finished and these the commission continued. Among the latter were an inquiry into the pipe-line transportation of petroleum, pursuant to a Senate resolution; an inquiry into the fertilizer industry, pursuant to another Senate resolution; a study of the beet-sugar industry, which originated at the direction of the Secretary of Commerce; and an investigation of the system of resale price maintenance which had been initiated by the Commissioner of Corporations. On all these matters printed reports were published by the commission. The commission also continued the work on the petroleum industry in accordance with the Senate resolution by making a study of the cost of production and prices of petroleum oils and especially gasoline, on which a report was also published.

"The first important inquiry commended by the commission was into conditions affecting American export trade. This inquiry was initiated by the commission under authority of section 6, paragraph (h), of its organic act, which specifically directs it to make such inquiries from time to time, but was particularly suggested by the public statement of the President that the business world would welcome some modification of the prohibition of the Sherman law with respect to export trade. As a result of this inquiry the commission published a two-volume report entitled 'Cooperation in American Export Trade,' and a little later Congress passed the Webb-Pomerene Act with respect to export trade, which practically enacted into law the recommendations of the commission.

"At the request of the President the commission undertook, shortly after its organization, an inquiry into trade conditions affecting our relation with the South American countries, and as a result published a report entitled 'Trade and Tariffs in South America,' which furnished information of considerable value in connection with the work of the International High Commission, which was held at Buenos Aires in 1916.

"From the very beginning the commission gave considerable attention to the question of better accounting methods in trade and industry and on its own initiative did considerable educational work in suggesting better methods of accounting, and also published a few brief pamphlets in this connection. It also attempted to gather some information from the industrial corporations of the country regarding their gross sales and profits on a very simple schedule with the same general educational purpose in view. While there was a wide response in the way of voluntary returns to this schedule, the imperfect manner in which the returns were made demonstrated the correctness of the commission's view that the methods of cost accounting generally in vogue were quite inadequate. For this reason also the results of this inquiry, which it had been intended should be published by industries, were not published, because they were not regarded as sufficiently accurate.

"Early in 1916 the rise in the price of newsprint paper led the Senate to call for an inquiry into that industry. A report which was published on this subject disclosed an increase in price considerably greater than the increase in costs, and also evidence that there was an attempt made by the newsprint paper associations to restrain trade. The result was a suit by the Department of Justice, and from this developed an agreement out of court with the Attorney General through which the members of the commission were called on to arbitrate the reasonableness of newsprint paper prices.

"The bituminous coal industry had for some years been complaining of the extremely unprofitable prices received and insisted that Government intervention of some kind was necessary to mitigate competition and otherwise to regulate the industry. In accordance with a resolution of the House the commission commenced an inquiry into this matter, but hardly had it gotten started before an extraordinary advance in the price of anthracite in the autumn of 1916 and the request of the Senate for an investigation of that subject directed its attention into another aspect of the coal industry. Somewhat later a marked advance occurred in bituminous coal prices, which was also investigated, and a report of the commission on these matters was published a few weeks after the declaration of war with Germany.

"Just before the declaration of war the President had directed the commission to make a comprehensive investigation of the food industries of the country, and for this purpose Congress provided a special appropriation. Next to the cost-finding work of the commission in aid of the war activities of other branches of the Government, this group of food investigations was the principal work of the commission along this line during the war. It was divided into four principal parts, namely, the meat-packing industry, the grain trade, the flour-milling industry, and the canned-foods industry. There was also a general inquiry into marketing and storage. Each of these specific inquiries resulted in extensive published reports.

"During the war the commission, at the direction of the Senate, also undertook an inquiry into the prices of farm implements, upon which a comprehensive report was issued. It also undertook, on its own initiative, an investigation into the costs and prices of leather and shoes and published a report thereon.

"In all these economic inquiries conducted during the war the results of the work were made available to war-time regulating authorities as rapidly as they were available.

"The most important work conducted by the commission during the war was the cost-finding work undertaken at the direction of the President and in behalf of the various departments and administrations concerned with the purchase of materials or the war-time regulation of industries, such as the War and Navy Departments, the Fuel Administration, the War Industries Board, the Food Administration, the Railroad Administration, and the Shipping Board, not to mention other branches of the service. The costs of production were ascertained by an elaborately organized accounting force, and periodical reports were submitted to the purchasing or regulating authorities in order that they might determine what prices they should pay or at what prices the industries should be permitted to sell to the public. The commission, however, had no part in the fixing of prices. Thus the cost of production of coal in the various districts was reported from time to time to the Fuel Administration, as well as petroleum; the cost of iron and steel, copper, lumber, cement, cotton textiles, and a vast number of other commodities were reported to the War Industries Board periodically; the cost of canned fruits, vegetables, and fish, of flour, and the profits from meat packing were reported to the Food Administration; the cost of locomotives to the Railroad Administration; the costs of steel and wooden construction materials to the Shipping Board; the costs of an infinite variety of supplies to the Army and Navy, from clinical thermometers to locomotive cranes, etc.

"Some of these costs collected in war time were later worked up and published for public information, such as the cost of coal, copper, etc.

"Since the war a number of important inquiries have been made by the commission, chiefly at the direction of Congress. Thus, the Senate has called for reports on the milk industry, the California oil industry, the commercial feeds industry, and southern live-stock prices; and the House of Representatives has called for investigations of the combed cotton-yarn industry, the advance of oil prices in 1920, the shoe industry, the sugar supply and prices in 1919, and the prices of leaf tobacco in 1920. On all these subjects the commission has either published reports already or will submit them at the beginning of the present session of Congress.

"The Attorney General has called for reports from the commission on the manner in which the paper manufacturers who are under judicial injunction have obeyed the same; into the question whether certain lumber associations were operating in restraint of trade; and whether the meat-packers' proposals for compliance with the judicial decree were in accordance with the public interests.

"In the autumn of 1919 the rising prices of commodities created much apprehension and committees of Congress invited suggestions from executive branches of the Government as to what could be done to alleviate conditions. This commission suggested that the information should be obtained especially with respect to basic industries, not as a panacea, but as a means of preventing speculative excesses. In accordance with this suggestion, Congress made a special appropriation to the commission with the distinct understanding that such basic industries as coal, steel, lumber, etc., should be required to submit current reports regarding production costs, prices, etc. The work was inaugurated at once and was proceeding with success when the National Coal Association procured a judicial injunction against obtaining such information on the ground that it was not within the constitutional power of Congress to authorize the collection of such information. As a result, though many reports continued to be made voluntarily, the data obtained from the coal industry proved insufficient to warrant the continuation of the work. With respect to the steel industry, also, although many companies, including the largest, submitted reports promptly and willingly, certain companies objected and through judicial injunction made it impracticable to continue the work. It was subsequent to these judicial injunctions regarding the commission's work that the extraordinary advances occurred in the prices of coal and steel products.

"Attached hereto is a list (Exhibit A) of the various investigations undertaken by the commission from the time of its organization to the present time, showing the subject matter, the originating authority, reports issued, etc. This list does not include the legal investigations made in connection with the proceedings of the commission against alleged unfair methods of competition nor the cost-finding work done by the commission during the war, which is shown on pages 29 and 30 of the annual report for 1918 and pages 38 to 42 of the annual report for 1919.

"The cost-finding work was done by direction of the President and was provided for by Congress in accordance with recommendations made by the Appropriations Committees.

"There is also a list giving the full titles of the publications of the commission (Exhibit B). This list does not, however, include the briefs and arguments of the commission in connection with proceedings against alleged unfair methods of competition. An examination of the list of inquiries undertaken by the commission, as given in Exhibit A, shows that in the great majority of cases they were initiated either at the direction of Congress or of the President, and that only a small proportion of them were undertaken on the commission's own initiative.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, there is one criticism in the letter the distinguished Senator read about the Federal Trade Commission that I should like to explain.

When the Federal Trade Commission was first organized, a number of business concerns went there with certain propositions in regard to their business dealings, and wanted the Federal Trade Commission to approve them. They wanted them to license certain plans they had. These plans were referred to the lawyers of the commission, and in nine cases out of ten those plans were Sherman Antitrust Act cases with which the Federal Trade Commission had nothing to do, and were matters under the control of the Department of Justice, which enforces the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator from Georgia say that it was not understood at the time the Federal Trade Commission was created that they were to assist business, and to counsel business men, and to advise them as to how best to overcome difficulties in their business?

When I voted for the creation of that commission, that was what was understood. I think the business men of the country had a perfect right to go and ask them for advice, because the business men of the country understood that that was what the Federal Trade Commission was created for. But instead of becoming advisers and assistants, they become prosecutors and persecutors of business.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I think the Federal Trade Commission has assisted business, but assisting business in a legitimate way is a very different thing from approving a plan submitted to the commission, when no commissioner or no lawyer of the commission could tell just how that plan would work out. If the Federal Trade Commission had done what certain business interests wanted it to, it would have been the same result as if Congress had repealed the Sherman Antitrust Act, the enforcement of which, when it was passed and now, was intended to be under the Department of Justice.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLER in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Broussard	Caraway	Elkins
Ball	Bursum	Curtis	Fernald
Borah	Calder	Dial	Fletcher
Brandegee	Capper	Dillingham	Frelinghuysen
Gerry	King	New	Sutherland

Keyes	McNary	Spencer	Wolcott

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Sixty Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, by way of preface, I wish to state that I am not in sympathy with Government ownership, and not much in sympathy with Government regulation or control of private business. I do believe, however, the pending bill should be supported or should be attacked upon what the bill itself provides. I do not think it should be defeated because other commissions may have failed, nor do I believe it ought to be defeated by a misrepresentation of its real provisions.

If there is to be any kind of governmental regulation of the packing industry, I do not believe anyone can find any real objection to the pending measure. It has but seven provisions which touch the control of the packing industry.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator speaks of the pending measure he has reference, I presume, to the Senate committee bill, the substitute?

Mr. CARAWAY. I have. It would be almost a farce to concur in the House bill, because what it really does no one knows, except it gives no relief to the public and is no doubt entirely satisfactory to the packers. If we are to have any regulation at all, we must take the Senate bill.

I realized that those Senators who are opposed to any kind of governmental control or regulation are going to vote against both measures, but those who have no real objection to governmental regulation of some industries, but want the packers left without regulation, are going to support the House measure. There is not a packer who, if he were here and had a right to be heard, would urge any objection to the House bill, because it does not do anything except put a law on the statute books that never could be enforced and never could regulate or control his actions. I know that when anyone shall support the House measure he will do it because he wants, in appearance, to support governmental control, when, in effect, he does not want such control of that particular industry.

The Senate committee bill has seven provisions to regulate the packers. I believe every one of them is the law now, and certainly there is not an honest man anywhere who could object to a single one of those provisions. Summarizing the bill, it provides that the packers shall not engage in unfair and discriminatory practices. It provides that the packers shall not discriminate against one person or one locality in favor of another; that they shall not apportion the supply of live stock so as to have no competition in the purchase of live stock; that one packer shall not buy all and apportion the live stock among the other packers.

It provides that they shall not manipulate or control the markets so as to control prices, either of the finished product or of the live stock.

It provides that they shall not conspire to monopolize the business.

It provides that they shall not apportion the territory in which each shall do business.

It provides that they shall not conspire to violate the provisions of this act.

That is everything there is in it. These seven provisions are already the law.

If there is anything in any of those seven prohibitions to which any Senator objects, I shall be glad to have him tell me now to what provision he objects.

There is no provision in this bill to fix prices which the packers may charge. There is not a single provision in it which would enable the Government to interfere with the legitimate initiative and activity of a packer in any field. There is not a solitary provision in this bill which would enable the Government to take away from the packer any legitimate right he now has, and, as I said, I seriously doubt if there is any provision in it which is not already covered by existing law.

The first objection to the bill is one of definitions. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] objects to some of the definitions. He objects to the definition of live-stock products which he says would enable the Government to follow the by-products through all the ramifications of industry and business wherever the products of a packer should go, as the shoe business, the clothing business, and innumerable other business using these by-products. However, the definition itself negatives that. The minute the article ceases to be the property of the packer—and the packer is defined to be one who is engaged in interstate commerce in the preparing or marketing of live-stock—then the control of the bill as to these by-products of the slaughter and packing of live stock ceases. We could not follow and it is not intended to follow them after they cease to be the property of the packer. There is no provision of this bill that would permit us to follow the product after it ceases to be the property of the packer. As long as it is the property of the packer the regulation merely goes to the extent that we may ascertain what he does with it in order to determine his manner of doing business and his profits—not to regulate his business or lessen his profits.

The impression seems to exist that there is some power conferred by the bill to regulate the industry and to fix the prices of the product. That is not true. It is not aimed at that. The only price-fixing provision of the bill deals with stockyards, but as to the packing industry itself there is no provision to fix prices or to interfere with prices as they may now or hereafter be. It is simply to bring to the packing industry the advantage of publicity so that people may actually know what they are doing. If they have no objection to the public knowing the manner in which they conduct their business they can have no legitimate objection to the bill.

The packers are now spending millions of dollars every year in what is termed an educational campaign to acquaint the public with their methods of doing business to show the public that their methods are fair and that their profits are reasonable.

If that is all they want, we undertake here to provide them with a means by which the Government may investigate their manner of doing business and their profits, and give to the business methods and their profits the widest possible authentic publicity. They can save their millions now expended for advertising in order to educate the public, and get from the Government for nothing the absolute truth with reference to their manner of doing business. That is all the bill provides. Do they want it? If not, does not that fact present an unanswerable argument for this measure?

The bill does not undertake to regulate their methods of business and does not say they shall not engage in any fair practice, but it does say they shall be fair in their business methods—fair to the cattle raiser and fair to the public—and if they shall violate the law, upon investigation, and that fact having been ascertained, they shall be commanded to cease their unlawful and unfair practices. And then if they persist in a violation of the law, they shall be punished. But I said, and I repeat, that there is nothing in the bill that prohibits them from doing the things that are not already covered by the existing law. They can not legally engage in a monopoly now. They can not engage in restraint of trade. They can not legally conspire together to take away from the producer of live stock his property under the pretense that they have a competitive market, when in fact one man is buying for them all. They can not have an agreement to divide the trade territory, giving to one the exclusive right to buy and to sell in this territory and another in that, without violating the law.

All the bill does is to give the Government a chance to ascertain the facts. It gives business men just what the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] pleaded for to-day—notice without becoming liable to prosecution. The Senator from Maine pleaded for the opportunity to be given to a business man to know in advance if his act is a violation of the law, and not as the Federal Trade Commission now does, come along afterwards and prosecute him for doing that which he had no previous knowledge was a violation of the law. The bill saves the honest business man that possible trouble. It first provides that after his acts shall have been investigated and shall have been found to be a violation of the law, he shall have a written notice of that fact and a command that he shall desist from that practice, and then if he persists he can be prosecuted and punished; otherwise he is free from any of the provisions of the criminal section of the bill. But it gives the Government power to know what he is doing. For that certain men condemn this measure.

STOCKYARDS.

There is a provision in the bill regulating stockyards that goes further than that. The Senate committee amendment provides that at the expiration of two years the packers shall divorce themselves from the stockyards unless the time be extended by the Secretary of Agriculture. It provides that the method of doing business by the owners of the stockyards and by the agents who buy or sell live stock in the yards shall be regulated; that their practices shall be fair; that they shall not conspire to injure any one seller or the section from which that seller may come; that they shall not conspire together to apportion the live stock or to apportion the territory among themselves in which each may buy. It provides that they shall keep their stockyards sanitary; that their services shall be uniform and fair and their charges shall be reasonable. That is all.

The bill gives to the Secretary of Agriculture, through the commissioner, the power to declare the charges unreasonable or reasonable. But it does not leave them at the mercy of the commissioner or of the Secretary of Agriculture. If it be thought by the owners of the stockyards or the agents who do business there that the rates fixed or the regulations established are unfair, they may appeal to the circuit court of appeals and from there to the Supreme Court of the United States. Then, if the order of the Secretary through the commissioner be sustained, they must regulate their conduct in conformity with the order. They will not be punished, however, for what has been done, but compelled to refrain in the future from doing those things which the commissioner shall say are wrong, and which the circuit court of appeals shall say are wrong, and which the Supreme Court of the United States shall say are wrong.

If one wants regulation at all and objects to that kind of regulation, I am curious to know how the bill could be so amended as to meet his objection. It leaves the right of appeal from every single act of the commissioner or the Secretary of Agriculture that shall affect injuriously the owner, the operator, the purchaser, or seller of live stock in the stockyards.

Section 19 of the bill was attacked, and it has been suggested by friends of the measure that it needs amendment. I do not think so, though I should not oppose it. This is the section that makes the act of the agent the act of his principal and reads as follows:

SEC. 19. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any agent, officer, or other person acting for or employed by any individual, partnership, association, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, partnership, association, or corporation as well as that of the person.

The provisions are that the agent's act shall be within the scope of his employment, within the scope of his office; in other words, that he shall be doing the thing which he was employed to do. It is said that it is too harsh, that the principal ought not to be bound by the act of his agent unless he knew what his agent was doing; but if he employed his agent to do some particular thing, as long as that agent is acting within the scope of his employment or within the duties of his office, it seems to me to be no great hardship to impute to the principal the act of the agent, especially since the agent is doing that thing for which he has been employed, the very thing he had been hired to do, the very thing he had been directed to do.

The law books are full of instances of that kind. I presume that the provision in the prohibition law of every State in the Union that the act of the bartender who sells liquor to a minor or who sells on Sunday has always been construed to be the act of his principal who hires him. In the operation of corporations, if we could not hold the corporation for the acts of its agents or the acts of its employees or the acts of its servants, we could not hold the corporation at all, because it can act only through these. However, as I said, I shall not object, and yet I can see the hardship that is going to grow out of the amendment which says that where the principal knows or he assents to or ratifies the act of his agent. It will make more difficult the enforcement of the law; otherwise it would not change it.

There is one other provision of the act which I wish to discuss briefly and I shall not detain the Senate longer. Title V of the bill, voluntary registration of packers and stockyards, was attacked because, it is said, it is an invitation for people to accept Government control. I had not thought of it in that light. I do realize it has some real advantages because the Government in return for the control it purposes to exercise over the yards undertakes to assist in procuring the means of transportation, undertakes to give expert advice upon the methods of feeding live stock and for caring for live-stock products. It undertakes to extend to those people who may accept its provisions all the activities of the Government to enable them to make the business a success, and in return merely asks that the people who shall accept its provisions shall accept its control so far and no further than that the Government may ascertain that they are practicing no deceptive devices, that they are not trying to practice any frauds, not attempting to monopolize or control markets. That far and no further the Government asks them to submit to Government regulation.

Returning to the section dealing with definition, I realize that if we accept the first amendment suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and strike out of the definition of live-stock products the extension to the by-products, that possibly section 16 would require the packer to reveal what he did with those by-products; but if it does that, it does not relieve the packer of a single liability then, and therefore no friend of the packer or enemy of the bill should seriously object to it in the manner in which it is now written. If section 16 requires the packer to give to the Government all the information that would be required if the definition of "live-stock products" be kept in the bill, as now worded, it would simply be a change of language and not a change of results, not a change of obligation, and therefore no improvement to the bill. No one need therefore seriously either support or oppose the bill on the ground that the definition goes too far or stops too short if section 16, as contended by the opponents of the bill, requires the packer to do the very thing he should be required to do if we leave the definition as it now stands.

The Senator from New York further opposed the bill because the word "trader" appears in it; in one breath he stated that that would require every live-stock dealer everywhere who bought a cow from a farmer, in order to ship it to the market, to be regulated by the Government and to have a license; and in the next breath he said that the trader performed no services and that no one was included in the bill except some one who performed a service. In other words, the "trader" was in the bill for the purpose of making enemies for the bill, and was out under the definition, in order to weaken the bill among its friends. Such an argument may not be exactly playing with terms, but that is the impression I gathered.

The next serious argument urged by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] against the bill was that the control of the stockyards was beyond the power of Congress; that if they were public utilities at all, they were solely within the control of the States. I do not think so. I can not conceive that since the Supreme Court has said that the sale of live stock in transit in stockyards is an act of interstate commerce, to say that the instrumentality by which that act is accomplished is beyond the control of Congress because it is not an instrumentality of commerce. In other words, the act itself is interstate commerce, and therefore within the control of Congress, but the instrumentality through which the act is performed is without the scope of interstate commerce and without the power of Congress to regulate. That the instrumentality—the thing that is used to accomplish the sale—could be without while the sale was within interstate commerce seems to me to be an impossible conclusion.

I can not conceive that an act may be within interstate commerce, and therefore subject to congressional regulation, when the instrumentality by which the act is performed is without interstate commerce and beyond the power of Congress to regulate. When one can not take place without the other, when the instrument is essential to the act, and the act is within interstate commerce and within the power of Congress to regulate, it appears to me that the instrument by which it is accomplished, and without which it could not be accomplished at all, is within interstate commerce and therefore within the power of Congress to regulate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator for just a moment with regard to one of the positions taken by the Senator from New York in desiring to limit the term "live-stock products" to those products that are used for food, I desire to ask does the Senator from Arkansas understand that the bill now includes regulation as to other products as well as hides and bones and products of that sort?

The Senator from New York, as I gathered, sought to add after the words "live stock," as found on page 30, line 9, the words "used for food." His argument was that it would be very unwise to undertake to regulate the disposition and handling and trading in hides and bones and products of that kind. I thought perhaps there was some force in his argument in favor of limiting the term "live-stock products" to those products which are used for food. I should like to hear the views of the Senator from Arkansas on that question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I desire to answer the Senator in this way: The only thing the pending measure seeks to do is to ascertain and to give publicity to the acts of the packer in order that the public may know whether the packer is making a reasonable or an unreasonable profit, and, of course, to restrain him from combinations and acts that hurt the producer and consumer of live-stock products. Possibly a third of the value of live stock may be in what is known as by-products, such as hides, fertilizer, and innumerable other things that go to make up the carcass. This bill undertakes to say that so long as those by-products shall be the property of the packer he shall make the same entries and disclosures affecting them as he does with regard to meat products. Why should he not do so? We are not trying to fix the price at which the meat shall sell; we are not trying to fix the price at which he may buy live stock; but we are trying to devise a system of accounting and of reports in order that the public may know what the packer does with the animal which he buys and that the public may have some knowledge of whether the prices are reasonable or unreasonable; whether he has been fair to the producer of live stock and to the consuming public.

In order to know that, we must know what the packer does with everything which he buys from the stock raiser up to the moment when it ceases to be his property. Whenever the packer has parted company with the product, this bill parts company with it also; and can go no further. If the packer shall buy a steer and transfer all of its by-products to some subsidiary company at a price which is wholly inadequate, it may seem that the price that he receives for the meat is entirely reasonable, in view of what he paid for the live steer, but in good faith if we knew what he did with all the by-products and what he received for them, the fact might be disclosed that he had reaped an unrighteous profit.

The Senator from New York said that if we retained the definition contained in the bill, we could go out and investigate the man who bought the wool from the sheep and made clothes out of it, and the man who acquired the hides and made shoes out of them; but the definition prevents that. It says that whenever the product shall cease to be the property of the packer, then the bill has no further concern with it. As the Senator from Florida will remember, the Senator from New York, in urging his objection to the definition and to reposing in Congress the right to ascertain from the packer what he received for the hides and other by-products, said that under section 16, which required the packer to make full disclosures and not to avail himself of any deceptive practices and to make no false entries, he would have to disclose what he did with the by-products anyway. Then, I am curious to know why the Senator should object to having it written into the law instead of having it promulgated by regulation, if the result is to be absolutely the same.

I am rather satisfied that the Senator from New York thought there must be some difference, or he would not have objected; but I can not see, if we are to have any regulation at all, why we should not know accurately, instead of having only partial information, and we can have no accurate information unless we know what the packer does with the by-products as well as what he does with the meat products. I think, therefore, that the definition ought to stand.

In conclusion, I repeat I am not in sympathy with Government ownership of business, and not much in sympathy with Government regulation of private business, but where a few men like the great packing concerns can, as they have done, lay their hands on a nation's food supply, and thereby decree life or death to men, women, and children who must eat if they shall live. I unhesitatingly vote to give to our Government the power to compel these people, the packers, to deal fairly with the raisers of live stock and all the other people who consume meat. If they are unwilling to be fair, we must make them become so. If they are fair in their practices, this bill will not hurt them. I shall vote for the Senate bill.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I have spoken once or twice previously on measures similar to the one now pending and had hoped to avoid taking any part in the discussion at this time. It occurs to me that we have held hearings on this bill sufficient to satisfy every phase of the industry and have discussed the measure so fully that there should be no chance for any doubt in the mind of anyone who was actually seeking for information. So I had thought that no further discussion was necessary, but some statements have recently been made here that I can not allow to go unchallenged.

There has been entirely too much of a disposition throughout the discussion of this bill to minimize the extent of the demand for the legislation and to criticize those who propose it. That situation impresses me as having some relation to the old story of the lawyer with the bad case who abuses the witnesses. As a matter of fact, complaint and clamor against the methods employed in our great central markets began with the establishment of those markets and have continued from that day until this.

In connection with the live-stock market I may say here as suggesting to Senators a fact that is not generally known—it was not known to me until recently—that the State of California annually produces great quantities of meats, imports thousands of head of life stock, matures them, and then, I believe, exports considerable quantities; but up to this time those who handle live stock and live-stock products in that State have persistently refused to have any centralized market within the borders of California, and there is, I understand, but little criticism of the market situation there on that account. A very different condition prevails, however, in the rest of the country, where the central-market system has been built up, and, as was pointed out yesterday, one of the important outstanding facts is that the producers of live stock have no other place to sell their stock.

One Senator in speaking upon this question made the statement that agitation for legislation similar to that now pending began 33 years ago. He is right in that, but I do not recall whether at that time he indicated that that agitation began in the United States Senate, and as a result of it a resolution was introduced, a copy of which I shall take the liberty of reading to the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment before the Senator reads the resolution to which he has referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to have the Senator inform me especially, and perhaps others interested in the same question, what is sought to be accomplished by prohibiting the packer from having any interest in stockyards. For instance, Armour & Co. have a packing house in Jacksonville, and they also have stockyards. They buy the cattle, hogs, and so forth, from those who produce them, and then they slaughter them in their own establishments. There are also, I believe, independent stockyards there. I do not know just what objection there is to the packer owning stockyards. It may be that it is all wrong, but I should like for the Senator to point out, if he will, just why it is insisted in this legislation that the packer shall not be interested at all in the stockyards.

Mr. KENDRICK. I shall be glad to give the Senator my impressions.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, from the beginning of this discussion I have never contended that the packers could not safely, could not reasonably well, own an interest in the stockyards, provided that interest was not a dominating one; but the principal objection to packer ownership of stock is found in packer control. The very utilities of the yards, the very conveniences of the yards, afford means of discrimination; and it is contended by those who have made a close study of it that there is danger of the employment of undue influence, first upon commission men, and upon other agencies of the yards, by such ownership. Then, again, where the packers own or dominate the ownership of the yards, one of the strongest reasons advanced against such ownership or domination is the fact that, as it is stated, the result is to prohibit competitors from coming in and locating near those yards.

As one of those who have given a good deal of study and thought to the question, I have never believed there was any reason why the packers should not own an interest in the yards, and I have been willing to believe, and in fact have believed, that that interest might be helpful in conducing to the furnishing of ample facilities and in other ways that would encourage the shipment of products to the markets.

The fundamental objection to packer ownership or domination, however, is this, that it places the buyer of live stock in a position of power of which, if he were so disposed, he could take undue advantage, to the detriment of the seller. The producer feels, and I think not unnaturally, that if the man to whom he must sell controls the market where the transaction must take place, the exchange is not made on equal terms. Accordingly sentiments of suspicion and distrust arise which in themselves have a necessarily bad effect.

Now, Mr. President, to return to the beginning of this agitation for legislation, on May 16, 1888, the Senate passed a resolution authorizing an investigation, and among other things—

> To determine whether there exists or has existed any combination of any kind * * * on the part of those engaged in buying and shipping meat products, by reason of which the prices of beef and beef cattle have been so controlled or affected as to diminish the price paid the producer without lessening the cost of meat to the consumer.

I mention that at this time, and shall refer to it later on, to indicate that this body 33 years ago last month first began the discussion of this question. As a result of that resolution five Senators were appointed as a committee to investigate the market situation; and while I am on that subject I think I might as well indicate to the Senate what the findings of that committee were.

Two years' time was devoted to this investigation; and I omitted to say that the members of that committee were men of national reputation. There was Senator Cullom, of Illinois; Senator Manderson, of Nebraska; Senator Plumb, of Kansas; Senator Coke, of Texas; and Senator Vest, of Missouri. Those five Senators, after an exhaustive study covering a period of two years, reported to the Senate in part as follows:

> The overwhelming weight of testimony from witnesses of the highest character, and from all parts of the West, is to the effect that cattle owners going with their cattle to the Chicago and Kansas City markets find no competition among buyers, and if they refuse to take the first bid are generally forced to accept a lower one. This testimony comes from representative men, not emotional or prejudiced, but conservative and intelligent observers of whose sincerity there can be no suspicion.
> That the same parties, or their agents, combined and confederated in other matters of like character is beyond question.
> First. It is admitted that they combined to fix the price of beef to the purchaser and consumer, so as to keep up the cost in their own interest.
> Second. It is admitted that they have an agreement not to interfere with each other in certain markets and localities in the sale of their meat.
> Third. It is proved beyond doubt that they acted together in supplying meat to the Soldiers' Home at Hampton, Va., the National Hospital for the Insane, and other public institutions at Washington, D. C., the bid for the contracts being made by one, and the meats being then supplied by each of the dressed-beef men alternately for stated periods.

> Fourth. They combined in opening shops and underselling the butchers of cattle at Detroit and other places in Michigan and at Pittsburgh, Pa., in order to force them to buy dressed meat.
> Fifth. They combined in refusing to sell any meat to butchers at Washington, D. C., because the butchers had bid against them for contracts to supply with meats the Government institutions in the District of Columbia.
> Sixth. They acted together at Chicago in refusing to come before the committee as witnesses and in preventing their employees and agents from coming, it being an open secret that they met together with their counsel and agreed as to their action.

I call attention to this particular record, established by five Senators of this body thirty-odd years ago, in view of the oft-repeated statement that during the Federal Trade Commission investigation the packers were not allowed to offer testimony. These Senators certified to this body that though the packers of that day were earnestly sought as witnesses they agreed amongst themselves not to testify, and did what they could to prevent witnesses from coming before the committee.

> With this overwhelming proof of a common interest and intent, we submit that it is difficult to believe that with the most apparent motive for such action the same parties, or their subordinates with their knowledge, do not avail themselves of the opportunity presented by the centralization of markets to combine for the purpose of lowering the price of cattle.

The enactment of the Sherman antitrust law made necessary the dissolution of the trust condemned in those days and resulted in the organization of the National Packing Co., and so on.

Now, I want once more to turn back to the question raised here in the Senate during the present debate by one Senator as to the demand for the legislation, and those who have testified in favor of it.

As the Senator said, a multitude of witnesses came before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Not infrequently it was developed that when a witness who testified against the legislation was cross-questioned upon that matter by one of the Senators, he admitted that the packers had paid his expenses in coming to Washington. If a few men admitted that, it is reasonable to conclude that the packers paid the expenses of a great many men; and this furnishes the reason, as you may readily believe, why other men who favored the legislation were not here to testify. The great majority who want the legislation had no one to pay their expenses, but they found a way to express their sentiments.

The Senator who referred to the testimony against legislation failed, however, to call attention to the number of very prominent live-stock growers, representing themselves individually and representing different associations, who came and testified in the strongest language they could command in favor of this legislation. He overlooked the fact that included in the records of that hearing is a resolution favoring this legislation by nearly every live-stock association west of the Missouri River, and some of them east of the Missouri River; and they have passed these resolutions even as recently as the last few weeks.

I have in my office a resolution that has not been even referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but which was passed in April by the live stock association of my State—an association, as I recall, of 1,200 members. This association was organized in the Territorial days of the State, and no man can be a member of it who is not a stock grower. They are as representative a group of citizens as there is within the borders of Wyoming, and they passed a resolution unanimously indorsing legislation of this kind.

The American National Live Stock Association, of which I happen to be a member, is composed, as I recall the facts, of as many as 40 or 50 branch assocations and many hundreds of individual members, including among one of the associations the Texas Association of 6,000 active members. That association has passed a resolution in favor of this legislation at least at two or three annual meetings.

It is unnecessary to enumerate all these indorsements, but the Senator who seemed to feel that there was but little demand for legislation overlooked also the farm organizations that have had their representatives here pleading for the enactment of the measure. One of these organizations, as I remember, has a membership of 800,000 persons; and so far as I know they are all in favor of the legislation, and are urging action at the earliest possible date.

I want to say, in this connection, another word about the origin of the most recent demand for market reform. I do not think it has ever been mentioned here, and I am sure not many know the facts.

In a number of publications which have been issued on behalf of the big packers it has been stated that the movement originated at the El Paso meeting of the American National Live Stock Association in 1916. The El Paso convention proved to be only the instrument through which expression was given to a resentment that had been brought about through an incident that occurred in the November before. A number of stockmen, dissatisfied with the market conditions, had determined to see if some action could not be taken that would bring about an improvement; and in order to be sure that they were on safe and solid ground, they decided upon a conference with the packers. It was their thought that there could be no better way to solve the problems confronting the industry than for the representatives of the producers and the representatives of the packers to sit down together in friendly conference and analyze conditions in a spirit of cooperation. They were not moved by hostility, but only by a desire to work out, with the men to whom they sold their products, some method of eliminating the disadvantages under which they believed the producers labored.

In order to be certain that the packers would attend the conference they held it in the city of Chicago, under the very shadow of the packing houses, and they took special pains to invite the packers to be present and to cooperate by offering suggestions and advice, in an effort to improve market conditions. The conference was held, but it was decidedly one-sided, for not one of the large packers attended, nor did they, as I now recall, send a single official representative.

A gentleman who attended that conference and who is in this city to-day informed me three or four days ago that one representative of a large packing company did attend the meeting, but insisted that he was not there in an official capacity; that he was only there as a visitor, and that he had no message to give to that assemblage of live-stock producers for the benefit of the great industry on which both depended. Cooperation was refused, and it was only natural that the producers should interpret the action of the packers as notice that they desired no reform and would have none. The producers, however, knew that reform was necessary, and they were not to be discouraged. It is literally true that the failure of the large packing houses, which bought the great bulk of the live stock shipped to market, to attend that conference was the beginning of the last crusade for reform in the live-stock market. The first crusade, as I have shown, began in the United States Senate 33 years ago, and I say to those who are now opposing this legislation that they may elect either to settle this question now by the enactment of legislation that will turn the light of publicity on those live-stock markets or they are going to have 33 more years of crusading.

The statement that just a few people want this legislation is as far removed from the fact as it could be. Go out in the highways and the byways all over this country and you will find a demand for congressional action, not to penalize or punish anybody, but to make it certain to the humblest producer that the market in which he deals is not subject to manipulation for private and selfish ends.

Those who come here in opposition to this legislation are but a handful as compared with the multitude who favor it. The reason for this agitation is not far to seek. It is due nearly altogether, in my judgment, to the inequality between the man who sells in the market, from the point of vantage which he occupies, and the man who buys.

Let me say here that I have always objected to having this measure called a "packer" bill. I assume to state here, as was stated, I think, by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] yesterday, that if this bill is enacted it will affect the big packers less than any other market agency—so long as they do not attempt to engage in unfair practices—but I assume to say also that if there never had been any unfair practice in the yards, there would have been a clamor for Government supervision, without a question of doubt, because of the peculiar conditions which obtain in the markets.

First and foremost, the man who ships in from the country comes to market at a great expense of transportation, a great expense of maintenance of his live stock, and an enormous shrinkage in value, and he must sell, and sell promptly. I should say that the shippers come in multitudes. Under present conditions they find a very limited number of buyers, who, though they find it necessary to buy, do not find it necessary to buy from any particular shipper. The producer, in other words, finds competition among the buyers reduced to the minimum, but the buyer finds no limit to the competition among the sellers. So there is great inequality between them, and that in itself engenders suspicion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator state at that point into what classes the possible purchasers of live stock in the yards are divided, and make it clear how those classes fall under the regulations of this bill? I am moved to make that inquiry because the Senator has stated that possibly the large packers will be less affected than other classes of buyers by the regulations of the bill.

Mr. KENDRICK. I will be very glad to explain that. I have not enumerated the classes, but there are not many. The bulk of live stock going to market is slated for slaughter. The animals are killed and enter into food production. The great majority of those, as shown by recent records, 75 per cent of the cattle, I think, are bought by the five large packers; that is, in the great markets which they dominate or in which they operate and have their packing houses, I think perhaps as many as 13.

They buy 75 per cent, it is estimated. I do not remember the exact figures, but it is something like that. A certain percentage of those cattle, hogs, and sheep which are in condition to slaughter are sold and shipped on from these markets to eastern markets, and therein lies about the only element of competition with the large packers, though I am not saying that they do not compete amongst themselves.

A certain percentage of the stock received in the yards are in better condition to be fed grain and prepared for market later. Those are generally sold to what is known as the country trade, and go out to farms in the East and are matured on grain. That applies more directly to cattle and sheep than it does to hogs, because most of the hogs which reach the market go in from near-by sections of the country, and are in condition to kill when they reach the market.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator explain how sale is made to the feeders?

Mr. KENDRICK. I was coming to that. It is generally made through commission firms. In the first place, I think I should say that nearly all of the live stock shipped to market are consigned, under the present system, to commission firms, who sell them in the interest of the owner to either the packer, or, in case they are stock unfit for slaughter, to feeders, to go to the country. In any event, the commission man, in the main, acts as the agent for the sale and transfer of the stock.

There is another class of buyers in the yards who have been handling an increasing proportion of the stock that are presumably better fitted to be placed upon feed, and more fully matured than they are for slaughter, and that is what is known as the cattle trader. They are often referred to as "scalpers," and that class, so far as I know, includes the general list of buyers who meet in the yards to buy the shipments of stock which come there.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The commission man may represent either the seller of the cattle or the buyer of the cattle?

Mr. KENDRICK. He often does; and he often represents one one day and the other the next day. To illustrate the point, I may ship cattle to him which he will offer for sale and sell to some man in the country. Another day a man comes to him to get him to purchase stock for him, and he goes out in the yard any buys them from any other commission firm, or from these scalpers and traders.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And he charges a regular fixed fee.

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes; he charges a regular fixed fee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The trader, as I understand it, is a man who is buying and selling on his own account?

Mr. KENDRICK. He is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does he buy through the commission men?

Mr. KENDRICK. He buys generally from the commission men. But as a rule, as I understand it, he can either sell through a commission firm or he can sell direct to the man who is in the country, and who is a feeder. I believe there is no regulation in the yards which prohibits a man who comes from the country from buying from these scalpers and traders. But I am not so sure as to a regulation which prohibits a man coming and buying on his own account from the regular commission firms. I am not quite sure on that point.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This bill, then, regulates the packers, who buy 75 per cent of what is brought to market, and it also regulates the commission men?

Mr. KENDRICK. And the commission men.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And it also regulates the traders?

Mr. KENDRICK. It regulates the scalpers and traders, as they are known. It also goes far enough to provide for satisfactory yard facilities, and gives authority to fix the rates of charges, for instance, the price of feed, and the rates for yardage.

There is a law on the statute books of Canada quite similar to this. It does not go quite as far, I believe, as this proposes to go. It has not adversely affected the live-stock industry there. It has benefited it, I am told by reliable men who had to do with it and had experience with it. In discussing the matter with me a short time ago, the minister of agriculture of Canada said that the law had proven most beneficial. Almost as soon as the concentrated markets were established the demand for supervision arose, and Canada proceeded without delay to pass legislation, and, as the minister informed me, there has been but very little discussion of the matter from that day until the present time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator if there are a great many of these commission men?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes; they are called commission firms.

Mr. SIMMONS. There are a great many of them?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do they sell at private sale always?

Mr. KENDRICK. They sell the stock that is shipped to them. I think it is not considered good ethics among them to trade on their own account; although I want to make it clear that I am not sure of that. They hold aloof from doing that, and they act only as agents of other people who consign to them. They will sell to individuals or to the packers or anyone else.

Mr. SIMMONS. They do not sell the stock at auction?

Mr. KENDRICK. Oh, no.

Mr. SIMMONS. They are private sales?

Mr. KENDRICK. They are entirely private sales, in the alleys of the yards as they go and come.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator said a little while ago that one of these commission men would act at one time for the seller and at another time he would act for the buyer.

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes; that is to say, he would sell cattle shipped in to him from some one outside of the yard, and in that way act as an agent in disposing of the cattle. Another day he would take an order for cattle and go out in the yards and buy them for one of his patrons.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is there any complaint that the commission men did, at the same time or occasionally in connection with the same transaction, act as agents for both the seller and the buyer?

Mr. KENDRICK. There has been contention of that kind and there has been contention that they have acted in collusion with the scalpers and traders in the yards. Therefore those who have had the bill under consideration have thought it wise to include the traders, of course, as one of the market agencies. That explains why they are included in the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has read to the Senate the findings of a committee of very distinguished Senators, made about 33 years ago.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator from North Carolina please speak a little louder, so that we may hear him on this side of the aisle?

Mr. SIMMONS. I said that the Senator from Wyoming has read to the Senate the findings of the committee of five very distinguished Senators appointed by this body to make an investigation into the packers' transactions. Those findings specify certain objectionable practices which existed at that time—some 33 years ago. I presume those investigations were the result of complaints that were made against the packers at that time?

Mr. KENDRICK. They undoubtedly were. I will say to the Senator, if he will pardon a personal reference, that I do not recall the time since I was a young man on the range when there was not criticism of the conditions under which stock was sold in the market. I believe that the criticism would have occurred if every transaction in the yards had been conducted with absolute integrity, because of the inequality between the man who has to sell and the man who does not have to buy, which I have already pointed out.

Mr. SIMMONS. The bad practices that are set out in those findings were the practices of which the public complained 33 years ago.

Mr. KENDRICK. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, in recent years we have had a similar investigation of the packers by the Federal Trade Commission. I will ask the Senator if they did not find, as a result of that investigation, the existence of practically the same objectionable practices that had existed at the time of the first investigation to which I have referred?

Mr. KENDRICK. That is a public record. The two findings are in many respects parallel. As I stated before, the inequality is one reason, and there is the further fact that every time there has been an investigation it has been shown that there has been too much ground for the statement that there were unfair practices in the yards.

Mr. SIMMONS. So that we have had two investigations about 30 years apart that have found that those practices existed, and it is to be presumed they continued all during those years. The pending legislation is the first effort on the part of Congress to take concrete action to put an end to those practices, is it not?

Mr. KENDRICK. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what this legislation means.

Mr. KENDRICK. That is true.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is an effort on the part of Congress to stop the agitation and to apply a remedy to practices that were found to exist.

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. KENDRICK. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to make a request of the Senate. It is quite apparent to me that there will probably be some Senators who will wish to speak on the bill and who will not be able to do so unless provision is made to accommodate them. I have been requested to ask that we have an evening session. We can have an understanding, if it is agreeable, that at 5 o'clock we shall take a recess until 8 o'clock and that at the evening session it will be understood that there will be no vote taken on any proposition. Would there be objection from anyone to taking that course?

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if there are Senators who would take advantage of the opportunity and speak this evening?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I do not think there is any doubt about that. At least I should like to give them the opportunity to speak. I ask unanimous consent that at 5 o'clock the Senate shall take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, and that at the evening session there shall be no vote taken upon the bill or any amendment to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator say that there shall be no business transacted at the evening session except debate upon this bill?

Mr. NORRIS. I am willing to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska what necessity there is for holding an evening session?

Mr. NORRIS. I am rather inclined to believe that unless we do so there will be Senators disappointed to-morrow. We will only have two hours to-morrow for debate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to suggest to the Senator that I believe he would get better results if we would continue on until 7 or 8 o'clock without taking a recess than to recess at 5 o'clock and come back at 8 o'clock, because I very much fear we will not have many Senators here at 8 o'clock.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to say to the Senator that I was told a few moments ago that one Senator, who has to leave the Senate Chamber now within a few minutes, will be able to be here this evening, and he desires to speak on the pending bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If there are Senators who desire to speak and are willing to speak to-night, I can see no objection whatever on the part of any Senator who may not wish to come here himself. We can let the other Senators come here if no business is to be transacted and no vote taken.

Mr. NORRIS. I will submit my request unless some one objects.

Mr. SIMMONS. After conference with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] I withdraw the suggestion I made.

Mr. NORRIS. My request is that the Senate, at 5 o'clock, take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, and that no business shall be transacted at the evening session, except debate on the pending measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that at 5 o'clock the Senate shall take a recess until 8 o'clock, with the understanding that after 8 o'clock no business shall be transacted, but that debate will proceed on the pending bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CURTIS. And there is to be no vote on any amendment at the evening session?

Mr. NORRIS. None.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And that no vote shall be taken upon the bill or any amendments thereto at the evening session. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to submit another unanimous-consent request, if the Senator from Wyoming will permit me in his time.

Mr. KENDRICK. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask, though we may have an understanding without having unanimous consent, that at the session to-morrow from 11 o'clock to 1 the time be equally divided between those who are in favor of the bill and those who oppose it. It seems to me that that ought to be understood anyway, so that one Senator will not get recognition and take up all the time.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska to withhold that request for a moment.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] advised me a few moments ago that he wishes to be heard in the morning, and I think perhaps he ought to be here when the request is made.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall have to withdraw the request, of course, because anyone can object; but it strikes me that it must be apparent to all Senators that it would not be fair—at least I would not consider it fair, though I am not going to talk to-morrow and I am not asking anything for myself—that some one Senator should be recognized by the Chair to-morrow morning and take up all the time on either side.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not wish to be put in the attitude of objecting. I merely wanted to suggest to the Senator, in view of the statement of the Senator from Illinois, that I thought it fair he should be here when such a request is submitted.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I shall not press the suggestion.

Mr. KENDRICK. I wish to assure the Senator from Nebraska that I intend to occupy but very little further time.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not wish the Senator from Wyoming to get the idea that I was trying to shut him off. I made the request now, and interrupted the Senator now, because there are Senators who wish to speak to-night who are compelled to leave the Chamber at this time, and I had to do it now or else not do it at all. There was no thought of curtailing the Senator from Wyoming. I do not wish him to get any idea that I had that in mind. It was not in my mind, nor in the mind of anyone else. The Senator has been a member of the committee and for more than two years has been investigating the subject, and I am sure there is no one here who wishes to curtail at all anything that he has to say. I hope he will continue until he has concluded.

Mr. KENDRICK. I thank the Senator. I wish to say that since coming to the Senate I have not offended by speaking overmuch. There is more than one reason for that. In the first place, I have noticed that nearly every Senator speaks to empty seats, and in that event the only possible object he could have would be to speak to the people back home. If he considers that a joke on the people at home, I am rather inclined to think that at times the joke is on the Senator, because the people at home are not very much inclined, as I have observed, to read what has been said here in Congress.

I wish to give one more reason why this agitation has continued. As I have stated, the principal cause lies in the unequal conditions under which the man who sells in the yard and the man who buys face each other. The next reason is that every time there has been an investigation of the subject it has been developed too plainly that there were crooked practices. A third reason I find is the fact that during nearly every decade in the last 40 years the live-stock growers have met financial ruin and disaster, and while that was going on we have seen an accumulation of $550,000,000, I believe, according to the records, in the hands of the five large packing corporations. I submit, whether or not that accumulation was made by unfair practices, that there is too much reason to believe that these houses can practically control the price paid to the producer, on the one hand, and on the other, at least materially affect the price to the consumer.

While it may not be necessary, I think I had better ask leave to print in the RECORD some figures taken from the National Provisioner, and given by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska in the House of Representatives the other day and printed in the RECORD at that time in the form of a table, showing that while the price to the producer was reduced, the price to the consumer was at the same time increased. I ask unanimous consent for permission to print that again in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENDRICK. As another bit of history of the stockyards, and in the discussion of the subject, I wish to read a letter sent to the Senate during the so-called embalmed beef discussion by former President Roosevelt.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator reads that, I want to ask him one question which occurs to me in connection with the statement which he made a moment ago. Of course, we all know that the prices which are paid the live-stock producers of the country are below the cost of production; they are not living prices at all. At the same time we all know that the prices at which the retailers are selling their meat products are very little below what they were during war times. There has been some reduction in retail prices, but it has not been at all commensurate with the reduction in the prices of the farmers' product.

Now, when we complain of the great disparity between the price which the farmer gets and the price which the consumer has to pay the retailer, we are always told that the packers are not responsible for the difference; that it is due to profiteering on the part of the retailers, and that, so far as the great packers are concerned, their prices, if not altogether reduced as much as the prices of the farmers have been reduced, at any rate, in some reasonable proportion to the reduction which the farmer and stock raiser has had to accept.

Now, I want to ask the Senator the question, Have the packers, as a matter of fact, reduced their charges for meat products anything like in proportion to the reduction that they have forced the farmers and the stock raisers of the country to take for their product?

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator, I will call his attention to some of the figures in this table. Before doing so, however, I wish to express the belief that in all probability the packers have reduced their prices more than the retailers have reduced the prices at which they have sold. Here I desire to say that there has been within the past few months, in spite of that fact, an effort on the part of the stock growers to induce a spirit of cooperation. That effort failed; but the fact referred to by the Senator was really the origin of the demand for regulatory legislation. There has been a great deal of talk within the past few months of cooperation between the producers and the packers. The very purpose, the primary object, of this legislation, in my judgment, is to provide a basis of understanding between the man who produces live stock and the man who packs and prepares it; and until they reach that basis of understanding, there will be no opportunity for them to stand together, and thus eliminate the unnecessary costs between the packer and the consumer. Whenever they do come to understand each other better, and reach a basis on which they can agree, they can immediately cooperate; and, in my judgment, that action will do more for the country than anything that has ever been done in promoting a sufficient and satisfactory food supply for the Nation.

In this connection I call attention to a little incident that occurred within the past few weeks, of which I was told within the past week. A gentleman who is prominent in live stock production in California, and in live stock preparation as well, told me of making an appeal to a railway company to cut the price of the beefsteak on a certain train on which he had traveled. He found the price of sirloin steaks to be $2 apiece. He asked them to cut that price to $1. He said "This material does not cost you in excess of 25 cents, and should be reduced." The railway man said, "Why should we reduce it?" "Well," he said, "if for no other reason, it would help the producer, because there would be an increased consumption." Within a short time the railroad reduced the price of the beefsteak to $1.25, and the steward of the dining car told this friend of mine that immediately the quantity of beefsteak required for making a trip was doubled; that originally they were selling 8 pounds of beefsteak during the course of a round trip, but that as soon as the price was changed they required 16 pounds. It becomes, from that very fact, obvious that any unnecessary toll taken anywhere along the line between the producer and the consumer reduces consumption to that extent; to that extent injures the producer; and to that extent prevents the consumer from having a satisfactory supply of food.

There is no doubt in the world but this question is of such vital importance to all the people of the country that we can no longer allow to continue conditions which provoke a clamor about the methods employed in the handling of the food products of this great Nation.

I take this occasion to say that the stock producers of the United States, whether in the West or East, are the highest class people in the country. They are the slowest to complain, and in a thousand of them there will not be found one man who is a bolshevist or who is not doing all he can to uphold the Government and the laws of the country. It is unfair and unjust longer to allow the present situation to continue.

The table to which the Senator has referred was presented and printed in the RECORD by Representative MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. In referring to it, Representative MCLAUGHLIN pointed out that the table was taken from the National Provisioner, and therefore that there could be no doubt as to its correctness, as he viewed it. Certainly, at least, it was not prejudiced. He took the record of prices where the prices going down after the war met the prices that were advancing previous to the war, so that they had gotten back to the same point. At that point he gave the figures showing the price which was paid to the producer and the price charged the consumer. These figures show the percentages of the excess. I will give the average.

The wholesale price at which the packers sold their products, as shown by these figures from the National Provisioner, was 52.6 per cent higher in 1921 than in 1916, although the prices paid the producers at the two periods were the same. In other words, in spite of the fact that in April, 1921, the packers were buying live stock from the producers at the prewar values of February, 1916, the prices at which the packers were wholesaling to the retailers were still more than 50 per cent greater than they were in 1916. The significance of this is enhanced when it is considered that the packers have always contended that the price they pay for the live animal contributes 90 per cent of their cost of production.

Mr. SIMMONS. As I understand the Senator, the figures are given at the point where the producer was receiving exactly what he received before the war?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. And what was the average when that point was reached?

Mr. KENDRICK. I have not studied the figures, but Representative MCLAUGHLIN has taken an average of percentages. The figures vary on different products, but on the average, as I have stated, the packers' wholesale prices were 52.6 per cent greater in 1921 than in 1916, while the producer was getting exactly the same price he had received in 1916, showing that the retailer is not getting all of the difference.

Mr. SIMMONS. So that, while the farmer's product is at the same price as it was before the war, the wholesale price of the packer for the same product is 52.6 per cent higher?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes.

To return, I want to quote from the communication from Theodore Roosevelt, dated June 4, 1906, to the Congress of the United States during the campaign for legislation to improve the sanitary conditions in the packing plants.

I read it because the same reasons which made Roosevelt believe that reform could not be accomplished without legislation should prompt us to believe that the reform needed now likewise can not be secured without a law requiring it:

> I transmit herewith the report of Mr. James Bronson Reynolds and Commissioner Charles P. Neill, the special committee whom I appointed to investigate into the conditions in the stockyards of Chicago and report thereon to me. This report is of a preliminary nature. I submit it to you now because it shows the urgent need of immediate action by the Congress in the direction of providing a drastic and thoroughgoing inspection by the Federal Government of the stockyards and packing houses and their products, so far as the latter enter into interstate or foreign commerce. The conditions shown by even this short inspection to exist in the Chicago stockyards are revolting. It is imperatively necessary in the interest of health and decency that they should be radically changed. Under the existing law it is wholly impossible to secure satisfactory results. * * *

Here is the important part of the communication, to which I call the attention of Senators:

> Legislation is needed in order to prevent the possibility of all abuses in the future. If no legislation is passed, then the excellent results accomplished by the work of this special committee will endure only so long as the memory of the committee's work is fresh and a recrudescence of the abuses is absolutely certain.

I desire to say further, in reference to this proposed legislation, that for three years the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry have studied this matter with diligence, and have taken into their councils the very best legal advice that they could get, with a view to preparing a bill that would meet the needs of this situation, and that would not in any way disturb the industry. There is not a provision in this measure, so far as I know, that is meant in the way of retaliation. Not punishment for the packers but protection for the producer and the consumer is the end we have sought.

Not only this, but I do not believe that it can be shown by a close study of the bill that it vests anything like arbitrary power in any official. There is one thing certain: It calls for nothing under the sun but fair play. It calls for nothing except what every man in the stockyards or outside of the stockyards ought to be willing to give. Under those conditions I am unable to see how it would affect adversely any man within the confines of those yards who was doing business on the square.

I feel so sanguine as to the merits of this legislation that I will make the statement now that if this bill becomes a law it will be but a very brief time until the very market agencies which now oppose it will boast that the markets in which they are doing business are supervised by the greatest Government on the face of the earth as proving the absolute integrity of their methods.

This bill is intended to disclose the absence of any wrongdoing as quickly and as effectively as it discloses the existence of evil practices. Under no conditions could such a law fail to be beneficial.

I assume without any doubt that we are all agreed that the Government should not undertake to conduct any line of business, but I think every Senator within the sound of my voice will also agree that it is a legitimate function of government to insist upon fair play in all lines of business, and that is all that this legislation proposes to do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCUMBER in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. KENDRICK. I do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but he is looking at me and I do not want him to judge from my silence that I consent to his statement. I have not engaged in this debate, but if the Government of the United States is going into all lines of business to mark out the road of fair play there will not be much left of government or business either, in my judgment.

Mr. KENDRICK. That is the Senator's viewpoint. It is my judgment that in the case of this industry, at least, to which I have given the best years of my life, it will bring beneficent results to every phase of it; and I also assume to say here that the only substantial difference between the law as it stands to-day and the law we are trying to enact is that this measure furnishes the machinery of enforcement. I can not see anything else in it. Line after line of it is taken from laws now on the statute books. But suppose, for instance, that the laws stay there, as they have for years, without being enforced; they do not meet the needs of this industry.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOODING in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. KENDRICK. I do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want the Senator to understand that my remark a moment ago was not in reference to this bill. I realize that the Senator knows very much more about this industry and the effect of this bill on it than I do. The Senator's statement was general as to all business, and that is where I took issue with him. Of course, I recognize that the Senator knows more about this business than I do, because I know very little about this particular business.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we have heard repeated over and over again here not only the size of this industry, the volume of the business, but its importance to the Nation, it would seem that every man who has knowledge of this insistent agitation would see in it all the necessity of taking some steps to correct abuses, and through such correction bring good understanding.

UMI

The effect of this legislation will not be revolutionary; there will not be the slightest disturbance of the present system of marketing. On the one hand no legitimate agency will have anything whatsoever to fear from supervision under this bill. Complaints, to begin with, will be limited in number and as time goes on will be followed with less and less frequency. On the other hand, it is not presumable that market values will be affected even slightly by supervision. It is believed that to establish an authorized agency, speaking not for one branch, but for all of the different branches of the industry, an agency that will disclose the absence of wrongdoing as promptly as it will discover unfair practices will greatly compel confidence where there is now suspicion and distrust; it will eventually result in good understanding where there is now misunderstanding. It is not expected that the bill will suspend the law of supply and demand; it is hoped it will make it more responsive. It will not interfere with the natural characteristic of barter and trade; it is believed and hoped it will bring to the situation the wholesome atmosphere of good faith and encompass it about with the spirit of good will that is too often absent under present conditions.

It is but logical to conclude that increased faith in the integrity of the markets will prove the strongest incentive to increased production. The removal of distrust from the source of supply will immediately tend to increase consumption.

I need hardly say that the moral effect should be more beneficial than any financial or material effect. Only those who are blinded by prejudice can look upon this legislation as intended to promote the interests of one class; it is vitally important to all, and it is not necessary to point out to you that the most fundamental need of a Nation is a dependable food supply.

The contest for legislation has now extended over a period of years. Months have been consumed in hearings and days in debate. The record should be complete, and every Senator who votes upon this question will vote with full knowledge of the facts. As it appears to me, the opportunity is here to end this age-old controversy, and we owe it to the Nation to eliminate once and for all the question of the integrity under which these great live-stock markets are conducted.

It has been suggested here by some of the Senators who have spoken against the measure that the administration is committed against legislation of this kind, and the President's inaugural address has been quoted to show that he stands for "less government in business and more business in government." I feel certain that those of us who have had the privilege and the great honor of serving with the President in this body will be unable to believe that he intended to suggest that wrongdoers anywhere, in any line of business, should take comfort from that statement.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. KENDRICK. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator states that the bill in no way attempts price fixing. The Senator is familiar, I assume, with the provision on page 39, which provides that—

> The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may after hearing, upon complaint or upon his own initiative, determine and fix, and by rule, regulation, or order prescribe fair and reasonable practices, charges, and rates to be observed by operators and fair and reasonable terms and conditions upon which the services of operators in commerce shall be rendered or performed.

That certainly is an attempt at price fixing, is it not?

Mr. KENDRICK. I would not consider it price fixing of live stock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, no.

Mr. KENDRICK. That is the principal product. That is a rate-fixing measure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This fixes the price of the services of the operators.

Mr. KENDRICK. I consider that there is a wide distinction, if the Senator pleases, between fixing prices on the principal product handled and fixing legitimate or reasonable rates for services within the stockyard in the handling of that product.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Whether there is a difference in principle or not, the fact is that the bill does authorize the commissioner in the Secretary's office to fix the charges of the operators; and on page 30 the operators are defined to be——

Mr. KENDRICK. Charges for services, if I may interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I read the exact language:

> Charges and rates to be observed by operators.

Mr. KENDRICK. I think elsewhere in the bill it refers to services, meaning charges for services, not prices of products.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It refers to services right in the next line, but it refers to both and all of them. They can fix—

> Charges and rates to be observed by operators, and fair and reasonable terms and conditions upon which the services of operators in commerce shall be rendered or performed.

On page 30 an operator is defined to be—

> Any person engaged in the business of conducting or operating a stockyard in which live stock is handled in commerce, and any trader or commission man or other person performing services wholly or partly in commerce with respect to live stock handled in or in connection with a stockyard.

Mr. KENDRICK. My understanding of that is that it is conditioned upon the same constitutional right to fix the rates to be charged by railroads or other public utilities for services to the public.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was not discussing the constitutional authority of Congress to make the provision, although I think it is quite questionable. I was simply referring to it in connection with the Senator's statement; and I understand that the distinction the Senator makes is that when he said it did not attempt to fix prices, he meant the prices of the meat.

Mr. KENDRICK. The prices of the product handled.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of the live stock?

Mr. KENDRICK. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That explains it. But, Mr. President, I understood the Senator had finished his remarks.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have just about concluded. I want to add one word more with respect to the two bills that are before us—the House bill and the Senate bill. While I believe that the House bill is in many respects an excellent measure, I am confident that the time and study given to the preparation of the bill reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry justify Senators in their contention that the Senate bill is the more satisfactory measure and that it will, without doubt, prove much more effective in bringing about the desired results.

I may say, however, that the House bill is not substantially very different from the bills introduced in the Senate when this problem was first presented for discussion. It is interesting to recall that the first Senate bill vested the power and the responsibility of supervision in the Secretary of Agriculture. Some of the witnesses who first appeared before the committee in opposition to legislation, and to whom one of the Senators referred to-day, attacked this feature of the proposed measure on the ground that it placed too much authority in the hands of one man. It was protested that power over this great industry should not reside in the hands of any single individual, and so out of deference to these objectors we substituted a commission for the so-called arbitrary one-man power. Now, these same opponents of the legislation object to the commission, and, as I understand it, the House committee, out of deference to their new views, abolished the commission and again vested all authority under the measure in the Secretary of Agriculture.

I have noted that a number of Senators who have taken part in this debate have made the statement that the pending Senate bill is a great improvement, and I share that belief. I am confident that an even better bill may be worked out by a conference committee, and I see no reason in the world why we should not substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, for the specific reason, if for no other, that the two bills will then go to conference, and that we can take the best of both bills and reconcile the differences between the two Houses.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not pretend to be at all intimately familiar with this business of raising, marketing, slaughtering, and distributing live stock, and I am only interested in the principle involved in the bill.

It appears to me that it is a departure, to say the least, for the Government to extend its regulation over business to the extent which is proposed in this measure. I have no doubt there have been abuses in the packing business and in the cattle-raising business, as well as in the steel business and the coal business, and, in fact, in every great business, not only interstate business but intrastate business as well.

In the consideration of such a measure a question always arises involving the function of the Government, especially under the limitations of the powers of the Government as prescribed in our system of delegated powers under the Constitution of the United States. The Congress of the United States does not have all power, like the British Parliament. It has only such powers as the framers of the Constitution, and I mean also the States which ratified the Constitution, expressly conferred, and such powers as must be assumed from those granted for the proper execution of the granted powers.

Hitherto the Government has contented itself with the regulation of the transportation system of the country and certain things intimately involved in that. It has, under the power to regulate commerce, prevented certain articles deleterious to the morals and health of the people from being transmitted over the railroads of the country, and the exercise of that power has been upheld by the courts, and I think wisely.

This bill, and the theory upon which it is framed, proposes to extend the regulatory power of the Government into a business which has hitherto been conducted in competition with its rivals, free from governmental interference. It was, to be sure, like every business and every citizen, subject to the Sherman antitrust law, and at any time when the Department of Justice could go into court and prove that the business and those conducting it were forming a monopoly or unduly restraining trade, they were subject to the penalties of the law and could be enjoined and punished.

That does not seem, however, to satisfy those who insist that more is necessary in the interest of the public. I am wondering what the result is going to be in the country if this legislation shall be enacted. It seems to me that if it shall be enacted there is no avoiding the conclusion that the Government will be ultimately compelled, by public sentiment similar to that said to demand this legislation, to place every other large business under Government inspection, supervision, regulation, and control, and I am wondering how the business of the country will then be conducted, and whether the ultimate result will be more satisfactory to the public than the present condition.

The business of raising and distributing wheat is a great, basic, vital, fundamental industry in the country. Those engaged in that industry have their troubles. The wheat grown by the farmer has to be transported to the nearest depot, and there shipped, consigned to a consignee at a place where there is a grain elevator or a storage warehouse, and there it is sold and resold, ultimately shipped aboard cars, and distributed to the mills, and from the mills to the jobber, from the jobber to the retailer, and from the retailer to the consumer. Many injustices, I have no doubt, are perpetrated in the course of those transactions, and I have no doubt that the people concerned in the intricate operations, commercial, banking, and transportation, which constitute the movement of that crop are more or less dissatisfied with each other and with the facilities furnished by each other. How long will it be before the Government will be asked to take control of the grain business of the country, and similarly of the coal business of the country, and of many other businesses hitherto left to the competition of private individuals and private capital?

Of course, the provisions of the pending bill give the people in charge of the control, inspection, and the fixing of the rates, and the decision upon the practices all the powers that the Federal Trade Commission has in the way of investigation and prosecution and put the courts at the service of the Secretary of Agriculture or of the commissioner in the department provided for in the bill.

The things which the Government is empowered to do under the bill in the way of prescribing the way the books of the corporations shall be kept, the publicity measures involved, the control by inspectors, and inspection of every department of the business go a long way to take the conduct of the business out of the hands of those who have their money invested in it. A man can not conduct his business in the way he thinks is profitable to himself, even if he keeps within the law, and do it subject to somebody else's control in every respect all the time and making public all his transactions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How does the Senator discriminate between this proposed regulation and inspection of stockyards and those who deal in them and the regulation and inspection which the Government exercises of some eight or ten thousand banks of the country? Inspections are made of the banks and they are under the regulation of Government officials, and yet these thousands of banks have prospered under wise inspection and regulation, which is in the interest of the people who do business with the banks and generally of the community. Why should we argue that a mere inspection and regulation of a great business means its destruction, when we know, as a matter of fact, that Government inspection and regulation in many great lines of business has conduced to prosperity, development, and safety?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator has asked a question, and has attributed a statement to me. I disavow having made any such statement and having any such intention. The Senator asks me why I argue that Government inspection and control or regulation of this business will result disastrously to the business. I do not. I am arguing that it will probably hurt it. I do not claim that it will destroy it, but I mean that it puts that business, of course, and when it is followed by other bills for other industries of the country, it will put all the large industries under the direction and control of the Government as to their practices, their methods of bookkeeping, and in many respects which have heretofore been left to the genius and the ability of the respective competitors in that line of business.

I do not know that it would be disastrous in the sense of being ruinous if the Government itself took possession of these industries and ran them. I do not know it; I suspect that it would be very, very, harmful, in view of the instances of Government mismanagement with which we are all familiar. But because we are confronted with it, are on the threshold of it, I am talking of the wisdom of the Government taking the first step which it has taken outside of the control of the transportation instrumentalities of interstate commerce itself, to wit, the great interstate railroads which are of themselves necessarily interstate commerce.

The Senator asks me why I am satisfied to let the Government regulate the banks, and am doubtful about the wisdom of the policy of regulating all business if it is big enough and is interstate business. It seems to me the distinction is perfectly plain. The Government does not regulate the State banks; the Government regulates the national banks. The Government incorporates the national banks; they are its creatures. Of course, it must regulate them. They are intimately connected with the governmental purpose of coining money and issuing bills of credit. It has to be done under Government supervision and under Government law. They owe their existence to acts of Congress. There is nobody else to supervise them except the Government. They are national banks.

Mr. President, I simply desire to say that here is the first step in the regulation of a private business. Every other business that is a business of any consequence at all in this country is interstate business. There is not a soap maker nor a sewing-machine maker, nor a manufactory of pins and needles or nails and screws or bolts, or a sawmill that could live for a minute on the business it does in the State where located.

I will venture to say, without having any statistics to fortify the statement, that 90 per cent of the business of the country is interstate business.

If that is all to be taken charge of by the Government and a new bureau or a new commission in some department set to prescribe rules and regulations, fix prices for services, say what is fair and unfair, what practices they can all indulge in, continually asking for reports, and having inspectors in their factories and examiners to see that they conform to the regulations so fixed, and the whole thing left, as in this instance, to the Secretary of Agriculture, what will be the final outcome? How much will the Secretary of Agriculture know about this matter? If anybody knows or has the slightest idea of the duties of the Secretary of Agriculture now, he knows that he can only give the scantest attention, and his province will be to affix his signature when required to a set of rules and regulations that have been investigated and developed by some clerk or inspector to whom the whole thing has been delegated. Those will be the men who will run the business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I have not heard all the Senator has said, I regret, having been called from the Chamber. The Senator just commented upon the proposition that if the Government assumed control it would have to take charge of these business activities through agents. We know that the agencies to be created now would be less intelligent, let me say, than some of those which existed during the war. We had some of the best business men in the United States here looking after the coal operations and other business enterprises and yet both the owners and the public complained of the inefficiency which resulted from the governmental operation of those business activities.

How much worse will it be when we do not have the business ability of those men, many of whom had given their lives to a particular line of business, which they were called here to help administer. That is a phase it seems to me which ought to address itself to those who are advocating the policy of having the Government take over and operate private business. Whatever the Government attempts to do it mars. Whenever it attempts to control business, it destroys it or its efficiency, and it results in waste and inefficiency and extravagance.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator is correct. That is an important element to be taken into consideration, but it will be brushed right aside as of no consequence. It goes without saying, it seems to me, that the class of men who will be found available to the Secretary of Agriculture to be sent out to inspect this business and to give advice about it and formulate rules and regulations will not be anything like the caliber of men who are in the business and know about it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Possibly I have misunderstood the bill, but I had supposed that the inspectors would merely be sent out to see that the acts of Congress with relation to this business are observed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly; and that rules and regulations prescribed by the department are observed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are not to attempt to run the business?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, no.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The fact of the matter is that if a business is successfully regulated by the Government we have no demand to operate the business. It is only when Government regulation fails or when monopoly is developed that the demand arises to have the Government operate. I am not in favor of Government operation and I am not in favor of Government control. I simply take the position that when a business goes so far that it affects the public interest and has passed beyond the control of the States to regulate, then it is the duty of the National Government to regulate it in the public interest—not to destroy it.

What I was pointing out to the Senator a few moments ago was that there are a number of instances in the United States in great business activities when regulation by the Federal Government has not interfered with the development of the business whatever in any degree. I think that is true of the railroads. I think our railroads are a great deal better off at the present time than if regulation had never been attempted, if railroad wrecking had been allowed to go on as it was allowed to go on before the Interstate Commerce Commission was selected.

If the Senator believes that this is the control of the packing industry or the control of the stockyards or the operation of the industry or the stockyards by the Government, I hope he will explain what part of the bill he refers to. I understand it is a mere inspection and regulation to carry out the will of Congress.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator does not believe in control, but he believes in regulation. The terms are synonymous. What is the use of splitting hairs about that? If you give me authority to lay down a set of regulations and rules by which a business shall be conducted, who is conducting the business, the man who obeys the rules or the man who makes them?

Of course, the Senator says that where State power fails to produce the results that are desired, his view is that the United States Government should assume the business and do it. Two questions arise there. One is whether the Government has the power to do it or not, and, secondly, whether it is wise that they should do it, whether we want to concentrate all the power over all the business of the country and assume regulation and control of it under rules and regulations prescribed in the various executive departments of the Government by unknown people, which rules and regulations are to have the force of laws and for the violation of which men are to be indicted and sent to prison, whether we want to get that mass of power hidden behind the screen of an executive department and developed by anonymous people, in the end having only the routine signature of the Secretary appearing as approving of them.

I say, be it wise or unwise, if the bill passes and this system of supervision and regulation be put into operation in this privately conducted business, it will be invoked for every business in the country. It is important for the country that the commodities which are dealt with in grocery stores should be honestly produced and distributed without oppression, and that the practices should be fair. The sugar industry developed to be quite an important war measure, so much so that the Government had to authorize agencies to go out and buy sugar in the markets of the world, and they had to create a special board to take care of that one commodity as a war measure. There are hundreds of them. Every one of them is an absolute necessity to the welfare of the people. The question is, Shall the Government regulate them all here in the departments?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think most of us are in accord with the general principle of noninterference by the Government in the regulation of private business. But I should like to ask the Senator if he makes any distinction between the Government's duty to inspect and regulate a business dealing in a nonessential of life owned by private individuals and which only manufactures and produces a small portion or part of the product consumed and a business incorporated, under a charter of the Government, for millions of dollars, dealing with a prime necessary of life and controlling the manufacture of practically the entire consumption?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would make the distinction, of course, that there would not be nearly as much of what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] designated as clamor for the Government to regulate a little bit of business which was not of much concern to the general public as there would be to regulate a big business. The Senator refers to a business incorporated by the Government. Of course, the bill proposes to regulate every person, firm, or corporation. The form of the business organization is immaterial, whether it is a partnership or a State charter or what.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I simply wished to know if the Senator made a distinction between the two.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I do not make a distinction in principle.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator does not believe the Government has any duty to inspect or attempt to regulate a highly organized business controlling the price and output of a prime necessity of life any more than it would the business of a shoe cobbler?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think the Senator ought to make that statement about me, because I do think the Government has a right to regulate interstate commerce, no matter by whom conducted, but I say it will attempt to regulate, in all probability, the large businesses of the country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Massachusetts speaks about those businesses which are engaged in producing the prime necessities. I have had several communications urging the introduction of a bill to regulate the shoe factories of the State from which the Senator comes upon the ground that the manufacturers of shoes were producing a prime necessity and were charging extortionate prices. The writers feel that the Government ought to inspect and regulate. One communication which I received stated that the goods produced since the war have been inferior in quality to those produced prior to the war, and by reason of the failure to produce the same high grades of shoes that in the past were produced there should be not only inspection by the Federal Government, but there should be regulation of the prices and regulation of the distribution.

If we are to begin the regulation of enterprises upon the theory that they produce things essential for the life and welfare of the people, I see no place where we are going to stop; I see no point where we will draw the line. We are to have this bill followed by a bill to regulate the coal business, and I have been told that there is a bill in process of construction to regulate the smelters of the United States. They are engaged in interstate commerce, and the contention is made that they are charging too much for smelting the ores, as the result of which the small producer is being driven out of business, and they want the Federal Government to appoint inspectors and to regulate the smelting charges.

I ask the Senator from Connecticut, where shall we draw the line?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There will not be any line drawn except——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut to yield to me until I reply to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that I do not know of any business that ought to be regulated more than the boot and shoe business when it becomes a monopoly, but the boot and shoe business is not a monopoly. Boots and shoes in this country are manufactured in absolutely independent plants actively competing with each other in almost all the Northeastern and Central States. It is one highly successful industry that is not a monopoly, and the Senator can not name one boot and shoe manufacturing establishment that assumes the proportion of a monopoly in this country, not one. I am frank to say that there is some recent evidence of the possibility of the boot and shoe manufacturing industry becoming a monopoly. Only within the last month one of the leading manufacturing plants of Manchester, N. H., and one in St. Louis, Mo., combined into a very large organization to control the output of a certain grade of boots and shoes. If this goes on and this business becomes a monopoly, it will be most regrettable.

In Massachusetts boots and shoes are manufactured to a very large extent, and I would be the first to favor governmental regulation and inspection of the boot and shoe manufacturing industry if all the boot and shoe manufacturing plants in this country became combined under one capitalization and management, a gigantic trust that could without restraint control production and prices and stifle competition.

Mr. KING. May I make one observation?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will surrender the floor to the two Senators.

Mr. KING. No; I do not desire to intrude upon the Senator's time.

Mr. KENYON. I do not want the Senator to surrender the floor, but I do want to ask his opinion concerning the very interesting question which has been raised.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I do not want the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator if he has read the case of the German Alliance Insurance Co. against Kansas, in Two hundred and thirty-third United States?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator should read it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator may read such portions as he has in mind, if he cares to do so?

Mr. KENYON. It discusses the very question when a business, which is private in its nature, becomes charged with a public use. I believe that is the real question involved here. Every business in the country is not charged with a public use.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No.

Mr. KENYON. But a business may reach such proportions, so affecting the public interest and the public welfare and the life of the Nation, that it may in law be charged with a public use.

The Supreme Court of the United States discuss that, and they take up the old case of Munn against the State of Illinois, the famous elevator case, where it was held as to the State law providing that elevators were charged with a public use that it was within the power of the public to make that demand. I am not discussing the wisdom of it at all. The court go back to that case, and I will read an extract from their opinion to the Senator. The court say:

> The principle was expressed to be, quoting Lord Chief Justice Hale, "that when private property is 'affected with a public interest it ceases to be juris privati' only" and it becomes "clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence and affect the community at large"; and, so using it, the owner "grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good."

That was the language of the Munn case, which is cited with approval in this opinion. The Supreme Court in this case, after reasoning in a way that may astound the Senator——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should not be at all surprised.

Mr. KENYON. And it is a comparatively late case—held that insurance was so charged with a public use; that it was a matter of regulation by the government—not the Federal Government, because insurance has been held not to be interstate commerce. But the point I am making is that a business, private in its nature, may be charged with a public use and be subject to control without violating the fifth amendment to the Constitution as to the taking of private property "without due process of law."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is no new doctrine, I will say to the Senator. That was well established before the court decided that case. If a man in the transaction of his business holds himself out as catering to the public and inviting the trade of the public—acting like a common carrier, for instance—he is estopped to deny the power of regulation and to claim that he is solely in private business. A ferryman can put himself in the same position.

Mr. KENYON. The Supreme Court practically held the same thing just a few days ago in the rent case in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not deny it.

Mr. KENYON. Then, is it not, as a question of power, whether the packers, under the facts and circumstances as presented, are engaged in such a business as can be said to be charged with a public use?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; but the Senator is not driven to invoke the doctrine of public use attaching to a business. There is no question about the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States—to regulate packing concerns in their transactions in interstate commerce.

Mr. KENYON. That is true; but there might be a question, in the regulation of commerce, of violating the fifth amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hardly think so. Where Congress is given plenary power to regulate a business the decisions have gone to the extent almost of saying that it can pretty nearly be prohibited. It can be regulated, of course, and absolutely prohibited if it is malum in se, like lottery tickets or diseased meat. I do not think there is any question about the plenary power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States.

In connection with absolute power there is always raised the question which kinds and portions of commerce are desired to be regulated and in what way it is desired to regulate them. Those are questions of discretion and expediency. Our power is unlimited to regulate commerce. I do not doubt we can make proper rules and regulations for the shipment of beef from one State to another, from the ranch to the packer, and its distribution over the arteries of interstate commerce, but this bill goes into other features; it not only takes up this industry without taking up other industries and proceeds to regulate it—I think the others will follow, however—but it takes up activities about which I will not express a positive conviction, but activities that seem to me not to fall within the provisions of the interstate commerce clause.

I think the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] was entirely correct in the illustration which he used yesterday in his remarks. I do not believe the stockyard, which is the resting place of the cattle after they get off the train before their sale and reshipment and the place where they are fed and watered, is an instrumentality of interstate commerce in the way the cattle business is conducted, yet this bill assumes to regulate the stockyards and the operators in the stockyards. I do not believe we could do that lawfully under the Constitution any more than we could regulate the wages of the farmer's hired man because he hauls the wheat from the farm to the depot and ships it on the train, and the farmer intended from the beginning that the wheat should become an object of interstate commerce.

It is shipped far up in Minnesota down to Duluth; it takes the water and goes to Minneapolis and winds up as flour in New York. If the man who buys a steer in the stockyards or who waters him or sells him, or if the operator of the stockyard is an instrumentality of interstate commerce when the cattle are not in process of transportation, then, as the logical outcome of the doctrine, the farmer's man who loads the wagon on the farm full of wheat to send it to be shipped in interstate commerce can have his wages regulated by the Secretary of Agriculture under a bill yet to be drawn.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have in my mind a decision with which, perhaps, the Senator may be familiar, arising in New Hampshire, a case against the United States, in which logs were carried down by a farmer or forester and put on the station floor, but were not actually shipped. The Supreme Court held that that was not interstate commerce, because the logs had not been put on the train.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; they had not as yet entered into interstate commerce.

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let us say that one stage of the journey of the cattle is finished. They were shipped from Wyoming to Chicago; they leave the train and they go to the cattle boarding house to rest overnight or for a week, and to be fed and watered, and they are sold or bought by a trader, and sold a dozen times back and forth, each trader shaving a commission out of the transaction. This bill regulates the commissions the traders are to charge when they sell cattle to each other in the stockyards, on the theory that the gambler who is shaving a commission on a steer is engaged in interstate commerce.

Now, let us see what a stockyard is.

> The term "stockyard" means any place, establishment, or facility maintained and conducted at or in connection with a public market.

That may be plain to those initiated in the trade and in this business, but it is not perfectly plain to me. If there is no public market conducted in a stockyard or in connection with it, is such a stockyard to be unregulated, while the stockyards where the cattle are sold, where there is a public market, are to be regulated by the Government? As I have said, it seems to me the Senator from New York was perfectly correct in his analogy between the part that the stockyard plays in the transportation of cattle and the part that the hotel or boarding house plays in the transportation of passengers in commerce among the States. Congress has power to regulate the rates the railroads shall charge for passengers. A passenger leaves Washington, intending to go to Chicago. He may first go to New York, where he leaves the train, expecting to take a train from New York to Chicago, which is run over a road different from that between Washington and New York. He goes to any one of the thousand hotels in New York City to spend the night, or, perhaps, to spend a week, before he resumes his journey. Has Congress the right to say how much the hotel shall charge that passenger, on the ground that he is engaged in interstate commerce and that the hotel is a mere instrumentality of interstate commerce? The statement is absurd on its face. The stockyard plays just the part in the transportation of cattle that the hotel plays in the transportation of passengers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is there not a great failure of analogy there?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought it was perfect, and so stated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. When cattle reach a town, instead of finding a hundred "hotels" where they can go, there are simply the stockyards on the railroad track through which the railroad tracks run.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know how many stockyards there may or may not be in the city where the cattle go, but let me ask the Senator: Suppose there was only one hotel in the town where the passenger to whom I have referred left the train, would the Senator then say the United States Government had the right to regulate the charges imposed by that hotel?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the hotel was part of the railroad right of way and operated by the railroad; yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But where the stockyards are not built upon the railroad right of way, does the Senator claim that the Government would have a right to limit the charges?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator will fail to find any stockyards that are not upon the railroad right of way.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They have a perfect right upon the railroad right of way if the railroads lease them or own them; but it makes no difference, in fact, where they are; it does not alter the principle of the thing.

The question is in any particular case where there is a stockyard and cattle are put into it, whether that is an instrumentality of interstate commerce or not. Of course, I admit that if it is owned by the railroad it would be just as much subject to Government regulation as though it were a freight shed of the railroad; but where it is owned by other people or leased by other people and operated independently of the railroad and the charges are separate and distinct and the profits go to another company, I do not think the Government has any right to regulate it under the commerce clause of the Constitution. I may be mistaken about it, I will say to the Senator; I do not claim that because I think so and because it seems to me to be so that, therefore, it would be so in the opinion of the court.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wish to suggest to the Senator that a much closer analogy would be to liken a stockyard to a railroad station. The passengers get out at the railroad station and the cattle get out at the railroad yard; necessarily they must be upon railroad property.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would not think that a close analogy at all, because, of course, when a passenger gets out of a railroad station he is still on the railroad's property and the railroad is performing a part of its functions as a carrier in furnishing a proper station for the passenger to enable him to get his ticket and get on or off the train and wait for trains. But that has nothing whatever to do with whether we can regulate a stockyard that is not owned or controlled by any railroad engaged in interstate transportation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether the stockyard is necessary in the shipment of live stock from one State to another? In other words, is it a necessary instrumentality to carry stock from State to State? If so, it would be an instrumentality of interstate commerce.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, it is not necessary in the meaning that the business can not be carried on, under difficulties, without it, for it used to be carried on without it. Cattle used to be driven along the public highways without using the railroads at all, and we could get along without stockyards, but the consumer would have to pay a great deal more for his beef if there were no stockyards. However, the business has become systematized in such ways, I assume, that we have got to consider that stockyards have become a necessary part of the business, certainly as it is now conducted.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, without disagreeing with him on this hotel proposition, because it is interesting——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say that I wish we did have a right to regulate hotel prices.

Mr. KENYON. I wish we did, too.

Mr. NORRIS. We would not do it if we had the right.

Mr. KENYON. We must not interfere with private business.

Suppose, now, that a few men got all the hotels in Washington, and erected one hotel down near the Union Station, on depot grounds or off depot grounds. Then, suppose that the business is so concentrated that it has to come through Washington to go all over the South and the Southeast from the North and West; and suppose that these men, keeping all others out of that line of business, want to charge every man who has to stop in his journey a thousand dollars a day, and have a monopoly of the business. Is that beyond any governmental regulation?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No.

Mr. KENYON. Is not that an obstruction of interstate commerce?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think, of course, Congress has undoubted power to regulate rates within the District of Columbia under our power to govern the District of Columbia.

Mr. KENYON. Then let us put aside the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But as a regulation of interstate commerce, I should say "no."

Mr. KENYON. I was going to say this: Have they not put in the channel of interstate commerce a monopoly that blocks the free flow of interstate commerce, and consequently can not Congress remove it or regulate it? Now, I do not know. I think it is an interesting proposition.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator, I will say that I do not think so. I think the fact that I may create for my own profit a situation which makes interstate commerce cost more money would not alter the classification of the business I have entered into and make my business interstate commerce, nor do I think that under the power to regulate commerce among the States the Government would have a right to confiscate or destroy some man's business because perhaps commerce could be conducted cheaper if he were not in that business.

Mr. KENYON. The point that is running in my mind is, where a man puts an obstacle in the pathway of interstate commerce, such as a monopoly—and that is an obstacle—whether, then, it can not be regulated. I am trying to lead my mind to believe that that is an analogy to the stockyards.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, I believe the Government can eliminate monopoly wherever it exists; but my mind does not quite coincide in the affirmative with the Senator's inquiry as to whether it could do it under its power to regulate commerce among the States, although of course the power to regulate commerce among the States was given for the purpose of increasing commerce and encouraging it and keeping the avenues of commerce free from obstruction.

Mr. KENYON. There is a pretty interesting discussion in the brief of the Attorney General, the present Senator, in the Northern Securities case, of that very question of monopoly obstructing the current of commerce; but I shall not interrupt the Senator any more.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am quite certain that if two trolley roads engaged in interstate commerce came to a river, and I had a bridge across the river, lawfully there under charter from the State, the Government could not take from me the right and let those trolley roads go across my bridge without full compensation to me.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There I have a monopoly, so to speak, and a deterrent of interstate commerce; but I think they could not, under the authority of abating a monopoly or regulating commerce, impair the value of my property without compensation.

Mr. President, one could talk for years about this bill and some ambiguities in it, I think, but I do not intend to allude to them. It is the general policy with which I am concerned and the precedent that this bill sets. I think the bill goes too far, and I do not think it will be a good thing for the country to take all the great businesses engaged in interstate commerce and put them under the control of a department here in Washington. You will so surround a business with rules and regulations that it can not be successfully conducted.

A good deal has been said about the effect of the Interstate Commerce Commission's jurisdiction over the railroads of the country. I would not have the railroads run along as they were running without Government regulation. I think it was legitimate and proper; and yet the fact is that it is not satisfactory. I do not know that there is any satisfactory solution to the railroad question and the troubles that the railroads are in; but the situation is that the price of everything the railroads have to sell is fixed and determined by the Government, and the price of everything they are compelled to buy is fixed and determined by the labor unions, the men who furnish the labor on the roads, and the material men of whom the railroads have to buy, and the directors managing the properties for the private stockholders who have invested their money are trying, simply acting within the rules laid down by the two sides to the controversy to which I have referred, to make the roads prosperous and earn a dividend upon the capital invested; and it can not be done. It is not being done. They have tried pretty hard.

The remedy may be more regulation. I do not know; I do not think so; but, as some Senator said here a few moments ago, although every now and then in the conduct of business, big and little, a rascal will turn up and betray his duty and ruin the property that he is in charge of, it is not the regular order every day. The fact that it is occasionally done in business is hardly a sufficient reason for the Government to take over all business, not having the courage to take it itself and pay for it, but saying to those who are compelled to conduct it: "You must conduct it according to the rules and regulations that I lay down." It may be that all business will be more prosperous if conducted under the rules and regulations prescribed by the inspectors and men that the departments will send out, but I doubt it. I do not believe it will be.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to section 5 of the Senate bill. I do not think it is quite coherent as it stands; at least, I am unable to understand it. I ask him to look at it with some care and see if something has not been omitted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I have thought a good deal about section 5, so I will not have to look at it. I think I know what the Senator means, and I was under a great deal of doubt about it myself. It is necessarily difficult to understand, I think; but if the Senator will analyze it, I believe he will find that it means this: I think the fair meaning of the first part of it is that it gives to the commissioner provided for in the bill, and also to the courts or anybody else, in the Government or out of it, the same power, whatever it may be, either of a court or of a commissioner, the same right if it be a defendant that is conferred by the Federal Trade Commission act upon the Federal Trade Commission or upon anyone whose duty it would be to administer that law or who might come under its supervision.

I will say to the Senator that personally I do not like the section. I had an amendment printed to-day that I expect to offer that strikes it out and inserts in lieu of it a simple statement that nothing in the act shall be construed to take away any of the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission. Further on in section 5 there is a provision that upon the taking effect of this act the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission as to all things provided for in this bill shall cease excepting in cases where the President or the Secretary of Agriculture or either branch of Congress shall instruct the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think that is perfectly plain; it is to me; but as to the other part, in order to make plain to the readers of the RECORD what I am talking about, I will read hastily the first part of the section as it now reads.

Mr. NORRIS. I confess to having difficulty with it myself.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is unintelligible to me. I have read it three or four times. I could understand it on the theory that some phrase had been omitted which I could supply, I think; but as it stands it is meaningless to me.

SEC. 5. The commissioner, the courts, and all persons shall have the same powers, rights, remedies, and duties with respect to all persons subject to investigation or regulation under this act, and heretofore subject to the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, and such persons heretofore subject to such act—

There is no connection whatever between the two sentences I have just read. Something evidently has been omitted—and such persons heretofore subject to such act shall, except as otherwise provided in this act, have the same obligations, duties, liabilities, and rights as are conferred or imposed by such act on the Federal Trade Commission, the courts, and such persons.

Now, if it had said that the commissioner, the courts, and all persons heretofore subject to the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission" should have the same powers under this act as were provided for in said act approved September 26, 1914, I could have understood what it meant.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say again to the Senator that of course, in the first place, I am not the author of section 5. I found it in the bill as I introduced it. Like the Senator, when I tried to study the bill and analyze its various parts, I reached the conclusion, first, that it was very doubtful what that section meant; but I think—and I came to this conclusion after I had studied it quite thoroughly—that it does in fact do what I said before. The language is very clumsy. It ought to be made plain. I admit that. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It could be redrafted and made perfectly unquestionable.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. There ought to be no doubt about what it means. It seems to me there might be some now; and if the amendment that I will offer is not agreed to, and the section is left as it is, I shall be very glad to have it amended and made plain.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, for the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], I present the amendments to the pending bill which I send to the desk. I ask to have them printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. STERLING. Now, Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in regard to the pending bill.

When the live stock commission bill was before the Senate at the last session I submitted a substitute for it. I have not been able to get over the belief I then entertained, that there is no need whatever of creating a new commission for the purpose of regulating the packing industry. I think, Mr. President, I shall be able to show that. We have been denouncing the creation of new commissions time out of mind. We have done it both on the score of efficiency and on the score of economy in the public service, and yet here in this bill it is proposed to violate needlessly the very things for which we have stood when denouncing the creation of so many Government commissions.

Mr. President, what is the gist of this bill? I am going to read those parts of the bill which contain the restrictions and the prohibitions against the packing industry. They are found in section 12, and it is provided that:

It shall be unlawful for any packer to—

(a) Engage in any unfair, or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce, or in any deceptive practice or device to cheat or defraud in commerce; or

(b) Sell or otherwise transfer to or for any other packer, or buy or otherwise receive from or for any other packer, any live stock or live-stock products for the purpose of apportioning the supply between any such packers, or unreasonably affecting the price of or creating a monopoly in the acquisition of buying, selling, or dealing in live stock or live-stock products in commerce; or

(c) Engage or participate in any manner, either directly or indirectly, in the business of purchasing, manufacturing, storing, or selling foodstuffs other than live-stock products, where the effect of such participation in such business may be substantially to lessen competition in or to restrain commerce or to tend to create a monopoly in commerce; or

(d) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other packer to apportion territory for carrying on business, or to apportion purchases or sales of any live stock or live-stock products, or to control prices thereof in commerce; or

(e) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other packer to engage in any course of business or to do any act for the purpose of preventing any person from carrying on a competitive or similar business in commerce;

Then comes the common count:

(f) Otherwise act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to do or abet the doing of any act, contrary to the provisions of this act, or refuse, neglect, or fail to act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to refuse, neglect, or fail to act in accordance with the provisions of this act.

There is one more, subdivision (g), which I think is a repetition pure and simple of the propositions contained in the other five provisions. For this reason I do not set it forth in the substitute I intend to offer.

Mr. President, I agree with every other proposition set forth in these five prohibitions or restrictions against the packers, with every one of them. Their business and their property are devoted to a public use and charged with a public interest, and they are engaged in interstate commerce.

But, Mr. President, the question is as to whether we have not now already an organization which, by reason of its experience, by reason of the very purpose for which it was created, is not the organization above all others to carry out the prohibitions and restrictions I have just read from the bill.

Mr. President, there is absolutely no need of any other organization than the Federal Trade Commission to accomplish the purposes of this act. Why should the Government go to the expense of paying $7,500 a year for a commission under the Department of Agriculture? In the first place, Mr. President, I am opposed on principle to that. The House bill, as I understand it, made the Secretary of Agriculture the full administrator of the provisions of this act. I am opposed to that. I do not think it a wise policy that the Secretary of Agriculture should be charged with the investigations which this bill contemplates and for which it provides, and I think we will show greater regard for the most important office of Secretary of Agriculture if the incumbent of that office is not required to engage in such investigation than if we provide that he shall. For this is a trade proposition and we are providing for the investigation of trade.

Now, I want to point out, in the few minutes I have, just what the Federal Trade Commission has been doing, which shows, or ought to show, its perfect familiarity with the business of the packers.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not want to take up the Senator's time if he wants to finish by 5 o'clock, but I suggest to the Senator that if he does not finish by 5 he can go on at 8 o'clock when we convene.

I wanted to say to the Senator, though, if he did not object to an interruption, that personally I have a great deal of sympathy for the position he takes. I started out on this proposition something over two years ago with the various considerations that were given it by the Committee on Agriculture and in conferences that were held outside of the committee and in the committee with that idea. I gave it up reluctantly, because I was in the minority, and I learned afterwards—although I never talked with any member of the Federal Trade Commission about it—that others had talked with the Federal Trade Commission and that the Federal Trade Commission thought that they should not be given the complete supervision under this law, because they were not a body intended by the law of their creation to do that kind of work. They were an investigating body only and not an administrative body.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that my substitute provides for exactly the same administrative processes that are provided for in the Federal Trade Commission act.

Mr. NORRIS. It places them in the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. STERLING. It places them in the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, when we took the next step in the evolution of this bill, we provided for a complete commission. I do not want to go over the ground now, but it was thought, in brief, that the business was big enough to take the time of a commission of three men, and it was provided they should devote all their time to it. It was thought that might bring about greater harmony between the producer and the middleman, the packer, and the consumer.

So it has drifted along. I am not antagonistic to the Senator's idea. I want to preserve the Federal Trade Commission completely. But the committee, in the Senate committee bills, has not done that, but they have done a great deal more than the House bill provides, because the House by its bill practically wipes the Federal Trade Commission off the map.

But I am going to offer an amendment, which I hope may prevail, which will retain in the Federal Trade Commission all of their powers, and take nothing away by this legislation.

Mr. STERLING. I want to call attention briefly to some things the Federal Trade Commission has done in relation to the packing industry. I hold in my hand their annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920. The series of the reports now available, with their subjects, are as follows:

Summary and Part I. Extent and growth of power of the five packers in meat and other industries.

Is not that related to the business they will have to do if the packing industry is put under their control and regulation?

Part II. Evidence of combination among packers.

The very thing we seek to prevent by the prohibitions of this bill.

Part III. Methods of the five packers in controlling the meat-packing industry.

Another matter properly included in the terms of the bill.

Part IV. The five larger packers in produce and grocery foods.

That also is covered by one of the prohibitions of the bill.

Part V. Profits of the packers.

Part VI. Cost of growing beef animals; cost of fattening cattle; cost of marketing live stock.

And that is provided for, and I provide for it in my substitute under that provision which relates to the Bureau of Markets of the Department of Agriculture, turning over the various facilities of the Bureau of Markets to the Federal Trade Commission for use in connection with their investigations of the packing industry.

This is what they have produced in the way of reports concerning the packing industry.

According to this same report, I find the following cases pending against the packers:

The Federal Trade Commission v. The United Rendering Co.

* * * * * * *

Federal Trade Commission v. Armour & Co. Charge: Stifling and suppressing competition in the manufacture and sale of dairy products by concealing its control of and affiliation with Beyer Bros. Co., a creamery company, while directing the efforts and business of said company.

* * * * * * * *

Complaint No. 451. Federal Trade Commission v. The Cudahy Packing Co. Charge: That respondent acquired 55 per cent of the shares of the capital stock of the Nagle Packing Co., a competitor; 95 per cent of the capital stock of the D. E. Wood Butter Co., a competitor; and that a subsidiary corporation, the Dow Cheese Co., purchased the business and good will of a competitor, and so forth.

* * * * * * *

Complaint No. 452. Federal Trade Commission v. Morris & Co. Charge: That the respondent acquired approximately 75 per cent of the capital stock of the Crescent City Stock Yard & Slaughter House Co., a competitor—

A thing prohibited under the terms of the Senate committee bill.

Complaint No. 455. Federal Trade Commission v. Armour & Co. again, and complaint No. 456, Federal Trade Commission v. Western Meat Co.

And so on.

What I have read, Mr. President, illustrates the knowledge that the Federal Trade Commission has of the packing industry through investigations made necessary by these six reports to which I have referred; and, second, the knowledge it will have through the investigation of the special cases against the packing companies.

Mr. NORRIS. The cases the Senator read are pending now?

Mr. STERLING. They were pending when this report was prepared, and I suppose they are probably pending yet.

Mr. President, the Federal Trade Commission is equipped, and splendidly equipped, for this very work. It has its great offices in New York and Chicago. Who will investigate? Not the individual Federal Trade Commissioners, of course. Neither will the commissioner provided for in this bill personally investigate, but accountants and experts will be summoned to examine the books and accounts and to make a thorough investigation of the business of the companies. I think it evident that such investigation can now be better made under the direction of the Federal Trade Commission than by or under the direction of any other person or body; and this means greater efficiency in the work and, of course, greater economy.

Mr. President, I may have an opportunity of saying a few words to-morrow in regard to this subject. I think it is now the time for the taking of the recess, under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before we take a recess I want to renew my request for unanimous consent heretofore made, that to-morrow between 11 and 1 o'clock the time be equally divided between those in favor of the bill and those opposed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the request is fair and ought to be agreed to, although I think the proponents of the bill have had a great deal more time up to the present than the opponents.

Mr. NORRIS. There has been ample opportunity for either side this afternoon to speak.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, as to a division of time, I think it is all right to divide the time equally, and I have no objection to that, but I would like to know who is going to divide the time?

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose under the unanimous-consent agreement the Chair would do that. I think that could be easily arranged.

Mr. STERLING. Having spoken in favor of a substitute, I would like to know where I come in on a division of time.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator comes in as opposed to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know who desires to speak on either side.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] desires to speak in opposition to the proposed legislation.

Mr. McCORMICK. Briefly.

Mr. NORRIS. And the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires to speak. There may be others, but that is as far as I know.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I think we ought to have an understanding as to who is for or against the bill. [Those who are for the bill are blown in the bottle for a sudden death measure.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator wants to be funny or sarcastic, he has started out in a way to accomplish his purpose. If he is really in earnest about the matter, he will probably submit his observations on the bill in different language. There can not anyone blow me in a bottle without my consent, nor blow a bottle in me.

RECESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the Senate, under the unanimous-consent agreement, will stand in recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The Senate thereupon (at 5 o'clock p. m.) took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I favor legislation for the regulation of the packing industry. I prefer the Senate bill. It has many commendable features not in the House bill. I would not support this measure if I thought it would work harm or injury to the packing industry. I can not see how fair and reasonable supervision, which this bill undertakes to bring about, can possibly work against the packing business. Indeed, it is my candid opinion that reasonable supervision by an impartial governmental agency will be helpful to the packers. It will establish confidence in the markets. It can not be denied that a great many farmers and stockmen believe that the live-stock market is to-day controlled by the five big packers. During the last year we have seen violent fluctuations in the market. The producer believes that these fluctuations were in great part the result of manipulation by the packers. If we can have a Federal agency to see that the big markets are honestly operated, the producer will feel that his interests are being protected.

I believe this legislation will also be beneficial to the consumer. Representatives of various associations of consumers, who believe the packers have a monopoly, came before the committee and asked for this legislation. Never was there greater need of consideration of the interests of the consumer. I do not say the packers are to blame for the high prices of meats, but both producer and consumer will have more confidence in the market if the Government will see that business is conducted on the square.

The spread between the producer and consumer is entirely too great. I am reminded of this to-day upon receipt of a resolution recently adopted by the Kalorama Citizens' Association, of Washington, which I desire to read:

Whereas bread, a staple and essential commodity of life, is selling in the District of Columbia at what appears to be an unreasonably high price, especially in view of the fact that wheat, the raw material, has fallen to a point where its production is barely, if at all, remunerative to the farmer; and

Whereas in many other cities the price of bread has been reduced in a degree more or less commensurate with the general decline in the price of commodities, but so far in the District of Columbia war prices for bread have apparently been maintained: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Kalorama Citizen's Association in regular meeting assembled, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to take such steps as may be within the scope of their powers and legal responsibilities to bring about a reduction in the price of bread, either by a direct lowering of the price or by increasing the size of the loaf.

A. COULTER WELLS,
President.

MAY 17, 1921.

Mr. President, I am not surprised that the citizens of Washington are complaining of the high prices they are still compelled to pay for bread, meat, and other necessities of life. The prices charged the consumer in Washington and many other cities are wholly out of line with the prices the producer is receiving for the products of his farm. The Government's latest statistics show that in the city of Washington there has been a reduction of but 14 per cent in the price of bread since the peak of war prices was reached. In the past year the price of wheat has declined more than one-third—34.8 per cent, to be exact—at the principal grain market of the country—Chicago. At Kansas City, which is still closer to the great wheat belt, the decline has been even greater, 37.7 per cent lower than a year ago. Out on the farms the price of wheat is back almost to prewar levels, but the 5-cent loaf of prewar times is only a memory.

This decline in the price of wheat has been reflected somewhat in the price of wheat flour, but in the retail price of bread there is scarcely the slightest glimmer of such reflection. Take the following table, showing per cent of decline in the price of wheat, wheat flour, and bread for the year ending May 15 last, which affords the latest figures available:

City.	Price flour on May 15.		Price bread on May 15.		Per cent decline in price of—
	1920	1921	1920	1921	Flour.	Bread.
New York	$0.093	$0.056	$0.118	$0.107	+39	9
Boston	.096	.....	.113	.089	.....	21
Philadelphia	.089	.056	.106	.084	37	20
Baltimore	.088	.....	.113	.092	.....	+18
Chicago	.087	.052	.123	.099	40	19
Detroit	.084	.054	.115	.094	+35	18
St. Louis	.081	.....	.124	.106	.....	+14
Kansas City	.078	.055	.124	.107	29	13
Memphis	.085	.....	.125	.101	.....	+19
Washington	.089	.062	.122	.105	30	14

The foregoing table gives the Government's price figures, as obtained from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, for flour and bread at retail in 10 of the principal cities of the country in two contrasting columns. Percentages of decline in price of these two food products for the year May 15, 1920, to May 15, 1921, are shown. The figures showing the decline in the price of wheat are taken from the record of the cash market in Chicago and Kansas City, the two largest wheat markets of the country.

With a maximum cash decline in the price of wheat of nearly 38 per cent for the year and a maximum decline in the price of flour of 40 per cent, the size of the crust the bakers of the 10 cities hand the public varies remarkably from a measly decrease of but 9 per cent in New York to a maximum reduction of only 21 per cent in Boston. But I note that in New York, where the decline in the price of bread is least, the reduction in price of flour is greatest, with but a single exception, in the whole list.

This is not the only paradox in this remarkable table. Boston, the city farthest removed from the wheat belt and paying high transportation charges on wheat or flour for nearly 1,500 miles of railway, is the city showing the largest decline in the price of bread. Even out in the wheat country itself the bakers are still exacting high prices. In Kansas City the price of wheat has declined 37.7 per cent and of flour 29 per cent, but according to the latest Government reports the price of bread has declined only 13 per cent.

Mr. President, if the profiteering was confined to bread alone it would be bad enough, but we know that it extends to dealings in nearly all kinds of foodstuffs in lesser or greater degree. Prices of live stock have declined to a point of actual monetary loss in its production, and yet the prices of beef and pork in Washington and many other cities are almost as high as they were during the peak of war prices. The leading hotels of this city charge $1.60 for two lamb chops. That is more than the farmer received on the market for the whole animal. Figures compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, which is our best authority, show that wholesale food prices dropped 47 per cent in 12 months, while retail prices declined only 28 per cent, and the prices paid to farmers dropped 53 per cent during the same period.

Mr. President, it is obvious that it is no fault of the producer that the consumer is still charged extortionate prices for most of what he buys. All farmers have suffered losses during the past year—thousands have gone bankrupt. I cite a single case that might be duplicated a thousand times. The next time anyone pays a Washington dinner check, with his steak costing him anywhere from $2 to $4 a pound, let him reflect on the case of this Nebraska farmer. Last October Charles Hunter, an Inavale cattleman, shipped to his feed lots 102 head of beef steers, which cost him $10,810 delivered in his lots, or 10½ cents a pound. He sold them seven months later on the Chicago market for $10,684, or 7½ cents a pound—a loss of 3 cents a pound—besides having to pay an $892 freight bill for shipping the cattle to Chicago.

In other words, Mr. Hunter bought 102,000 pounds of live steers for $10,810 and sold 142,800 pounds of beef on the hoof—just 40,800 more pounds of beef than he bought—for $10,684, taking a loss of $126, a loss of seven months' work, a loss of all the alfalfa and corn he fed these steers, and a loss of seven months' interest on $10,810—a rather heavy penalty for having contributed more than 40,000 pounds of additional beef to feed his fellow countrymen.

Naturally, when stockmen lose so much money in raising, feeding, and shipping meat animals, there are going to be fewer such animals produced, and eventually meat is likely to become scarcer and dearer for strictly legitimate reasons. This time next year steaks in Washington may be costing $8 a pound instead of $4, and quite possibly the producer will not be receiving a satisfactory return even then for his labor and his feed and for interest on his investment.

A farmer feeds a hog 7½ bushels of corn to make 100 pounds of pork, but he pays 1½ bushels of corn for 1 pound of bacon.

For 5 pounds of wool, enough to make a "genuine" all-wool suit, a farmer is now glad to get $1, but to buy such a suit of clothes costs him 500 pounds of wool.

Last year a good pair of shoes could be bought with one cowhide. To-day it takes five cowhides to get the shoes.

To buy his wife a pair of $10 shoes a Kansas farmer recently sold 25 bushels of corn for $7.50 and a big cowhide for $2. Then he had to pay 50 cents to boot to close the transaction.

If on a parity with the present price of corn, Mr. Rockefeller would sell gasoline for 8 cents a gallon instead of 24, the Coal Trust would sell a ton of coal for $3 instead of $13, the clothier a $60 suit of clothes for $15, the shoe dealer a $10 shoe for $3, the hatter a $5 hat for $2, and the Washington market man would sell bacon at prewar prices instead of at postwar prices, and American agriculture would not to-day be in need of the credit pulmotor. Corn should be and is worth more if these things are worth what is asked for them.

Last year when corn was $1.50 a bushel a farmer could get 5 gallons of gasoline for a single bushel. To-day, at the farm price, that bushel of corn only buys a little less than 2 gallons of gasoline.

Last year 6 bushels of corn would buy a ton of soft coal. To-day that ton of coal costs 35 bushels of corn.

Last year 40 bushels of corn would purchase a $60 suit of clothes. To-day it would take 125 bushels of corn to buy that suit. Yet had clothing been reduced in price proportionately with corn, $60 suits of clothes would not take 36 bushels.

Last year a bushel of corn would buy 3 pounds of coffee. To-day it will buy only a little more than 1 pound.

Last year 2½ bushels of corn would purchase a 48-pound sack of flour. To-day it takes 5½ bushels.

And so it goes, up and down the line. Whether prices rise or fall, the farmer gets the worst of it.

What is it going to profit us to keep knocking the farmer down? How are we going to be clothed and fed when we finally have knocked him out completely?

The biggest problem, Mr. President, that confronts the Congress is to devise a plan by which through fair marketing conditions, an extinction of profiteering, a lowering of freight rates, and a rehabilitation of our foreign and domestic markets the producer may receive a fair return without the consumer being brutally victimized by the conscienceless purveyor of bread, meat, and other food products. We should see, also, that in future adequate credit is provided for farmers through long-time and short-time loans, adapted fairly and practically to the peculiar conditions of the farming business, to afford farmers the same credit accommodations now afforded other lines of business and that they may not be compelled to dump their products on a glutted or demoralized market.

Our people, I think, are beginning to see that we must put our former $80,000,000,000 farming industry on an equal footing with the organized world of business and industry or be prepared to suffer more and more from evil times when we should be enjoying good times. So on the whole the situation now seems very hopeful and encouraging.

All history emphasizes that the downfall of every bygone civilization and nation was preceded by the breakdown of its agriculture. Eventually we pay and pay heavily for every shortsighted or wrong policy toward agriculture that we adopt, as well as for every farsighted agricultual policy we fail to adopt. This inevitably reacts on general business and national welfare.

To attain a newer and stronger national stability resting on a general and genuine prosperity for all the people, the farmers of the land must have a square deal. That is all I ask. I ask it for them in behalf of all.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator from Kansas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CAPPER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is speaking of farm organizations, and I desire to ask him, Is it not true that, as between the Senate bill and the House bill, those organizations prefer the Senate bill?

Mr. CAPPER. I think there is no doubt that that is true. They have so indicated to me.

Mr. NORRIS. The statement was made here the other day by some Senator in the debate that the farm organizations were in favor of the House bill.

Mr. CAPPER. My information is—and I have talked with the representatives of a number of those organizations here in Washington—that they prefer the Senate bill. Some of them have gone on record to that effect. I have yet to learn of a farm organization that is indicating a preference for the House bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that statement was made in reference to one of the farm organizations—perhaps the largest of all—the American Farm Bureau, of which Mr. Howard is the president. Has the Senator from Kansas talked with Mr. Howard, the president of that organization?

Mr. CAPPER. No; I have not.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator I have talked with Mr. Howard, and he has told me that he prefers the Senate bill to the House bill. Before he came to Washington, before I saw him, I had a telegram from him in which he stated the same thing.

Mr. CAPPER. There is no doubt that Mr. Howard speaks for a very large portion of the agricultural community.

Mr. NORRIS. I confess that in making up my mind on the matter I was not moved by what any organization thought; I formed my opinion from my own investigation; but I was rather startled at that statement.

I want to ask the Senator from Kansas if he has not found, in his conversations with the representatives of the farm organizations, that one of the main reasons why those organizations favor the Senate bill as against the House bill is because the House bill in effect entirely takes away from the Federal Trade Commission all jurisdiction in connection with investigations in regard to packing products, and confers authority upon the Secretary of Agriculture to make such investigations, although it goes about as far as the Senate bill does in that respect?

Mr. CAPPER. I have heard that objection raised by a number of leading representatives of farm organizations.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator ever come in contact, either in conversation or through the medium of correspondence, with any representative of any farm organization who was not strenuously objecting to any legislation in this bill or in any other measure which would have the effect of taking away the jurisdiction and the power of the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. CAPPER. My observation is that generally the farm organizations have confidence in the Federal Trade Commission, and they would not want to see it crippled in any respect.

Mr. NORRIS. Now I should like to ask the Senator as to his investigations concerning the attitude of the consumers' associations. For instance, as to the very large consumers' organization represented by Florence Kelly, a woman who is known for her ability and as a representative of the women of this country all over the country—has the Senator had any conversation with her or has he heard from her in any way as between these two bills—the Senate bill and the House bill?

Mr. CAPPER. No; not as between the two bills; but I remember that she appeared before our committee last year, speaking for the National Consumers' League, I think the name of the organization is.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is the name of the league.

Mr. CAPPER. At that time Miss Kelly very emphatically indorsed the bill which is now before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senate bill?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes; the Senate bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator now, so far as the consumers are concerned, particularly with reference to the National Consumers' League, whether they have not at all times and under all circumstances objected to legislation that would cripple the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. CAPPER. I think they have. I have heard numerous objections from representatives of that organization to such proposed legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator knows that the House bill practically does absolutely take away the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission. Has it ever occurred to the Senator that the taking away of the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission by the House bill will go even further than it appears to go on its face in this respect? Suppose they were investigating a charge of unfair competition which was made by one clothing manufacturing concern against another as to clothing made of wool or of which wool was a component part, would it not follow, if the House bill were enacted into law, that the Federal Trade Commission would be deprived even of jurisdiction to investigate a charge of unfair competition between two manufacturers of woolen clothing?

Mr. CAPPER. I should think that there would be very great danger that that would follow.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska to point out the provisions of the House bill that will do anything of that kind.

Mr. NORRIS. With the permission of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], I will do so. On page 28 paragraph (b) of section 406 of the bill reads as follows:

(b) On and after the enactment of this act, and so long as it remains in effect, the Federal Trade Commission shall have no power or jurisdiction so far as relating to any matter which by this act is made subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary, except in cases in which, before the enactment of this act, complaint has been served under section 5 of the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, or under section 11 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914.

That is the provision which, in my judgment, does just what I have suggested to the Senator from Kansas, and in which he concurs with me, as I understand him.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator from Nebraska think that provision is broad enough to affect an investigation that might be undertaken with regard to clothing which is made of wool?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I do. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that if the Secretary of Agriculture would enter upon that kind of an investigation I would not have serious objection. However, I am not complaining about the Secretary of Agriculture not doing his duty, particularly the present Secretary of Agriculture, for I have just as much faith in him as has the Senator, but wool is a by-product of the packing industry. If we give to any governmental authority the right to investigate questions affecting wool and at the same time take away the right of the Federal Trade Commission to investigate any by-product of the meat-packing industry, we will naturally—I do not see how we can escape the conclusion—take away from the Federal Trade Commission the right to investigate a charge of unfair competition between clothing manufacturers, between shoe manufacturers, fertilizer manufacturers, or any other manufacturers engaged in kindred lines of business.

It is true that under the House bill some authority would be given to the Secretary of Agriculture, but, as a matter of fact, the Secretary of Agriculture would never avail himself of it. He is not expected to do so under this bill. He would investigate as far as the meat products are concerned, and he would have authority to go further. On the other hand, if the Federal Trade Commission's authority were kept intact and the same authority were given to the Secretary of Agriculture, or, under the Senate bill, to the commissioner, it is true then that there would be an overlapping of authority. I admit that as between an overlapping and a vacuum, in which there could be no investigation, I would rather have the overlapping; but in practical application of the law there would be no overlapping. If we pass the Senate bill, for instance, or the House bill in that respect, the Secretary of Agriculture or the commissioner, as the case might be, would never go into the question of unfair competition as between clothing manufacturers or shoe manufacturers or any manufacturers of that kind, although technically he might have the authority so to do. On the other hand, if we give to the Secretary the authority to go into such questions, he would not go into them; so that if we take the jurisdiction away from the Federal Trade Commission we are likely to cripple that commission in connection with hundreds of subjects matter. To some extent that criticism applies to the Senate bill just as well as to the House bill. I admit that. The only difference in that respect between the two bills as they stand now is this:

The Senate bill provides an exception; the House bill does not, but takes the jurisdiction absolutely away. The Senate bill takes it away, with the exception that they will still retain their authority to investigate anything, including the packers, if they are directed to do so by the President, the Secretary of Agriculture, by the Senate or by the House of Representatives. As I look at the two bills on that point, that is the difference between them. Without going any further, it seems to me if we want to preserve the authority of the Federal Trade Commission, as between these two propositions, we ought to support the Senate bill, because it retains more power and more jurisdiction; in fact, it retains all of the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, the only difference being that it will require action on the part of the President or the Secretary of Agriculture or the House of Representatives or the Senate to put it into operation. A Senate resolution would start it; a House resolution would start it. In the Senate bill, as I have pointed out once before, there is the additional provision that the commissioner provided for can be removed by concurrent action of the House of Representatives and the Senate without the President, and the President can remove him, on the other hand; so that it has that safeguard about it. As to that proposition if the Senate bill were enacted, considering that one section alone; if we had a commissioner, for instance, who was not inclined to do his duty—and it was said here the other day, and I have a great deal of sympathy for the suggestion, that eventually at some time, in some way, the packers will get control even of the commissioner—a safeguard is provided. If the Senate bill is enacted as it stands in respect to that proposition, in order to relieve themselves of any investigation the packers would have to get control of the commissioner and of a majority of the Federal Trade Commission. It would take them several years to do that, unless the commissioner and the members of the Federal Trade Commission should die or resign. So on the two propositions referred to it seems to me that the House provision is a dangerous one.

Personally, without amendment, I can not see but there is danger of its doing more harm than good. The Secretary of Agriculture is liable to be changed overnight. I charge no President with being in collusion to bring about such a situation, but the President appoints the Secretary of Agriculture without reference to this particular question; he appoints him for political reasons; there are thousands of other matters that enter into consideration; and he will appoint a man probably without knowing how he stands on this question. I am making no charge against the present President or any President who may follow him. The Secretary of Agriculture will receive his appointment without reference to the packers, but, as has been said by some of those who are opposing this bill, the power and the influence of the packers—sinister, secret, spread all over the country—is such that, without the President himself knowing it, he might appoint some one friendly to the packers.

To-morrow, when we reach the consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule, I am going to offer an amendment to the Senate bill in which I shall move to strike out section 5. Section 5 attempts to confer upon the commissioner, in substance, the power that is now conferred by law upon the Federal Trade Commission, and then takes away from the Federal Trade Commission all its authority with the exceptions that I have noted about the House of Representatives, the Secretary of Agriculture, the President, and the Senate. I am going to move to strike that out, and to insert in lieu of it language that in substance says that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to limit or take away any of the power of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. President, I did not expect to speak to-night.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have been interested in the discussion of the most distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I recall a remark he made a moment ago to the effect that he was going to ask that section 5 be stricken from the bill. If I understand the chairman, he wants to coordinate the jurisdiction and duties of the Secretary of Agriculture with those of the Federal Trade Commission, giving them like jurisdiction over all matters arising out of the packer bill. I will ask the chairman of the committee if that is true?

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that in my judgment the striking out of section 5 does not take away from the commissioner any authority whatever. He is given all that authority in other sections of the bill. He ought to have it, and I would not strike it out if I felt that he did not already have it in the bill; but that is the section that deprives the Federal Trade Commission of its jurisdiction.

Mr. McNARY. Then if this bill is formed around the idea which I think the committee had, that it should be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture, I will ask the chairman if he wants to give another organization coordinate authority?

Mr. NORRIS. I explained a while ago that there would be a lapping of authority. As I look at it, between the House and the Senate bills we must have either a lapping of authority or a lapse without any authority. For practical purposes there would be none. In other words, I think it would be a great insurance provision to have this commissioner know that if he did not do his duty there was somebody else who would. The Federal Trade Commission, in the very investigation that it did make of the packers, did not do it on its own initiative. It did it because it was instructed to do it by President Wilson.

Now, I anticipate that the Federal Trade Commission would not do it again when there was some one else doing it. They would not both be working at the same thing, excepting that if the Federal Trade Commission had before it a charge of unfair competition made by one shoe dealer against another, and it was investigating that charge, and it traced the leather to the packers, it would have to stop just that minute; it could not go any further under the House provision, and the same thing would be true of the Senate provision, unless the President or the Secretary of Agriculture or one branch of Congress acted. Now, I do not want to get the country into that kind of a condition, and that is what I am trying to relieve.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have as high regard for the efficiency of the Federal Trade Commission as has the distinguished chairman of the Agricultural Committee; but if the Secretary of Agriculture is given plenary power to discover unfair practices and unjust discrimination under this bill, whether it be the Senate bill or the House bill, why should we have two coordinate organizations working together and always coming in collision, which is a thing that the Republican Party and we as Members of the Senate have always attempted to say was vicious?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know that I can make my position any plainer to the Senator. I want to correct him, however, when he says that they are always coming in collision. Suppose we pass either the Senate bill or the House bill just as they stand, either one of them, and there is a complaint made before the Federal Trade Commission by a great manufacturer of woolen clothing against a hundred other woolen clothing manufacturing associations charging unfair competition and they commence an investigation.

That is one of the duties of the Federal Trade Commission. Nobody will dispute that. They run along until perhaps it becomes necessary to trace the wool or the cotton or the linen, or anything else that is in the fabric, clear through to its source to investigate it properly; but they trace this wool to the packers, and the minute they get it there they have to stop. They can not go any further. They have not any authority to go any further. If they undertake even to investigate it and come in contact with the packers or anybody engaged in the packing business that owned the wool and got it from the back of the sheep that were slaughtered in their slaughtering house, they can be kicked out of the office. There is no court that can give them authority to get any evidence to go one step further in the investigation.

It is true, probably, that if we do pass the House bill the Secretary of Agriculture or the commissioner would have authority to pick up the matter at that point and go on with the investigation; but, on the other hand, the Secretary of Agriculture or the commissioner, whichever bill we have, would not have authority to investigate anything else that is in that clothing; and there is where I think you would come to a place where you would have each investigating authority running partway through with an investigation and being compelled to stop. I think that is a worse position to put us in than to give authority to both the Secretary and the Federal Trade Commission, when they will not abuse it as against each other, unless there should come a case like the one I have put, where the Federal Trade Commission were investigating unfair competition between manufacturers of woolen clothing. They would, of course, run it to the bottom. If we struck out section 5 and inserted what I want to insert, they would have authority to go to the bottom.

It is true, I will admit to the Senator, that they likewise would have authority to investigate the general packing situation. I concede that there would be an overlapping. In practice there would be no danger of an overlapping, except in cases where we would want them to go through with their investigation. In any investigation the Federal Trade Commission might make, if the House bill were the law, they could not go any further unless we passed a law through the House and through the Senate and had it signed by the President giving them authority to go further. If the Senate bill as it now stands were enacted into law, and they got into that kind of a dilemma, they would have to stop unless they were directed to go further by the President or the Secretary of Agriculture or the Senate or the House, which, of course, in my judgment, is a good deal better than the other case, a good deal easier. If my amendment should prevail they would have the authority without the action of anybody.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand the state of mind of the chairman of the committee; but in this particular instance—and in no other department of Government, as far as I know—there is an overlapping of authority. Why should the Federal Trade Commission have jurisdiction where jurisdiction is given to the Secretary of Agriculture? Why not say that the Secretary of the Navy should have jurisdiction over certain matters in respect of the Army? Why not say that the Secretary of the Interior, when he considers the forest situation, should have coordinate authority with the Secretary of Agriculture? Why duplicate overlapping authority in matters of purely administrative powers in our Government?

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I may be entirely wrong, but I think I have made my position plain as to why I think that. Does not the Senator understand it? Let me ask the Senator, now, does he want to put the Federal Trade Commission in such a position that if they were going to investigate a charge of unfair competition in clothing they could not do it?

Mr. McNARY. I will say to the chairman of the committee, whom I esteem most highly, that on the same principle they should be empowered to conduct an investigation into the cost of a battleship. I believe that if the Secretary of Agriculture is given power, which this bill gives him, to investigate unfair practices and unjust discrimination, he should have plenary power and final jurisdiction; and I do not believe it is within the purview of the Federal Trade Commission to interfere with any orders or regulations. I believe that the Secretary of Agriculture is efficient, and capable of administering this law or such a law as might be enacted. If the chairman's view were taken into consideration, in all matters of public administration we would have a multitude of overlapping authorities.

I think the purpose of a legislator should be to cut out as many bureaus as possible, to invest power where power should be invested, to hold men responsible for their business, to make men understand that the power that is given them should be treated honestly, and their records should be scrutinized most carefully. Where, I think, a mistake has been made in all the administrations of the country is in giving men power and then dividing that power with other men, which I do not want to do in this law.

I want to say to my distinguished colleague that I should like to have the Secretary of Agriculture held responsible for every infraction of the law, for every disobedience of order or regulation, and not have him say: "The Federal Trade Commission has equal power with me, and they refuse to act, and if I have made a mistake it was an error of heart and not of judgment."

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator a question. The Senator is in favor of the House bill. Suppose we pass it just as it stands, and suppose a complaint of unfair competition is made before the Federal Trade Commission by one wholesale shoe man against another. Can the Federal Trade Commission investigate it; and if they can not investigate it, will the Senator tell me who can? This bill does not give the Secretary of Agriculture authority to investigate it.

Mr. McNARY. I think, in the case the Senator has mentioned, the Federal Trade Commission should investigate it.

Mr. NORRIS. But the bill that the Senator favors takes away their jurisdiction. That is a by-product of the packers.

Mr. McNARY. I favor that bill because I want legislation. I believe that bill will give us some legislation almost as salutary as the bill we call the Senate committee bill, known as the Norris bill. That may be an error of judgment. But that is aside from the general proposition, which is the overlapping of authority.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Senate. After having spoken for about one hour and three-quarters, he said:

Mr. President, that brings me to a discussion of the House bill, as I have arranged my data; but the suggestion has been made by some Senators, in view of their idea of its importance, that that discussion be reserved for to-morrow, and I am perfectly willing to yield to that suggestion. Of course, if I should be denied recognition to the floor before 1 o'clock, I presume I would have the opportunity under the 5-minute rule to speak from time to time, and a good many times, and perhaps, so as to be able to lay before the Senate about all I want to say on the subject.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think that the chairman of the committee will agree that it can be arranged so that the Senator from Wisconsin will have some time to-morrow.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I can, at least, secure some time under the 5-minute rule without being under obligations to anybody.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I think it can be arranged so that he will have an opportunity to speak to-morrow morning. I do not know who would dare to object, the time having been equally divided between those who are opposed to the bill and those who favor it. If that is done, the Senator ought to be able to secure a half hour, I should think, the hour allotted to the friends of the bill being divided between the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Iowa, a half hour to each.

UMI

Mr. KENYON. I wish I might not be taken into consideration at all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not want to crowd on to the time of the committee.

Mr. KENYON. If I have 10 or 15 minutes, it is all that I care about. I will take my chances.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The members of the committee know a good deal more about this legislation than I do.

Mr. KENYON. I do not know whether they do or not, but I will take my chances about time. I shall be glad if the Senator can get down to the discussion of the point he has made in the morning. The Senators ought to hear it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I could have taken it up earlier in the evening, but, at the suggestion of some Senators, I filled in the time because they thought it ought to be reserved for a better attendance of the Senate. That is the fact about it.

Mr. KENYON. Let us try that, and quit now.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want Senators to understand that I knew what I was doing. I do not care, however; I am perfectly willing to go on.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, the Senator can go on now if he wants to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am satisfied that to-morrow I can say what I desire just as well.

RECESS.

Mr. NORRIS. With that understanding, then, if the Senator will yield, I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, June 16, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 15, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, Thou are not the King of Terrors, but the Friend and the Savior of men. There is one God who is the Father of us all and who is above all, over all and in all, and blessed forever more. Come Thou and stoop to our needs. Minister to our weakness. Light the lamp of hope. Lead the way. Extend our horizon until we behold that city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. In the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, June 13, 1921, was read and approved.

COMMISSION ON AGRICULTURAL INQUIRY.

The SPEAKER appointed as members on the part of the House of the Commission on Agricultural Inquiry under Senate concurrent resolution 4 Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. MILLS, Mr. FUNK, Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, and Mr. TEN EYCK.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to address the House for half a minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. APPLEBY. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I was in my home district inspecting, with Government officials, the condition of the Barnegat Lighthouse. Otherwise I should have been pleased to be here and vote for the Porter peace resolution.

AVIATION AND ORDNANCE EXPERIMENTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the Clerk to read for the information of the House a communication which he thinks will be of interest to Members.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 11, 1921.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: A series of aviation and ordnance experiments will be conducted by aircraft and vessels of the Atlantic Fleet and units of the Army Air Service, off the Capes of the Chesapeake during the months of June and July, 1921.

The U. S. S. Henderson will be used to carry the guests of the Navy Department to witness these experiments, and according to present plans, that vessel will leave Washington, D. C., or its immediate vicinity, in accordance with the following itinerary:

June 20. Leave Washington a. m. to witness destruction of ex-German submarines U-117 by aircraft, and the destruction of U-140, U-111, UB-88 by gunfire from destroyers. Return to Washington upon completion, arriving there p. m. June 23.

June 26. Embark on Henderson in evening; sail at daylight June 27 to witness the search by aircraft for the old battleship ex-Iowa, under radio control, and bombing of that vessel with dummy bombs. Return to Washington upon completion, arriving p. m. June 29.

July 12. Leave Washington a. m. to witness destructon of ex-German destroyer by aircraft and the destruction of two other ex-German destroyers by gunfire. Return to Washington upon completion, arriving p. m. July 16.

July 19. Leave Washington a. m. to witness the destruction of the ex-German battleship Ostfriesland by bombing from aircraft and gunfire from battleships. Return to Washington upon completion, arriving p. m. July 22.

It should be noted that this itinerary may necessarily be changed on account of weather conditions, and that the trips may be prolonged beyond the periods indicated.

The Navy Department takes great pleasure in hereby extending to the membership of the House of Representatives a cordial invitation to witness these experiments, having in mind that some of the Members, particularly those of the Committees on Naval Affairs, Military Affairs, and Appropriations, might be interested in seeing the exercises. Unfortunately, the suitable accommodations on the Henderson are quite limited, so that I am compelled to ask that the number of Representatives who may accept this invitation be limited to 15 for each trip of the Henderson. In order that final arrangements may be made, and the designated Representatives be advised of all details concerning transportation it is requested that the Navy Department be informed as soon as possible of the names of those who desire to attend the exercises on each of the four trips of the Henderson.

Sincerely, yours,

EDWIN DENBY.

Hon. FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 16) repealing the joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany and the joint resolution of December 7, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, and for other purposes, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. KNOX, and Mr. HITCHCOCK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 4091) granting the consent of Congress to the Borderland Coal Corporation to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River in Mingo County, W. Va.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 32. Joint resolution to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1920 and up to and including June 30, 1921, and fixing the period during which such work shall be performed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6300. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 32. Joint resolution to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1920 and up to and including June 30, 1921, and fixing the period during which such work shall be performed; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 5223. An act to exempt from cancellation certain desert-land entries in Riverside County, Calif.;

H. R. 2466. An act to constitute Fort Worth, in the State of Texas, a port of entry and to extend to said port the privileges of section 7 of an act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes";

H. R. 3018. An act granting the consent of Congress to H. H. Haynes to construct a dike across Mud Slough on Isthmus Inlet, in section 23, township 26 south, range 13 west, of Willamette meridian in Oregon;

H. R. 2428. An act granting certain lands to Converse County, Wyo., for a public park; and

H. R. 6300. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll of committees.

AMERICAN SEAMEN.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts (when the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6754) to amend sections 2, 13, and 14 of an act entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea," approved March 4, 1915.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 2, 13, and 14 of an act entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea," approved March 4, 1915, be, and the same are hereby, amended as follows:

That section 2 of said act be amended by adding the following: "Provided, That on the Great Lakes and their connecting waters, where such a vessel is operated less than 6 hours out of 24 hours, the provisions of this section shall not apply; and where such a vessel is operated not less than 6 hours nor more than 12 hours, including the time in port when the respective members of the crew are required to be on duty, out of 24 hours, the sailors, oilers, water tenders, and firemen shall be divided into at least two watches, which shall be kept on duty successively for the performance of ordinary work incident to the sailing and management of the vessel: Provided further, That where such a vessel is operated more than 12 and less than 16 hours out of 24 hours, the sailors, oilers, and water tenders shall be divided into at least two watches and the firemen into at least three watches, which shall be kept on duty successively for the performance of ordinary work incident to the sailing and management of such vessel."

That section 13 of said act be amended by adding the following: "Provided further, That on the Great Lakes and their connecting waters 50 per cent of the deck crew of such vessel, exclusive of licensed officers and apprentices, shall be of a rating not less than able seamen."

That the paragraph under section 14 of said act with reference to lifeboat and raft requirements for passenger vessels operating on the Great Lakes be amended to read as follows:

"At no moment of its voyage may any passenger steam vessel of the United States on the Great Lakes, on routes more than 3 miles offshore, except over waters whose depth is not sufficient to submerge all the decks of the vessel, have on board a total number of persons, including passengers and crew, greater than that for whom accommodation is provided in the lifeboats and pontoon life rafts on board. The accommodation provided in lifeboats shall in every case be sufficient to accommodate at least 75 per cent of the persons on board. The number and types of such lifeboats and life rafts shall be determined by regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That during the interval from May 1 to October 15, inclusive, any such steamer shall be required to carry accommodation for not less than 50 per cent of persons on board in lifeboats and pontoon life rafts, of which accommodation not less than two-fifths shall be in lifeboats and three-fifths may be in collapsible boats or rafts, under regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, approved by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided further, That all passenger steam vessels of the United States the keels of which are laid after the 1st of July, 1915, for service on ocean routes, or for service from October 15 to May 1 on the Great Lakes on routes more than 3 miles offshore, shall be built to carry, and shall carry, enough lifeboats and life rafts to accommodate all persons on board, including passengers and crew: And provided further, That not more than 25 per cent of such equipment may be in pontoon life rafts or collapsible lifeboats."

That the paragraph of section 14 of said act under the caption "Manning the boats" be amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That on the Great Lakes and their connecting waters certificated lifeboat men may be used in lieu of able seamen in the manning of life rafts."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, lines 8, 9, and 10, strike out the words "including the time in port when the respective members of the crew are required to be on duty."

Page 2, line 21, after the word "vessel," insert the following: "And provided further, That the oilers and water tenders shall not be required to be on duty more than 12 hours out of 24 hours, and the firemen shall not be required to be on duty in the fireroom more than 8 hours out of 24 hours."

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire how much time the minority would like to have on the bill? Will an hour on a side be satisfactory?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I suppose that will be sufficient.

Mr. NOLAN. I should like to address a parliamentary inquiry to the gentleman having this bill in charge. If no minority member of the committee is opposing this bill, I should like to know how those who are opposed to it are going to get time, and what arrangements we may have in that regard?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. There is no opposition in the committee. It is a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California address his inquiry to the Chair as a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes; I believe it is a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Of course, this is being done by unanimous consent. The only way is for the gentleman from Massachusetts to agree that a part of the time shall be given to those opposed to the bill.

Mr. NOLAN. Does the Calendar Wednesday rule preclude those in opposition to a bill from having time?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The only question is that if the gentleman should move the previous question and the House should support him in it, the minority would not have time; but that has never been done, and the Chair thinks that to-day probably, as always, those opposed to the bill will be given as much time as those in favor of it.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that two weeks ago the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WINSLOW] asked the Chair if the rule accorded to those in opposition would have one hour's time, and the Speaker replied in the negative. I want to call the attention of the Chair to this particular precedent at this time. On Calendar Wednesday we are supposed to take two hours, and usually have, for the consideration of a bill.

The SPEAKER. That relates to bills on the Union Calendar.

Mr. GARNER. Does the Chair hold that such time as the chairman of the committee may desire can be utilized with reference to bills not on the Union Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; not such time as the chairman of the committee may desire, but such time as the House may determine. It depends on the vote of the House.

Mr. GARNER. And the Speaker would recognize members of the committee after the hour expired if the previous question was not ordered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair certainly would recognize some one opposed to the bill.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, while I expect to vote for the bill, there is opposition to it on the floor of the House. I think all of my colleagues on the committee expect to vote for the bill, but there is some serious opposition, and I think it would be equitable and just to agree to, say, three hours' time, giving one hour to those opposed to the bill and one hour each to the minority and majority members of the committee.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I think two hours ought to be sufficient for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. NOLAN. If those who are opposed to the bill are given half an hour, I think that will be sufficient.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. We are perfectly willing to give them 15 minutes, if the majority will do the same.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will give them 15 minutes of our time, but the gentleman from Michigan will object unless we have two hours and a half of debate.

Mr. GARNER. Two hours ought to be sufficient.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I suggest an hour on a side, with an agreement that the majority yield 15 minutes and minority yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] and those opposed to the bill.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Michigan will object to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. You can not get unanimous consent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. You can make an effort to get it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. There is objection to it already.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to submit a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I submit a unanimous request for two hours and a half, and allow half an hour to those opposed to the bill.

Mr. JAMES of Michigan. I object.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Then we will go along in the usual way. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCOTT] one hour, who will take charge of the bill.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and ninety-nine Members have answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries have reported a bill which I introduced, and that bill is now before you. It amends what is known as the La Follette Seamen's Act. That act was passed in 1915. It was a uniform law, and by that I mean that it had a uniform application to navigation on the ocean and on the Great Lakes. The usual run on the ocean is eight days, and the usual run on the Great Lakes is eight hours. Yet the La Follette Seamen's Act provided the same complement of employees on a ship operating eight days that it required on a ship operating eight hours or less. In other words, on the Great Lakes and on the ocean, regardless of the length of the run, two crews of sailors are required and three crews of oilers, water tenders, and firemen.

I may say to the House that this bill, H. R. 6754, now before us only applies to the Great Lakes. In view of the apparent difference in operation between the Great Lakes and the ocean, we felt that the Great Lakes should be divorced from the operation of the law.

In section 2 of the bill we provide that where ships on the Great Lakes are operated less than 6 hours out of the 24 it shall not come under the provisions of this section requiring a definite complement of crew, but that that shall be left to the Department of Commerce, as was the case in all instances prior to the adoption of the seamen's act. In other words, gentlemen, it is impossible to draft a law providing for an honest and equitable application to all conditions, and when you attempt to do that you do a grave injustice where you least expect such injustice to apply.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman please tell us how much the La Follette Act requires the shipowners to increase the crew on the ships operating on the Great Lakes?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. On the Great Lakes we have runs of as short duration as 3 miles. That sounds peculiar to you gentlemen who live on the ocean, where the run is from 1,300 to 3,000 miles, but we have many runs on the Great Lakes that are from 3 to 5 miles. On a run of that character for half a century prior to the adoption of the seamen's act we carried a crew of eight men and never lost a life, never had an accident, and under the operation of this law, as soon as the La Follette Act went into effect, the same boat now has to carry a crew of 19 men.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose that additional number of men was required because of the provision of law which required a certain percentage of able seamen.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And a certain number of hours between oilers and watchmen, and so forth?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes; that is true. The law which we are trying to amend provides that in all merchant vessels of the United States of more than 100 tons gross, excepting those navigating rivers and harbors, the sailors while at sea shall be divided into at least two watches, and the firemen, oilers, and water tenders divided into three watches. That is the present law. Let me read a letter which illustrates the burden borne by ships on the Great Lakes. This letter was written to me in 1915, and in it the writer says, speaking of his boat:

> Under our license she has always operated with 8 men. Under the new law 19 men are required. The boat is not arranged to house such a crew, even if the expense could be borne, which it certainly can not. Therefore, we are obliged to tie this ship up at the dock.

That illustrates the tremendous increase in the complement of ship crews required on the Great Lakes.

Mr. MADDEN. They would not be able to find sleeping quarters in that sized ship for a crew of 19.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. No.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I do not recall any testimony before the committee showing such an increase.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. That is the case to which I called attention on the Straits of Mackinac, on the ferryboat that runs from St. Ignace to Mackinac, a distance of 3 miles; and knowing the situation, the Department of Commerce has reduced that requirement. I do not know how they did it, but they did it.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. What size vessel is that?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I think she is about 100 feet long.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. With 19 men in the crew?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes. They had to put on 19 men under the law. Under the bill proposed, as far as short-run ships are concerned, we take them out of the provisions of the section and allow the department to regulate them, where a ship is operating less than 6 hours out of 24. Where she operates between 6 and 12 hours, we require them to have two crews. On such a run now these ships are obliged to carry three crews, and the extra amount of men are absolutely useless. As soon as the ship gets into port there is a little cleaning up to do, incident to the running of the ship, and then they leave a few men on board in each department and the rest of the crew go ashore. Before the seaman's law they operated on 6-hour shifts, which was perfectly satisfactory to the men, because with six hours on and six hours off the men could leave the vessel at port and have six hours off to devote to their families. Under the 4-hour system, which is the 3-watch system, when they get into the port they only have three hours off and they can not any more than get home than it is time to go back to work. Consequently the men themselves prefer the 2-watch system on short runs.

Mr. WALSH. Is it because these runs are of short duration that this measure is reported?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. No; not entirely. We are trying to keep our passenger ships on the Great Lakes. We are trying to apply a reasonable law to the actual conditions and not to some fancied condition.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman stated that it was not on account of the short runs that this measure is reported. The adoption of this amendment is recommended on account of the short runs, is it not?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Oh, yes; this particular amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Since the adoption of the La Follette Act in 1915 down to the present time one-sixth of all of the ships on the Great Lakes have stopped operating largely because of this law.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If it is on account of the short run, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania states, why did not you apply it to other short runs along the coast?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. The short runs along the coast are in the sounds, bays, and rivers, which are specifically excepted in the present law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I will take an additional five minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to a question as to the additional operating cost under the requirements of the law? That is one of the things we want to know.

UMI

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And how onerous is that additional cost on the owner of the property and how necessary?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Time prevents me from giving many illustrations, but here is one ship where the additional employees required by the seaman's act cost in salaries in one season over $8,000. That is exclusive of the food necessarily purchased to feed these unnecessary employees. It is not surprising that one-sixth of the ships have been tied at the docks and permitted to rot and the people of the Great Lakes section of the country for the first time in the history of the country are deprived of passenger and freight packet facilities that they have enjoyed heretofore.

Mr. MAPES. Before the gentleman passes that will he yield to a question? I notice that the proviso proposed to the first section of the law applies to vessels that are operated less than 6 hours out of the 24 hours a day.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. I do not just understand how that would affect a short line if it made several trips a day; for instance, one which the gentleman has cited from St. Ignace to Mackinac City. If I understand it correctly, these boats make return trips during the day, so they are really operated more than six hours.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Here is what they do: The steamer Lotus leaves St. Ignace about 9.30 in the morning, because at that time the trains come from the North and the South. It makes one trip across to the island, which takes about 15 minutes. Then it comes back, and the crew go home, returning some time in the afternoon. I think they make two trips in the afternoon and evening, taking the passengers to and from the island. They may make four trips a day.

Mr. MAPES. How many hours in all?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. In actual operation probably not to exceed four or five hours a day at the outside.

Mr. MAPES. Is not that an exceptional case?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. No; it is not an exceptional case. The City of Sheboygan runs from the city of Sheboygan to the Point of Pines, then to the island. The Islander and the Chippewa both have comparatively short runs. These are passenger steamers which I can think of hurriedly; but there are many sand boats on all the Lakes operating less hours per day than these boats I have mentioned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed an additional five minutes.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I will take five minutes additional. Let me direct your attention to the passenger steamer Kirby. What occurred with this steamer occurred with very nearly every steamer on the Great Lakes. In 1911 it cost the Kirby for employees, exclusive of officers, on board the ship $12,625. In 1919, which was the last year that ship ever run, it cost the same ship $22,335.44. Now, gentlemen, that is not all. If it was simply the expense incident to salaries it would be bad enough. But do you realize that when you have three crews every time you awaken a man to go on a 4-hour watch you have to feed him, and the cost of feeding three crews is equal to the salaries of at least one crew?

Here is one ship that runs from Cleveland to Buffalo. They say:

In 1915 our wages, fuel, and food cost us $131,687. In 1920 our wages, fuel, and food cost the same ship $419,590.49.

Mr. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I will.

Mr. NOLAN. The gentleman does not want to tell the House that is due to the La Follette Act?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I am not saying it is due entirely to the La Follette Act; certainly not so far as the fuel is concerned.

Mr. NOLAN. How about labor?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. As far as labor is concerned, let me give the gentleman that.

Mr. NOLAN. The labor cost?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Yes; the labor cost. That is what I referred to in the other statement.

Mr. NOLAN. Give us the difference in wages between 1915 and 1919.

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman will permit, I will say in reply to the question asked by the gentleman from California, that so far as one vessel is concerned the pay roll in May, 1915, was $3,200, and in May, 1916, after the La Follette Act had gone into effect, it was $4,612, or an increase of $1,400, due almost entirely to the provisions of that law.

Mr. NOLAN. The gentleman says "almost entirely." Is he sure it is entirely?

Mr. MILLS. Of course, I limit that, because there was an increase in wages, I appreciate, between 1915 and 1919.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Directing myself to the question asked by the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] as to the one ship—and you gentlemen realize I can not, in the time allotted me, take up all the ships, but many illustrations are in this record here—in one ship operating between the city of Cleveland and the city of Buffalo, the C. & B., one provision of the La Follette Seamens' Act, to wit, the provision requiring 65 per cent able seamen, cost that ship for extra, unnecessary men in one season $8,000 more than it had before. That is only one item in connection with the La Follette Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Obviously no quorum of the House is present.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STAFFORD). Two hundred and ninety-one Members have answered to their names—a quorum.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in presenting my views in regard to this measure I want to state that I do not profess to be a seaman or to be acquainted with the operation of ships. I am a landlubber from the interior. There are a great many of the details and intricacies of the operation of ships of which I know nothing. I could not give an order on board of a ship for the performance of any single duty by a seaman. And yet in the general run of the duties and obligations of boat owners and boat operators I have an idea that there ought to be consideration for the rights, interests, health, and happiness of the seamen, as well as for the prosperity and financial success of the owners of boats. Indeed, in my judgment, boat owners will in the end find profit in just and fair rules and provisions for their seamen.

When this bill was first presented it seemed to me so ultra, so one sided and extreme, so wanting in safeguards for safety of all aboard ship, that I could not begin to think of supporting it at all. As first presented this bill exempted all vessels on the Great Lakes or on the ocean from the operations of the seamen's law unless it was on a continuous run of 16 hours or more, thereby eliminating the requirement that there should be any legal number of able seamen required; that there should be any required number of watches on deck or in the fire room, or any legal number of the crew in other respects, and in addition to that on runs, even of over 16 hours, there was a provision that in any portion of existing law where an able seaman was required, that requirement might be met by substituting a certificated lifeboat man, so that if the bill as presented had become a law, on the Great Lakes and on the ocean we would have had no requirement for any voyage which was a continuous voyage of less than 16 hours, and over that we would have had no requirement for an able seaman which could not be filled by substituting a certificated lifeboat man. That is to say that the requirements of present law for efficiency and skill of the crews operating ships would have been practically wiped out.

Now, a certificated lifeboat man is defined under the law as one who bears a certificate that he knows how to handle oars and operate a lifeboat. He need not have the experience of one month or one week or of one day on board a ship if he knows how to handle a lifeboat and serve the oars. He might pass the examination.

Now, after discussing this matter pro and con among those of us who wanted to retain the provisions of the present law, for the protection of seamen against oppressive conditions and hours of labor, and for safety of life at sea, and those who wanted to amend the seamen's bill, so that it would be, in my judgment, a weak and watery arrangement, we who were on the subcommittee, consisting of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] and myself, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCOTT], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], and also the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], we reached a conclusion which it seems to me is fair and reasonable.

In the first place, I want to say that in reaching this conclusion we are acting in consonance with what seems to be the desire of the public community being served by this service. There came before us representatives of boards of trade and chambers of commerce and public gatherings of various and sundry kinds living upon the Great Lakes, urging the passage, not of this bill but of the bill as it was originally drawn. Now, the changes we have agreed to make are, first——

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. What was the attitude of labor on the subject?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The attitude of labor in general was opposed to the bill as it was presented, and to some extent is opposed to the bill as it is now framed. But let me call attention to the concessions made by the proponents of the bill. In the first place, they contended that an experienced lifeboat man could be used in all places where the law as it is written now requires able seamen. They said that on these vessels of modern type the old skill required for the seamen of old in handling the tackle of an old sailing vessel was no longer required, and that it only required good sense and the capacity to handle a lifeboat in order to make an able seaman, or in order to make a man competent to operate a vessel. We differed with them. We thought there should be on every vessel a certain percentage of the deck crew that would understand the operation of a ship and who should have had long experience, which would give them self-poise, which would enable them to have skill in the handling of a vessel on which the lives and safety of the passengers depended. So we compromised with respect to that. The law of 1915 required that the first year after its passage the deck crew should be composed of at least 40 per cent of able seamen, and the second year 45 per cent, and the third year 50 per cent, and the fourth year 55 per cent, and the next year 60 per cent, and after that 65 per cent able seamen on the deck crew only. It also provided that there should be on all ships a certain number of able seamen for each lifeboat and each life raft of a capacity of over 15 persons, so that the number of able seamen on a ship might even exceed 65 per cent of the deck crew. Now, the bill before us is a compromise. We compromised that by striking out the provision in the original Scott bill which authorized the substitution of a lifeboat man anywhere for an able seaman, and we agreed that there should only be 50 per cent of the deck crew who must have a rating of able seamen, that the number of able seamen for each lifeboat should remain as in existing law, but that certificated lifeboat men might be used where able seamen are required by the present law for life rafts.

Mr. Speaker, will the Chair kindly notify me when I have consumed 15 minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said about the increased cost of operating vessels on the Great Lakes under the seamen's bill.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. The general talk is that the entire passenger traffic has ceased on the Great Lakes. Is that true?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. My recollection from the testimony we have had is that most of the passenger lines on the Great Lakes have been prospering. Their cost of operation has increased, and some of the increase in cost was brought about by the requirement of additional members of the crew. But the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. SCOTT of Michigan], in speaking of that increased cost between 1915 and 1920, did not take into account the fact that the operation of any plant to-day is practically double or triple what it was in 1915, and the instance he named of a vessel operating in 1914 for $131,000 and now costing for its operation $419,000 is not much out of proportion with what everything else now costs in the way of labor as compared with 1915. I take it that a fairer statement of that proposition can be had from the testimony of one of the ship operators, Mr. Simpson, who operated eight vessels. Here is what he said with reference to the increase in his crews. I read from our hearings:

Mr. HARDY. How many ships did you have that involved that increase of 40 members?

Mr. SIMPSON. Eight ships. It runs from 12 on one ship down to 2 on another. We have got a route of 7 hours 15 minutes. I never would consent for those boats to run on one watch. They have got to have two watches, because there is work for these men to do while in port, whether running or not. I would never consent to operate my boat without seamen, whether they gave me the privilege or not.

Mr. HARDY. You want certificated men?

Mr. SIMPSON. I want able seamen.

This testimony of Mr. Simpson is what caused me to ask the gentleman from Michigan if that was not an unusual increase from 9 to 18. I mean the instance or ship he talked about. I am sorry that I failed to ask Mr. Simpson what was the tonnage or the total capacity of the eight ships or the total of his crews. As I understand, he runs an important line on the Great Lakes, and on these ships the actual increase which he attributes to the shipping act was 40 men, or 5 to a ship. I feel sure that there are several hundred men in the aggregate on the 8 ships.

Mr. RAMSEYER. How many did he have prior to the act?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Well, as I say, I omitted to ask him that question and he failed to answer it.

Mr. Simpson continues:

The boat would be a nice looking boat if you just had your crew on watch when they are running. She has to be taken care of just the same as a hotel or place where you live. I would say, too, that I do not care what they do with the law. I would never consent to operate my boat with seamen whether they gave me the privilege or not.

Mr. HARDY. You want certificated men?

Mr. SIMPSON. I want able seamen, whether it is judged by the local board of inspectors or by me. I will say that the seamen we have been employing since the passage of the act are the same men as before. They come aboard with a ticket; that is the only thing different. They were the same men.

Mr. HARDY. In other words, the law just provides a means by which the fact can be certified that they are qualified seamen.

Mr. SIMPSON. Now, whenever a new man comes with a ticket you have to take it for granted he is an able seaman. Before that you would not know about it. He would not have any ticket, and I would say if this provision were in the amendment that he could use certificated lifeboat men in lieu of able seamen, that we could use those. I would say that the only boats that we would ever care to use those would be for the manning of equipment. That is, I would not want to take a man that came down there with a certificated lifeboat ticket and ship him as a wheelsman; not on your life.

Now, that shows that the boat owners themselves recognized the necessity of having able seamen, and so we compromised by making this provision, that they might use certificated lifeboat men in handling a life raft, where now they are required to have one or more able seamen. Under the bill as now presented they have to have the same number of able seamen to handle every lifeboat that they had under the seamen's act, and they have to have 50 per cent of able seamen on the deck crew. And, as I said before, the requirement as to able seamen for the lifeboats may make more than even 65 per cent of the deck crew.

Of course, we heard from the boat owners who claimed that the seamen's laws were so burdensome that it was destroying their ability to operate. Some claimed that they had ceased running their ships, and so we framed the bill as it appears. We struck out the provision which eliminated the seamen's law from all ships making runs of less than 16 hours and substituted this amendment to section 2, providing that it should not apply where the vessel is operated less than 6 hours out of the 24. I think that is reasonable. If it is only operated 6 hours out of the 24, section 2 of the seamen's act ought not to apply. And then, in regard to the oilers, water tenders, we provide:

And where such a vessel is operated not less than 6 hours nor more than 12 hours out of 24 hours, the oilers, water tenders, and firemen shall be divided into at least two watches, which shall be kept on duty successively for the performance of ordinary work incident to the sailing and management of the vessel.

Now, where they operate not over 12 hours, it seemed reasonable that all but the firemen might work in two watches, 6 on and 6 off, but the firemen can not stand it 6 hours, and so we provide for three watches. Then we put in this further proviso:

Provided further, That where such a vessel is operated more than 12 and less than 16 hours out of 24 hours, the oilers and water tenders shall be divided into at least two watches and the firemen into at least three watches, which shall be kept on duty successively for the performance of ordinary work incident to the sailing and management of such vessel: And provided further, That the oilers and water tenders shall not be required to be on duty more than 12 hours out of 24 hours, and the firemen shall not be required to be on duty in the fireroom more than 8 hours out of 24 hours.

Mr. BOWLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BOWLING. I notice that the debate so far has centered around the decrease or the increase of the number of the crew. I observe on reading the bill that there is some modification of the life-saving features. Would it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him to explain that and tell us what the proposed changes are?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. There is no change in the life-saving equipment except two. The season is extended one month; it begins on the 1st of May instead of the 15th and runs to the 15th of October instead of the 15th of September. This makes the light equipment run longer. We came to the conclusion that these are the summer months on which a large number of passengers may be going on the vessels. All the evidence seemed to be that the extension of time was not seriously objected to. The lifeboat equipment is the same as before. There is only one change in the life-saving provision, and that is that certificated lifeboat men may be susbtituted on the life rafts for able seamen.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman explain what is meant by operation for six hours? Suppose a boat was to leave one shore, and it took three hours to get to the port on the opposite side, and it laid there long enough to discharge its cargo—several hours—and then it took three hours to get back to the home port, would you consider that operating for six hours? In other words, do you mean those six hours of continuous running or do you include the time that it lays in port?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I think the authorities would construe the word "operate" to mean the work of running a vessel. I think operating means while under steam going from one port to another, and perhaps might include the time while steam is being gotten up.

There is a provision that the firemen shall not be required to be in the fireroom—and as I understand that will have added to it "or engine room"—more than 8 hours out of the 24. Being operated so many hours in the day was intended to change the phraseology from a continuous run to more than so many hours, because those runs might be back and forth, and there were a number of cases in which certain lines ran 3 hours one way and then back 3 hours, and yet during the day they would run enough trips so as to be in operation 8 or 10 hours. Those vessels would come under that head and would be operated more than 6 hours out of the 24.

Mr. McDUFFIE. That was the point I was inquiring about.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. They are operating during all the hours from the time they steam up in the morning until the fires are drawn at night. That, I think, would be operating.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It matters not whether the boat is in port or moving?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. No.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If steam is up?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I regret that I can not use any more time. I have so many members of the committee who desire time, and I wish to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS]. I will ask the Chair how much time I have occupied.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STAFFORD). The gentleman used 20 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I occupy pretty much the same attitude with regard to this matter as has been stated by my colleague, Judge HARDY. As the bill dealing with this subject was originally introduced, I would not have supported it and so notified the members of the committee. However, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries gave to this whole subject very lengthy and careful consideration. We conducted hearings for a number of days and permitted all those who desired to be heard either for or against the bill to appear before the committee and present their views. These hearings have been published and constitute a volume of over 500 pages, which gives you some evidence of the care with which the committee undertook to consider this question.

After considerable discussion of the different provisions of the bill a subcommittee was appointed, composed of three of those who advocated the bill in its original form, and two of us were opposed to it in that form. We had several different meetings in which we went over the subject very thoroughly and agreed upon a bill substantially in the form of the bill subsequently introduced and now being considered. And while this bill is the result of concessions on the part of both sides, as is very frequently the case, yet I think upon the whole it deals with the subject in a fair and equitable manner, and without the possibility of resulting in any serious hardship to either side; that is, without any serious hardship to the traveling or shipping public or the seamen or the operators. For instance, on the question of hours and the number of crews, my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], has already explained that in detail; but in that connection I wish to state that it appeared to me as well as to other members of the committee that there is a difference between conditions on the Great Lakes and on the ocean, and that such distinction should find expression in our laws. It has been suggested that this is an entering wedge toward the modification or repeal of the seaman's act as a whole, or with respect to the ocean. Speaking for myself, I will say that that is not true. And furthermore, in reply to that, I wish to submit the suggestion that a correction of burdensome features of the act, or of abuses, will doubtless do very much toward preventing or combating the propaganda that is perhaps being carried on for the repeal of the entire seamen's act. Very few comprehensive laws have proved to be absolutely perfect in operation. It generally develops that in order to meet unforeseen contingencies it is necessary to amend them in certain particulars. The seaman's act has now been in operation for six years, and the effort now is to modify it only in certain particulars with regard to the Great Lakes.

The navigation on the rivers and in harbors, bays, and sounds is already precluded from the operation of the seaman's act. And while all of the operation on the Lakes is not as safe and the conditions are not identical with those upon rivers, harbors, and sounds, yet many features are, and perhaps most of them to a degree, and it occurs to me that it is not improper to make the modifications that are called for in the bill with regard to the Great Lakes, where conditions are considerably different from those on the ocean, particularly with respect to the operation of many vessels.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. For a brief question.

Mr. LONDON. Why should there be a modification as to hours?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In the first place, it appeared in the hearings that a number of vessels are operated for only a very few hours out of the 24; in some instances three or four or five or six hours, and it does not seem that they should be required to have two or three crews on vessels of that character. The same is true with reference to another class of vessels which are in operation from 6 to 12 hours out of 24 hours. It does not seem that there should be the same requirement with regard to crews of such vessels that obtains on longer runs or in ocean traffic. I will state in connection with that that this exact phraseology was something of a compromise of views, and perhaps does not absolutely represent the views of the one side or the other but simply a modification of the views of both.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. For a brief question.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Is the chief purpose of the bill to reduce the number of men required to operate the vessels?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is the object of the amendment to section 2 of the seaman's act. The next amendment to the bill, as has been explained, reduces from 65 per cent to 50 per cent the required number of the deck crew of each vessel who must be able seamen.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That does not necessarily reduce the number of employees, but only the number of able seamen.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That is correct; because the other places would be filled by certificated lifeboat men.

In that connection I think this difference between the 65 per cent requirement on the ocean and the 50 per cent requirement on the Great Lakes is at least balanced by the fact that on the Great Lakes there are 65 life-saving stations, scattered all around the Lakes, with splendid equipment, and it would perhaps be an unusual case where the boats from those life-saving stations could not reach a vessel in distress.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Following my first question, how much will be the decrease in the number of employees on these Lake vessels—what percentage?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Conditions on the different lines and with regard to different vessels vary so much that it is absolutely impossible to answer that question by stating the average or the total decrease. There is considerable testimony in the hearings as to the increase as to specific lines and vessels caused by the seaman's act, and this bill modifies that act in certain particulars, and would result in a reduction of the required number of employees in some instances.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Could the gentleman state how much the employees of these Lake vessels were increased because of the La Follette Seamen's Act?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. It appeared at the hearings that as to some lines there was not a very material increase, and as to some lines there was no change in this respect, perhaps, but in some cases, particularly on the short lines—that is, on the vessels operated for a brief period—the law increased the number of employees.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is, those that operate for less than 6 hours in the 24?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes; and from 6 to 12 hours. There is a distinction there. In other words, within that period oilers and water tenders are placed in the same category with regard to working hours that now applies to seamen, the idea of the committee being that their work is no more laborious than that of seamen, but that firemen should not be required to work for as long a period as the other members of the crew.

Mr. RAMSEYER. My reason for asking information is this: I am wondering how burdensome the La Follette Act is on the shipowners.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, taking a little more time, Mr. Simpson stated that on a fleet of his vessels he was required to employ 40 additional men.

Mr. RAMSEYER. But he does not state how many men he had before.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. He said 40 additional men were required.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If he had 40 before and he had to employ 40 additional, that would be quite an addition, but if he had 1,000 before and had to have 40 additional, it would not be.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I express my regret that I did not go into that.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the seaman's act which increased the general cost of operation and which are affected by the provisions of this bill are three in number. The first one of them relates to the number of watches on a vessel and provides for the establishment of three watches of firemen, oilers, and water tenders on all vessels, irrespective of the run of that vessel, or irrespective of the hours of labor of the men. The second provision which increases the cost of operation is the 65 per cent provision, which requires that 65 per cent of the members of a deck crew shall be so-called able seamen as defined by law, a fixed legal definition, and one which does not necessarily imply that the man is particularly skilled. However, he does receive higher wages than an ordinary seaman, or a certificated lifeboat man.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I should prefer not to yield at this time.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I wanted to ask the gentleman to define in terms what a seaman is.

Mr. MILLS. The third provision is that which indirectly increases the number of men on a vessel, and that provision is found in section 14 of the act which requires that each lifeboat and life raft shall have at least one able seaman, so that in actual practice the number of able seamen on board a vessel is well over the 65 per cent apparently required by the previous section. The fourth provision which is affected by this bill and which increases the cost of operation of these vessels is the shortness of the season on the Great Lakes, during which the maximum number of safety appliances on a vessel is not required.

Let us first consider, before taking up these questions in detail, what have been the actual results of the operation of this law on the American Merchant Marine on the Lakes, and it is unnecessary to generalize, it is unnecessary to assume or to imagine. These are the actual facts. Take the G. B. Hall steamers that carry more than a million tons of coal from the port of Rochester in the State of New York. To-day they are nearly all under Canadian registry, having been transferred in 1917 because of the operation of this act. One hundred thousands passengers leave Rochester yearly by way of Lake Ontario and go down the St. Lawrence. They are all carried by vessels under the Canadian flag, because of the provisions of this act. Take the pulp-wood boats. Here is a fair example of how it affects them. The steamship Ford, a vessel of 609 tons gross, operated with a crew of 13 men in 1915 and after the passage of this act was required to carry 17 men. That increased the costs per annum $5,000, the equivalent of the interest charge on the entire capital invested of some $100,000.

Take the steamship Put in Bay. In 1911 it had 2 firemen, 2 engineers, and now it has 3 firemen, 3 officers, 2 engineers, and 2 oilers, and she makes the 5-hour run. Take the vessels of the Detroit & Cleveland Navigation Co. Their run is 7 hours from Cleveland to Detroit. The seamen's act increased the crew of 7 of their vessels by 40, running anywhere from 12 men on one ship to 2 on another. Take the steamship Alabama of the Goodrich Co. Her pay roll in 1915 was $3,200 a month, and in 1916, after the passage of this act, it was $4,200 a month, an increase of $1,000, and certainly wages in 1916 and in 1915 can fairly be compared. Take the Cleveland & Buffalo Line. On one of their boats, one of the large passenger boats on the Great Lakes, the increase in the pay roll on one vessel alone, owing to the seamen's act, is over $13,000, and if you realize what a vast amount of capital is represented by such an interest charge you will readily appreciate what it means in respect to the construction of new vessels to operate on the Great Lakes. These are general results of the passage of this act.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Can the gentleman tell me what the original crew was of that line which was increased by 40?

Mr. MILLS. No; I can not, because I do not think the facts were given.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I hoped that the gentleman might know.

Mr. MILLS. If there is any criticism to be made of this bill, it is that it does not go far enough, not that it goes too far. Let us consider it by individual sections and see what it accomplishes.

Now let us consider the 3-watch system. The seamen's act provides, under section 2, that there shall be three watches of firemen, oilers, and water tenders on all vessels on the Great Lakes and on the ocean, and they require three watches—that is, three different sets of men—on every vessel that is operated for one hour or on a run of 7 days' continuous operation 24 hours each day, a most ridiculous provision. You may hear it urged on the floor of this House, as it has been urged by the opponents of this bill, that this is an attempt to substitute a 72-hour day for a 48-hour day. That is not the case. It is the purpose of this bill to substitute for this provision requiring three watches, irrespective of the hours of labor, a provision which makes it possible for the vessels to employ only three watches where they are needed, not to put three watches where they are wholly unnecessary. You have only to read the terms of the bill to see that because it first eliminates the 3-watch provision as to vessels operated for 6 hours or less.

In other words, it will not require three different sets of men when a vessel is only in actual operation six hours. The second section deals with the case of the vessel which is operated more than 6 and less than 12 hours; and there again, except in so far as firemen are concerned, it does away with the 3-watch provision. Now, they may say, "Why do you happen to fix this number of hours? Why do you say less than 6 hours or more than 6 and less than 12?" Because in framing the bill we were not dealing with a hypothetical case, but we were dealing with actual vessels operating over actual runs, and it happened to fit into this particular schedule of hours. What is the situation to-day under section 2 of the law? Here is one vessel, the C. & B. Line, that never makes a trip over 3½ miles and never operates more than 8 hours a day. She was obliged to increase her fireroom force. Take the sand boats. 40 or 50 on the Great Lakes, with a plant investment of $5,000,000 and an output per annum of some $3,000,000 to $4,000,000. These boats actually operate on the Lakes only some 3 or 4 hours a day. They are never more than 3½ miles away from shore, and yet one of them, when it was changed from the Canadian register to the American register, was obliged to increase her number of firemen from one to three, an increase of $875 a month to $1,125 a month. Though she was not actually operated more than 4 hours a day, this force was tripled in the fireroom under the terms of this unreasonable act. Now, take vessels that make a somewhat longer run, a run, for instance, from Chicago to Milwaukee, which is a 5-hour run, and there you work under the 3-watch system. Assuming that the first watch goes on at 6 o'clock in the morning, they would work from 6 to 10 and have no actual firing to do whatsoever. The second watch would go on from 10 to 2 and would actually fire 4 hours at sea. The third watch would go on at 2 and the vessel comes into port at 3 and have only 1 hour of firing. The vessel goes out at 6. The first watch then goes on again and fires for 4 hours. Out of the 24 hours the operation of these two runs of 5 hours each, under the 3-watch system, the first watch will have firing of 4 hours, the second will have firing of 4 hours, and the third watch will have firing of 2 hours, and each man will have fired on the average 3⅓ hours a day. And yet gentlemen will unquestionably tell you that if you pursue this system you are establishing a week of 72 hours instead of 48, and they can argue from a hypothetical standpoint, but I defy them to argue from the standpoint of actual experience on the Great Lakes. Take the case of the City of Toledo. She makes a 4-hour run and is obliged to carry 18 men in the fireroom.

I could go on and enumerate a number of these cases, but I would have spent all my time on this first section, and I would like to take up the second question. The second question has to do with the 65 per cent provision giving the number of able seamen required as members of the crew. The Scott bill reduces the percentage from 65 to 50 per cent. Now, what is an able seaman? An able seaman, according to the seaman's act, is a man who served 3 years at sea or 18 months on the Great Lakes, irrespective of any other qualifications. What are the actual duties of an able seaman to-day on the ordinary steam vessel? He cleans the deck; polishes the brass; he must splice rope; he must paint the ship; and he must be able to tie a ship up to the dock, all ordinary, simple matters, easily learned, yet the gentleman who drafted this original bill provided that before a man can be listed as an able seaman, if you please, he must have served three years to learn these ordinary simple duties, and that there must be at least 65 per cent of these men employed as part of every deck crew.

Well, what is the result? The result is it is difficult to get the kind of men in the American merchant marine, because the average American boy will not spend three years of his time as an ordinary seaman in order to learn the duties which he can acquire in six months, especially when he can apply for a certificate as mate after two years' service on the deck of a vessel. Now, all this provision does is to reduce that percentage from 65 to 50 per cent. I would go much further. I would provide some test which would determine who is qualified as an able seaman other than by this time test, which simply restricts the number of available men and at the same time restricts the American source of supply for the American merchant marine. They will tell you they have put more Americans on board our merchant fleet by reason of their seamen's act. What are the actual figures? In 1915 before the passage of this act 40 per cent of all those employed on American vessels were Americans.

To-day, in spite of the war, which drafted any number of boys who had never gone to sea before, in spite of the merchant tonnage of over 10,000,000 tons, what is the percentage? Forty-seven per cent. If you will read the report of the committee, you will see a quotation from a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, saying that the provisions of this act make it clearly impossible to get American youths to go to sea. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] 20 minutes.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. And I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. To be used as the gentleman sees fit.

Mr. NOLAN. And it is understood I can yield out of that time.

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman from California desire a quorum present?

Mr. NOLAN. No; I do not.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is the first attempt to amend the so-called La Follette Seamen's Act. I do not know whether you would want any more enlightenment upon the general intent of those who are opposed to the seamen's act and those in favor of the bill than the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS], who has just taken his seat. The people that are interested in the American merchant marine—and some of those that are interested in the American merchant marine are interested in the international merchant marine—want cheap ships.

They have always wanted cheap ships, which means, as the gentleman has suggested, cheap labor. They want the American flag on the stern of an American-built ship, but they want concessions, and have continually gotten them from the American Congress. They want the American flag on American bottoms, but they are not so particular about American licensed officers and seamen. They want the right to take lascars, Chinese, and Japanese, and other sorts of cheap labor and operate their ships solely for their own individual gain without regard to the interest of the American sailor. Those that are opposed to the seamen's act have taken that position from the beginning. Ever since it was passed by Congress in 1915 they have been clamoring that the La Follette Seamen's Act should be amended so that they would have cheap ships. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] talks about the ships at Rochester that changed from American to Canadian registry. The gentlemen who constitute this committee will bear out the fact that a distinguished shipowner from the city of San Francisco, which I in part represent, Capt. Dollar, came before your committee in 1915, when you were putting through the emergency bill, and told you if the German war vessels were swept from the sea he would have no use for the American flag on the stern of his ship. Foreign-built ships were given the right to raise the American flag in case of an emergency, and he told you if he could safely go back and put the English flag on his boats he was going to do it. And why? That was before the seamen's act was passed. It was because he would not be compelled to observe conditions, not only in the interest of the men who go down to the sea in ships but in the interests of the people of this country who travel on ships, and it is the great American public that are the beneficiaries of the safety provisions of the seamen's act, whether it be on the Great Lakes or the ocean.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NOLAN. I will.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. What other country besides the United States has the requirements as to able seamen?

Mr. NOLAN. None. That is why they want it. They are not so much concerned about this requirement as they are about this life-saving provision, and our first duty is to protect the lives of passengers and to see that the American seamen have decent conditions and the right acquired after centuries of struggle to be considered free men.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. The gentleman is not insisting that we are changing the life-saving provision?

Mr. NOLAN. I am taking this position, that this is the first drive to amend the La Follette Act.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. As far as the Great Lakes are concerned——

Mr. NOLAN. As far as the Great Lakes are concerned. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] argued it from the standpoint of the American merchant marine and not particularly from the standpoint of the Great Lakes.

Now, gentlemen of the House, these gentlemen refer to certain boats on the Great Lakes and the difference in the cost of operation between 1915 and 1916. Is there anybody in this House that takes the position that labor costs generally in 1916 were not far in advance of those of 1915? The war came on in August, 1914, and immediately prices began to go up. There was a great demand all over this country for labor in the munition factories to supply England, France, and other countries at war with Germany with munitions, and the price of labor jumped tremendously in 1915 and 1916. They did not attempt to analyze the difference in labor costs and try to find out or tell you what the rate per month per man was in 1915, before the La Follette Act went into effect, and in 1916, the year for which they cite these figures. They do not give you that information. Otherwise we would have some idea as to how high these figures went.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NOLAN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman from California know how much the increase was?

Mr. NOLAN. I do not. But I am trying to point out to this House that you have not got the information as to what the wages of seamen were on the Great Lakes in 1915 and then again in 1916, so that you can determine definitely the percentage of increase of cost on account of the La Follette Act going into effect.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I do not think the gentleman means to say that really, because I endeavor to show the extra number of men employed. Taking the amount of salary would not make any difference. I cited one ship.

Mr. NOLAN. I suppose that there is more than one ship on the Great Lakes.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I was citing that as an illustration to the gentleman.

Mr. NOLAN. You were attempting to cite an exception, but not the general rule.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Oh, no; the general rule.

Mr. NOLAN. I would like to call the attention of the House to a pamphlet that I received, and I think many Members of this House received, about two weeks ago. I think this bill came from the gentlemen who held this conference in Detroit. It is addressed to the members of the seamen's act conference by a committee appointed to draw up suitable resolutions and draft a bill embodying amendments to the seamen's law in accordance with the conclusions reached by the conference. Now, over on page 2 we find the bill. I do not know if it is in line with the original measure introduced in the House, but inasmuch as the gentlemen seem to be very much in favor of this act, I believe they are the proponents of this measure.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Is the gentleman interested in knowing who they are?

Mr. NOLAN. They signed their names to this pamphlet.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. But the gentleman does not know who they are from the signatures. They compose a committee of the chambers of commerce of every city on the Great Lakes—Cleveland, Buffalo, Milwaukee——

Mr. NOLAN. And every shipowner on the Great Lakes was represented at the conference in Detroit that received the report and which indorsed the bill that is almost word for word with the original bill introduced by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. There is not a shipowner on the committee at all.

Mr. NOLAN. They are the shipowners on the Lakes. Let me call your attention to what these gentlemen want to do, and that is exactly what you are called upon to consider here to-day. And I want to leave it to you whether they want cheap ships and want the privilege to operate in competition with the Canadians or not. The fourth paragraph reads:

> We recommend that the life rafts referred to herein need not be greater than 15-person rafts.

I want you to bear that in mind and carry it in mind with the rest of the paragraph:

> The present law provides that one-half of the number of life rafts required shall have a capacity exceeding 15 persons.

That is the present law. They must have such capacity.

> Our thought in recommending 15-person rafts is that heavy rafts running in size up to 40 or 50 persons can not be handled by hand.

They do not want the mechanical equipment on board of ships to take care of the life rafts and to take care of the lives of passengers in case of trouble. They do not want the mechanical equipment, inasmuch as they do not like the cost. Here is the proposition, gentlemen:

> But require, to be properly and quickly launched, a special boat equipment for launching, whereas if there is a sufficient supply of 15-person rafts the passengers themselves can handle them.

Now, you are going to be asked here to amend the provisions of the La Follette law as applied to the Great Lakes in regard to certificated boatmen and able seamen. That is one of the life-saving provisions of the La Follette Act. These gentlemen to whom I have referred want the passengers to handle 15-passenger life rafts. Have you got any idea of what that means? Green men and women that never had any skill or training on board a ship trying to get on a life raft and launch it themselves. This committee, representing chambers of commerce, tell you as to boats on the Great Lakes that passengers shall launch the life rafts themselves, and they shall take care of their own lives. What would the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] think, who might possibly have had relatives or friends on board the Titanic, of that proposition if people were allowed to scramble for themselves?

If it is the purpose of these gentlemen to let the passengers scramble for themselves, it is the duty of the American Congress to provide for the safety of passengers at sea. [Applause.] We should not be concerned with the amount of money that the Great Lakes shipowners make. We ought to be concerned, first of all, with the safety of passengers at sea and concerned to see that the men who go down to sea in ships get a square deal in regard to their working hours.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask the gentleman what provision in this bill in any way changes the size of the life raft?

Mr. NOLAN. I am trying to indicate the purpose of the proponents of this bill. This is the entering wedge.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman does not contend that in any way this bill reduces the size of the life raft?

Mr. NOLAN. No. The gentleman in his argument did not confine himself entirely to the effect of the bill on the Great Lakes. He made his argument generally against the seamen's act as he construed it to affect the American merchant marine.

Mr. JAMES of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes.

Mr. JAMES of Michigan. Was not the suggestion made by a member of the committee, "You can tie a rope to the raft and throw it overboard and let the people climb down on it"?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes. That is what the shipowners want.

Mr. JAMES of Michigan. I have been on vessels on Lake Superior when the water was sweeping over the decks. I would like to see a man climb down on a raft in that condition.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. The gentleman understands that we have not amended the life-saving equipment in this bill.

Mr. NOLAN. I understand this, that the Democratic minority agreed to this bill so that you would get a unanimous report; otherwise you might possibly have had a different bill.

Now, I am going to offer an amendment to section 2. I think the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] intended to offer an amendment to section 2. My amendment will do this: My amendment will give the oilers and water tenders the 8-hour day; and if the committee accepts the Bankhead amendment, it will take in the firemen, my understanding being that the amendment will be accepted. I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is to offer an amendment to restore the able-seaman provisions of the La Follette Act. The oilers and water tenders working in the fire and engine room are working under great pressure. If all of the employees working on the railroads are entitled to an 8-hour day—and I certainly favor the 8-hour day on the railroads—I think these men are also entitled to consideration. This Congress has gone on record from time to time in favor of the 8-hour day in principle. You have no right to say to these oilers and water tenders on the Great Lakes, whose work is arduous and dirty and greasy work, "You shall work 12 hours a day."

Under the terms of this bill they would be required to work 12 hours a day, and later on I would not be surprised to see a provision brought in here to make them work 16 hours a day.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes.

Mr. EDMONDS. I do not understand that the oilers and water tenders work in the engine room.

Mr. NOLAN. Oilers and water tenders work in the fireroom and engine room. If anybody has been down in the fireroom, especially on the boats on the Great Lakes, he will have noticed that the smaller the boat the hotter the fireroom, and the engine room on the smaller boat is less comfortable than on the ocean-going boat. Those are the men you are going to put on the 12-hour day.

Mr. EDMONDS. I have been down in those boats.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like in my own time to have read a telegram that I received to-day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the telegram.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DENVER, COLO., June 14, 1921.

Hon. JOHN I. NOLAN,
Chairman Committee on Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The American Federation of Labor, in session in Denver, Colo., unanimously adopted the following resolution and directed that a copy be sent to you for your sympathetic consideration and favorable action:

"Whereas H. R. 6754, which is the reported number of the bill introduced by Congressman Scott, of Michigan, increases the summer season on the Great Lakes by 15 days in the spring, subjecting the passenger vessels to the spring gales, and by 30 days in the fall, thereby subjecting the passenger vessels to the equinoctial gales; and

"Whereas this bill increases the weekly working hours of oilers, water tenders, and some firemen from 56 to 84 hours per week by taking away the three and inserting two watches; and

"Whereas this bill reduces the number of skilled men capable of handling life-saving appliances from 65 per cent of the deck crew to 50 per cent of the deck crew and by substituting certificated lifeboat men in lieu of able seamen on rafts; and

"Whereas life-saving appliances are of no use where there is not a reasonable number of skilled men to handle them, not only after getting them into the water but in getting them into the water; and

"Whereas the present law, both as to the length of season and as to the number of skilled men, was adopted after the most painstaking investigation and giving to the operators of vessels too great a consideration as compared with the consideration given to safety by permitting passenger vessels to sail with boats for 20 per cent, rafts for 30 per cent, and nothing but life preservers for the other 50 per cent: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the American Federation of Labor convention now in session at Denver, Colo., That we protest most emphatically against any lowering of the number of skilled men, any increase in the hours of labor, or any extension of the season in which passenger vessels are permitted to operate in a condition in which 50 per cent of the persons on board have no means of safety except life preservers, the futility of which were shown in the loss of the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence River in May, 1914, where, according to report, 1,027 persons drowned with life preservers on within less than 3 miles from shore and with assistance coming in less than two hours.

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to call the attention of the House to the report of the United States Steel Corporation concerning its principles and policies, a report made to the annual meeting of the stockholders in 1921. It is contained on pages 19 and 20 of their pamphlet. I read:

The officers of the corporation, the presidents of subsidiary companies, and the majority of others in positions of responsibility are in favor of abolishing the 12-hour day, and for this reason and because of the public sentiment referred to, it is our expectation to decrease the working hours—we hope in the comparatively near future.

We have not any more right to put the stamp of approval on the 12-hour day than has the United States Steel Corporation. It is the only time this Congress has done it since I have been a Member of it, for eight years.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NOLAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I am in favor of an 8-hour day. But how will you tell the House that you can get a 12-hour day on a trip consuming only 7 hours?

Mr. NOLAN. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that there is no necessity of working a 12-hour day on a 7-hour run. This bill does not require two watches on a 7-hour run. It says "not less than 6 hours or more than 12 hours."

Mr. MADDEN. In that case you get two crews.

Mr. NOLAN. The six or seven hour run is not affected.

Mr. MADDEN. Under this bill there are two crews in 12 hours.

Mr. NOLAN. Under my amendment you can not work them more than eight hours. This bill permits the working of the oilers and water tenders 12 hours a day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has remaining 12 minutes. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] has 9 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thought I had 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman used one minute in answering a query.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the committee, as a member of the minority on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, I must confess frankly that although I shall probably vote for this bill, and expect to vote for it, especially if an amendment that I propose to offer is adopted, yet I do not look upon the provisions of this bill with any great enthusiasm.

The truth of the business—and we may as well have a clear understanding of the fact, as indicated by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS]—is that as this bill was originally introduced and came to the committee it was entirely obnoxious to the members of the minority upon the committee. Some of us felt the apprehension that has been expressed by the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN], that although there might be some peculiar conditions existing on the Great Lakes that might justify some minor amendments to the seamen's act, in all probability the passage of a bill of this character was but the beginning of a wholesale attack upon all the provisions of the La Follette Seamen's Act as affecting not only the Great Lakes but the high seas as well. If that is the purpose of those who are behind this bill, or of those who advocate it with that concealed purpose, I want to say that as far as I am concerned—and I believe that I am voicing the sentiment of the minority upon this question—we do not propose to surrender the provisions of the seamen's act in its larger application, simply because of the fact that propaganda is in existence seeking to create the impression that the failure of our merchant marine at the present time is due solely and entirely to the handicaps and burdens imposed by the seamen's act, because such is not the case. We heard the testimony pro and con upon this question, and the bill that is now before you, as far as the minority are concerned, was the best compromise that we thought we could obtain in order to prevent the enactment of the bill as it was originally introduced.

And there is as we see it no surrender in this bill of the essential provisions of the seamen's act. There are some peculiar conditions that exist upon the Great Lakes that would appeal to the judgment of men who are not only anxious to serve the interests of commerce and of shipping in that community, but also from a reasonable standpoint to preserve the interests of the seamen, that might justify some minor amendments to the seamen's act as far as it relates to the Great Lakes only. And this bill as brought in here is the result of the opposition of the minority to the bill as it was originally introduced.

I want to say with reference to the argument made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS], who made an attack upon the provisions of the seamen's act as a whole, that I do not believe the American Congress, even as now constituted, will surrender the achievement that was won after years of struggle not only upon the part of the public who travel upon the high seas but upon the part of the men who earn their living in the operation of vessels, those decent protections to life and property at sea that are guaranteed under the provisions of the seamen's act as it now exists.

There is one section of the bill as it is proposed, the proviso to section 2, to which I expect to offer an amendment to cover what might be the possibility of an erroneous construction as to the terms of the proviso. In the language that now appears it provides that the firemen shall not be required to be on duty in the fireroom more than 8 hours out of 24 hours. The exactions upon those men, on account of the conditions under which they work, are very severe, and by possible construction this proviso might be construed by the authorities who will construe it after the bill is passed, that those men might be assigned to labor in some other part of the vessel after their eight hours in the fireroom had expired; and I am very glad that the author of the bill has agreed to an amendment that I propose to offer. that the eight hours shall include all of the labor that they shall perform, not only in the fireroom but in the engine room of the vessel. I do not know how this proposed amendment is going to work out as far as safety is concerned on the Great Lakes. It is true that they have had a remarkable record of safety for a number of years, as far as carrying passengers on the Great Lakes is concerned, but we do not know at what time in the future, on account of the conditions of the elements or fog or collision, the world may be horrified by some great catastrophe upon the Great Lakes, and I want to say very frankly that I view with great apprehension any effort that may be made to enact anything into law that will diminish the life-saving appliances upon vessels as they now exist.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman think this bill does lessen those safety provisions any?

Mr. BANKHEAD. As far as the provisions of this bill are concerned, I do not think any changes are made with reference to the life-saving apparatus, except that the bill does provide that a diminished number of able seamen may be used and in lieu thereof certificated lifeboat men may be employed. Now, although the gentleman from New York argued very seriously that it does not take any very long experience to make a capable able seaman, and that a man who has the qualifications necessary to get a certificate as a lifeboat man would be adequate and able and possessed of the knowledge to take care of the passengers even in times of great calamity, that is something that I do not believe. It is contrary to all human experience. It is contrary to the testimony of men who have led a seafaring life. It is contrary to the personal observation of any man who has been upon the high seas. Why, in my own experience upon a recent trip to the Panama Canal we had some fire drills upon that vessel, and, my friends, if you could have seen the character of the men who were sent up to man the lifeboats as an illustration of what would be done in the event of peril upon the high seas, and could have seen their immaturity, in some cases their absolute ignorance, and in many cases their evident unpreparedness for that great responsibility, you, too, if you have not had that experience, would view with great apprehension any effort to lessen the qualifications and skill of those men, who are directly responsible for the lowering of the boats and the putting off of the passengers in the event of any disaster at sea.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. If the amendment which the gentleman intends to offer is adopted, does the gentleman think that under the terms of this bill any improper working conditions will be imposed upon labor?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does not affect the working conditions, except with reference to the time that they are required to work. The working conditions of the men are not affected by the proposed amendment.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman think that if the amendment is adopted the provisions of this bill will make improper conditions with reference to the length of time that the men shall work?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It will, in that it makes possible a 12-hour day for the water tenders and the oilers.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman says, "as pointed out by the gentleman from California," but the gentleman from California did not prove it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. You do not have to have any proof.

Mr. MADDEN. Under the provisions of the bill, if a ship has a 12-hour run and she has two crews, it must be apparent on its face that they can not work one crew but six hours.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How does the gentleman construe this provision of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GAHN]. I would like him to explain section 2, page 3.

Mr. GAHN. Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to talk on this. It seems to come here with a unanimous report, although it was not unanimous in the discussions.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAHN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it not a fact that the discussion continued after the gentleman left the city, and so the gentleman is not in a position to say what was the attitude of the committee when it got through with all this deliberation.

Mr. GAHN. I still maintain that it was not a unanimous opinion during the discussion while I was present.

Now, gentlemen, I come from Cleveland, Ohio, located on the Great Lakes. I am not in favor of the bill as it stands, and in what little time I have I want to express a few fundamental principles. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCOTT] on behalf of those who desire some relief from the conditions that obtain under the La Follette seamen's act on the easterly coast of the southern peninsula of Michigan, to lengthen the season and to provide that they should not be required to have three shifts on some of the shorter runs. That was all right. But it seems that men, vessel owners on the ocean, as well as on the Great Lakes, saw an opportunity to attack the whole La Follette Act. I want you to understand if you have not been around the Great Lakes that there is some danger in operating vessels on the Great Lakes just the same as there is on the ocean. It has been said that the bill does not go far enough; I think it goes too far. I think the sleeper is on page 3, lines 1 to 5, where it changes the percentage of able seamen from 65 to 50. This was put into the bill after the hearings before the committee and was not discussed during them. People think on the Great Lakes we ought to have at least 65 per cent able seamen on all decks. This is my first speech, and I do not want to be presumptuous about it, but I want to say—and statistics will bear me out—that of the majority of boat lines and a great deal of the money operating the boats are handled through Cleveland. Nobody in that city has ever come to me and asked a change in the seamen's bill so far as the 65 per cent of able seamen requirement is concerned.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAHN. Not at present. I want to say that I have not anything against the other features of the bill except one, and that I understand will be taken care of by an amendment. I do not think the gentleman from New York, or the gentleman from Michigan, who introduced the bill, would like to go down and be a water tender or an oiler and work 12 hours a day. I think that provision is entirely unfair. Now I want to give notice that I am going to introduce an amendment restoring the 65 per cent requirement of able seamen on the decks.

I know what the sleeper is for; the idea is to get the labor unions off the Great Lakes and to permit the vessel owners to employ cheap and inefficient labor and at the expense of safety for passengers on the Great Lakes. I want to say in closing that the Great Lakes need 65 per cent of able seamen on all passenger boats. Do you know that more people are carried on some of these boats than are on many ships going out on the ocean? Some of these large boats on the Lakes carry on excursions four or five thousand people, and we do not want deck crews with only 50 per cent able seamen. Sixty-five per cent is not enough, it ought to be 100 per cent, especially when you take into consideration the fact that the deck hands are not included in the quarters and the mass of other employees on the large boats who are not able seamen. The deck crew is only those who manipulate the boat, and they really should all be able seamen on passenger vessels. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. When the La Follette Act went into force in 1915, how much percentage of able seamen was required in the deck crew?

Mr. GAHN. I think that the Great Lakes always carried a higher quality of seamen on the decks than did the ships on the ocean. But do not allow them to retard from that position. But it is not a question of financing the boat lines. Vessels are not being taken off the Lakes on account of the seamen's act. There is more tonnage on the Great Lakes to-day than ever before.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I do not think that is the fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in my time I will read an amendment that I wish to offer.

Page 3, line 3, after the word "waters" strike out "fifty" and insert in place thereof "sixty-five."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman that this is general debate, and after the general debate is closed amendments will be in the hands of the gentleman having the bill in charge.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCOTT], who opened this debate, spoke in high terms of the prominent men who petitioned for the passage of the original measure; and yet the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, which reported the pending bill, have told you, in effect, that the original bill for which those prominent men petitioned was one that they could not support, because it was absolutely indefensible. You can get men to sign their names to almost any kind of a petition.

The gentleman from Michigan said a good deal about short runs of 2 or 3 miles on the Great Lakes, with only a few passengers on a boat. But I know of an 85-mile run on Lake Michigan, on which I have frequently seen a great vessel loaded with from 2,500 to 3,000 passengers.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] complained because, as he asserted, the seaman's act increased the cost of operating ships. But did he say one word about the safeguards which the seaman's act has thrown around human life? Not a syllable. He was concerned only about the increased cost of operation.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have only five minutes, and I regret that I can not yield. The gentleman from New York also spoke of short runs on the Great Lakes, but he might well have remembered that a ship need not go far from shore in order to become a death trap; he might well have remembered the sinking of the Slocum, in the river in New York City, and the drowning of a thousand persons within a little distance of his own home.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. With a 100 per cent life-saving equipment on board.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I could answer that by reminding the gentleman from Michigan that the 100 per cent life-saving equipment which he speaks of was made up of rotten life preservers, and that the scoundrels who left the rotten equipment on that boat——

Mr. NOLAN. Oh, the gentleman must know that the La Follette Act did not apply to the Slocum.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do know that it did not.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] should have remembered that danger to passengers does not require that the boat shall be 3 miles from shore or 500 miles from shore. The Slocum sank in his own river 15 yards from shore. The owners of the Slocum were out to make money; they thought only about the cost of operation. And so it will always be if men are to care more for making profits than for protecting human life.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I regret that I can not yield, as I have only a few minutes. The gentleman from New York made one statement which I think he will on reflection agree with me is not at all well founded. He said that the able seaman only polishes the brass and scrubs up the floors—something, I presume he meant to imply, like Sir Joseph in Pinafore, the head of the King's "navee," who polished up the handle of the big front door; and the gentleman asked how such a man could gain experience that would be of any value to passengers on a sinking ship.

The gentleman forgets that a man who has had a year and a half of active service as a sailor on the Great Lakes and has secured a certificate from the United States Department of Commerce, showing that he has had such year and a half of service, will undoubtedly have been through storm after storm, and in this and in many other ways have acquired much very valuable knowledge of what to do in the presence of danger. On the ocean, in order to have a certificate as an able seaman, a man must have had three years of active service on board. He, too, will in that time have learned what to do in cases of emergency when a mistake by one without experience might send hundreds to death. The sudden alarm, the horror of the situation, and the utter helplessness of passengers—I have been through it all, as has also the gentleman from Alabama, and I know that the memory of it must come home to him, as it does to me, with appalling force. I am sure that the gentleman from New York will see how great would be the difference in such an emergency between the man who has only a certificate that he can row a boat, a mere "certificated lifeboat man" of the kind mentioned in this bill, and a man who has had the experience and the training of an able seaman. One is unskilled, the other is skilled labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman the other two minutes remaining of my time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On the Great Lakes there are sometimes terrific storms. I live on the shore of Lake Michigan, and I know of a vessel being driven from in front of my Lake port to the city of Chicago and wrecked on the beach there, 60 miles away.

You propose in this bill to reduce the number of able seamen from 65 to 50 per cent; that is, to reduce by 15 per cent the number of men who have had real practical experience as sailors. That is all there is to it.

In other words, in lieu of the 15 per cent of able seamen you do away with, you propose to substitute 15 per cent of men who are amateurs, who know nothing about the duties that they would be called upon to perform in case of emergency, and you thus propose to lessen the protection now afforded to human life. A 10,000-ton vessel on the Great Lakes employs only 10 men on the deck under the present 65 per cent requirement, 7 of these being able seamen and the other 3, to make up the 10, can be boys. You propose to reduce that number by 15 per cent. This would do away with two able seamen and leave in the deck crew only five skilled men. One of these is boatswain and must stay on deck during the day. The other four able seamen would be divided into two watches of only two able seamen each. One of these two must steer and the other keep the lookout, and thus leave absolutely no qualified man to come with relief in case of sickness or any emergency. This may save a little money, but it will add materially to the danger to human life afloat on the Great Lakes. Economy should not be the watchword, the only consideration, when it comes to the protection of human life. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I yield four and a half minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. SHREVE.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Speaker, I was a Member of Congress when the La Follette Act was passed, and there were some of us at that time who believed that the bill could not be applied to the Great Lakes. Now that five or six years have rolled by, we find that the conditions are exactly as we thought they were going to be, with the packet and passenger boats driven off the Great Lakes except between the large cities. I live in the city of Erie. I have lived all of my life along the chain of lakes, and my family before me, and when I talk to you I know exactly what I am talking about. There is no theory about it. In the first place, I want to speak about this idle rumor here to-day that this is a fight on labor unions. That is absolutely not true. Nor is it true that this is an entering wedge to destroy the La Follette Act. We are here, a few of us, trying to get back some of our ancient rights, some of the things that were given us originally, some of the things that we enjoyed on the Great Lakes for years and years. We have never had any of these horrifying accidents that you have just heard about. As long as I can remember I can not recall a single accident on the Great Lakes. I do remember when I was a little boy of my mother singing a song about some boat that went down on Lake Erie about 1812 or 1813.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman stated that the passenger and packet business had been practically destroyed. According to the figures submitted by Mr. SCOTT of Michigan, in 1914 the total number of passengers carried on the Great Lakes was fourteen million and odd.

Mr. SHREVE. Well, that is absolutely true. I am speaking of my home city here of Erie. Let me tell you. There was a big passenger line from there to Buffalo, a four hours' run. Then we have the terminal of the Pennsylvania Railroad. We have the terminal of the Erie & Pittsburgh Road. We have the terminal of the Bessemer & Lake Erie Road. We are also situated on the New York Central and the Nickel Plate, and there was a time when the Pittsburgh laboring man had an opportunity to come up to Erie and go to Buffalo on the Great Lakes. There was an opportunity for those worthy people within miles and miles around to enjoy the privileges of the Great Lakes. To-day these things are absolutely shut off. The run from Erie to Buffalo is gone.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Is it not a fact that the automobile and other means of transportation have displaced water transportation?

Mr. SHREVE. Oh, no; it can never displace water transportation.

Mr. MADDEN. People who ride on a 50-cent excursion can not afford an automobile.

Mr. SHREVE. No; they can not afford an automobile. Another thing: There was the C. & B. Line, between Cleveland, Erie, and Buffalo, which would start at Cleveland, drop down leisurely to Erie, pick up a crowd, go to Buffalo, and come back and get back home toward 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning. That is gone; and the last thing to go is the old Anchor Line, which for a half century ran to principal ports. We are really left to-day without a single passenger ship, without a single packet. Now, all I am pleading for is——

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHREVE. I will.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the gentleman believe that to reduce the difference between 65 and 50 per cent, being 15 per cent, would put on additional vessels?

Mr. SHREVE. Will it——

Mr. MORGAN. Just that question.

Mr. SHREVE. I will answer it.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the gentleman believe that there will be any material reduction in the cost by reducing the number of men by 15 per cent?

Mr. SHREVE. Absolutely; because the men are not needed.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. They are simply on there now for the purpose of complying with the law. They are not used. Everybody who came before the committee said they are not using the men.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to ask the gentleman, if he has a 12-hour day in the engine room on the Great Lakes ships and an 8-hour day in Puget Sound, if he is not likely to find himself without employees at all?

Mr. SHREVE. Yes; certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And no ships and no transportation.

Mr. SHREVE. And no business.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will let me answer the question, I will say that the La Follette bill does not apply to Puget Sound.

Mr. SHREVE. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five and a half minutes.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I can not yield. I yield three and a half minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, in these brief moments which now remain for discussion I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the opposition to this measure on the floor has been based more upon apprehensions, misgivings, and fears as to what may happen if this bill should become the law than upon any argument as to what the bill itself actually does provide. Men say that they are afraid it is an attack upon the La Follette law generally; they say they fear it is an attack upon organized labor. Let us consider this bill on its own merits. Organized or unorganized labor need have no fear as to its treatment at the hands of this House or any House of the American Congress. They have never suffered at the hands of the Congress, and I want to say to them that this bill is not going to injure them, but it seeks to help the very men who employ them and give them their work by which they are able to support themselves and their families. Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the subcommittee of Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee which considered this bill. We sat together with gentlemen on the other side, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS], and three members from this side. We considered every angle of the question. We finally reached a conclusion upon this bill, and I think it is the minimum that can be passed by this House and by this Congress for the purpose of relieving the serious situation on the Great Lakes. The Legislature of Michigan unanimously passed a resolution asking Congress for this kind of legislation. Large cities upon the Great Lakes, the chambers of commerce, men who understand the shipping industry, all are unanimously in favor of it. It seeks only to remedy the unfortunate and unhappy condition on the Great Lakes. There need be no fear that it will affect the seamen's act generally. The House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries is a conservative body. It is a body friendly to labor and friendly to capital, and it has not reported now, and I do not believe it ever has heretofore reported, a bill which would injure either one of those interests, and we should not be led astray by fears and apprehensions as to things that do not exist in the pending bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman from Michigan allow me to ask a question?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Not out of a minute and a half.

Mr. LOWREY. It is of interest in the gentleman's bill. I wish the gentleman would restate the attitude of the laboring men themselves. What attitude have they taken? The gentleman spoke of its being to their interest, and I want to get that.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I have not time to repeat the proposition. I know how they feel about that because I was one of them for several years and I know the men who work on ships prefer a 6-hour watch, except in the fireroom, to a 4-hour watch.

Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, on line 24, page 2, after the word "fireroom," to insert "or in the engine room."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCOTT of Michigan: Page 2, line 24, after the word "fireroom," insert the words "or in the engine room."

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. NOLAN. To offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield for that purpose?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be permitted time in extension of the time allotted by the House of half a minute, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be given recognition for half a minute to offer an amendment.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know if I can not propound a parliamentary inquiry before that request is put?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman may do so.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If unanimous consent is given in this case, does not the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCOTT] then lose the right to move the previous question and lose the floor, and thereby lose the right to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the request of the gentleman from Michigan for unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be permitted to offer an amendment does not cause him to lose his right to move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage, including the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan if he is in favor of the proposed amendment?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. As offered by Mr. NOLAN?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I am not in favor of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is he not, then, going to reserve some time to answer the argument in favor of that amendment?

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. No. We have argued it out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask in connection with that unanimous-consent request that five minutes be given to anyone who desires to oppose the amendment, so that in case the membership is not in favor of it, it can be answered and——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have that privilege by submitting a supplemental unanimous-consent request. It is now his privilege to object.

Mr. BLANTON. I object for the present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that lines 23, 24, and 25 be read as they would read if this amendment of the gentleman from Michigan is adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York will state his point of order.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman from Michigan did not make the motion while he had time. The time has already expired and he is too late with his motion.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I am entitled to recognition.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman is late with his motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the time consumed by propounding parliamentary inquiries was not taken out of the time that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCOTT] had at his disposal. Furthermore, the Chair will state that no other person was demanding recognition, and the gentleman from Michigan, having charge of the bill, had the right to move the previous question. He is within his rights in moving it. What is the request the gentleman from Michigan wishes to submit? The Chair understood that he wished to submit one pending his motion for the previous question.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan for the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Prior to that I ask unanimous consent that, pending the consideration of the previous question, and without losing any of my rights on the previous question, the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] be permitted to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan, pending the motion to order the previous question, asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may have the right to offer an amendment without the gentleman from Michigan losing his right to move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage. Is there objection?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] has an amendment which he wishes to offer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands the regular order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] is recognized to offer an amendment in accordance with the understanding just had in the House.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. Is not the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan offered as a substitute to the committee amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; it is a perfecting amendment. The Chair would say to the gentleman from Georgia that within the hour's time the gentleman from Michigan had the right to offer an amendment, and the only way he can offer his amendment would be in the hour at his disposal. Inasmuch as the amendment is an amendment to the committee amendment, it should, of course, take precedence.

Mr. CRISP. I am in perfect accord with the Speaker.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that for the information of the House the amendments which were offered by myself and by the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] be read.

The SPEAKER. There is no need for asking unanimous consent. The amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] will be reported.

Mr. STEVENSON rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Carolina rise?

Mr. STEVENSON. I rise to ask if the motion for the previous question has yet been voted on?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NOLAN: Page 2, line 21, after the word "oilers," strike out the word "and," and on line 22, after the word "tenders," strike out all of line 22 and the words "hours out of 24 hours," on line 23; also strike out the word "the" after the word "and" on line 23, so that as amended the committee amendment will read: "And provided further, That the oilers, water tenders, and firemen shall not be required to be on duty in the fireroom more than 8 hours out of 24 hours."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on ordering the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. In the consideration of this bill in the House the bill is not read under the 5-minute rule for amendment, is it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a House Calendar bill, and the 5-minute rule does not apply to bills on the House Calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Only those amendments that have been offered within the two hours or offered by unanimous consent are to be considered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RAKER. Under subdivision 7 of Rule XXIV does not the rule operate automatically and close debate at the end of two hours without the previous question? It says that "not more than two hours of general debate shall be had" on a bill called up on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman confuses the application of the rules relating to bills on the Union Calendar with those on the House Calendar. The provision the gentleman from California calls attention to applies only to bills on the Union Calendar. It has never been considered as applicable to bills on the House Calendar.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the regular order. The question is on ordering the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first vote occurs on the first committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "hours," strike out "including the time in port when the respective members of the crew are required to be on duty."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, strike out the word "sailors."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 17, strike out the word "sailors."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 21, insert, after the word "vessel," the words "And provided further, That the oilers and water tenders shall not be required to be on duty more than 12 hours out of 24 hours, and the fireman shall not be required to be on duty in the fireroom more than 8 hours out of 24 hours."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SCOTT] perfecting the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCOTT of Michigan: Page 2, line 24, after the word "fireroom," insert the words "or the engine room."

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer my amendment, if I understand the situation aright, as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's amendment would then be in the third degree; it was offered under unanimous consent and is more in the nature of a substitute than an amendment to the amendment. The first vote will be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, which is a perfecting amendment.

The question was taken, and the Scott amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NOLAN: Page 2, line 21, after the word "oilers," strike out the word "and"; on line 22, after the word "tenders," strike out all of line 22 and the words "hours out of 24 hours" on line 23; also strike out the word "the," after the word "and," on line 23.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 67.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California makes the point of no quorum. Obviously there is no quorum present. There is an automatic call of the House. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the amendment will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 113, not voting 152, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All the amendments which have been offered having been considered, the question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. GAHN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GAHN. To make a motion to recommit with instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at the proper time. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. GAHN. Mr. Speaker, I make a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. GAHN. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to make a motion to recommit. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GAHN] offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GAHN moves to recommit the bill H. R. 6754 to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries with instructions to report forthwith the same back to the House with an amendment striking out of the bill in line 3, page 3, the figures "50" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "65."

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GAHN and Mr. LONDON) there were 88 ayes and 120 noes.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifty-seven Members are present, a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 129, nays 159, not voting 143, as follows:

YEAS—129.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CULLEN (for) with Mr. UNDERHILL (against).

Additional general pairs:

Mr. STINESS with Mr. SABATH.

Mr. KREIDER with Mr. FIELDS.

Mr. HUSTED with Mr. DREWRY.

Mr. CONNELL with Mr. RUCKER.

Mr. WHEELER with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. VOLK with Mr. COCKRAN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was being taken, when Mr. NOLAN made the point that no quorum was present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not recognize the gentleman to make that point, for the reason that the roll call just had disclosed more than a quorum.

Mr. NOLAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the Chair announces the vote the Chair desires to say that the enrolling clerk informs him that the quotation marks were omitted at the end of the paragraph on page 2, line 25, which is an obvious typographical mistake. Without objection, that amendment will be made as a part of the engrossed bill.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this vote the ayes are 198 and the noes are 52.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were yeas 190, nays 102, not voting 139, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. UNDERHILL (for) with Mr. CULLEN (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. DYER with Mr. LOGAN.

Mr. MONDELL with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "no"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening, when his name was called?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I really do not know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. SCOTT of Michigan, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONFERENCE REPORT—ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I submit herewith a conference report on the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, is it a complete report or a partial report?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is a partial report, but I will say that the conference has reached an agreement on practically every item in the bill, except the one for the pay of the Army, which it is proposed to submit to the House to-morrow along with the other legislative items.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman expects to take the bill up to-morrow?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; if it can be so arranged.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. COOPER of Ohio, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MOORE of Illinois, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BELL, for four days, on account of official business.

To Mr. STEENERSON, for three days, to enable him to attend meeting of Joint Commission on Postal Service in New York City.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 16, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 16, 1921.

(Legislative day of Monday, June 13, 1921.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6754) to amend sections 2, 13, and 14 of an act entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea," approved March 4, 1915, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that, in accordance with the provisions of Senate concurrent resolution 4, the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. MILLS, Mr. FUNK, Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, and Mr. TEN EYCK as members on the part of the House of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 4091) granting the consent of Congress to the Borderland Coal Corporation to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, in Mingo County, W. Va., and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as amended.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the Senate must determine to-day the measure of the powers which it will vest in the executive branch of the Government for the regulation of the packing industry and the cognate business of buying, selling, and disposing of cattle in the stockyards. We purpose to establish an effective governmental control of the business of slaughtering live stock and the businesses immediately related thereto. At the last session the Senate passed a bill which, with negligible changes, is before us again as the Senate bill. At this session of the Congress the House has passed a bill which is likewise before us. As the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has pointed out, there is much in common between the two bills. Not only is their purpose the same but in good part the machinery which they purpose to set up is similar. They confer upon the Secretary of Agriculture, or a commissioner in the Agricultural Department, certain powers. They vest in the Secretary or the commissioner powers now vested in the Federal Trade Commission. The two bills purpose to put an end to old abuses, to prevent their recurrence, or the growth of new abuses. There are many Senators, like myself, who long have believed that legislation of this character was necessary not only because the live-stock men and the consumers of live-stock products had grievances and were entitled to redress and protection but because we believed that it was contrary to public policy that a great industry which in one way or another affected a majority of our fellow citizens should be dominated by a few persons, natural or corporate, without control. The issue before us, then, is not that of control but of the character of control to be established by law. The problem is difficult. It is so difficult and so complex that the most painstaking examination of the plans submitted to Congress and the most careful labor in the preparation of the bills is due the public. There are some of us, frankly, who complain that the committee of the Senate, which has seen fit to modify the project of law which it reported at the last session, failed to examine minutely and at length the differences between the two bills before it decided summarily to reject the House bill in favor of the Senate bill.

I would be the last to gainsay that the members of the Senate committee considered the problem at length last year and the year before, but I do say that the Senate and the country were justly entitled to expect that the committee, before it submitted to the Senate the alternative of deciding for the House or for the Senate bill, should carefully have weighed every important difference between the two measures. I venture to ask Senators to weigh certain provisions of the Senate bill, not only in their bearing on the packing and live-stock industries but as calculated to establish a departure from our legal practice. There is no exact analogy between what is now purposed to be done by the Senate bill and the several statutes on the one hand regulating railroad transportation and on the other creating, first, the Bureau of Corporations and then the Federal Trade Commission. The body of railroad law grew by slow degrees.

The railroads themselves exist by virtue of certain quasisovereign powers granted to them by the legislature, to acquire rights of way by eminent domain, and within limits to exercise police powers; to create what, in effect, are public highways. These grants of power presume that corresponding to them there shall be vested in the Government, authority to supervise and control the exercise of the powers so granted. Our railroad legislation has resulted in the creation within the States, and under the Federal Government, of great administrative tribunals, to which have been delegated powers which under the Constitution inhere in Congress. Those tribunals, within limits, exercise an authority at once legislative, judicial, and executive. The tribunals themselves are composed of considerable numbers of men, representative of the grand geographical divisions of the country, and of different economic elements in our life. In a certain sense this is true of the Federal Trade Commission. It was vested with powers greater than those of the Bureau of Corporations, and considering this investment, Congress determined that a commission, rather than an individual, should exercise those powers in order the better to insure against their abuse. Nevertheless, the Federal Trade Commission during recent years, and after its first members were replaced by others, adopted a course which has led millions of our countrymen and many of us here to believe that it has become an agency of propaganda and prosecution rather than an instrument for the calm, equitable, and judicial arbitrament of disputes and the correction of abuses. Despite the lessons to be read in the history of the legislation leading to the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, the Senate bill before us proposes to create a commissioner in whose sole person shall be vested powers which are legislative, executive, and judicial. His judgment is qualified by those of no colleagues, and as I shall presently try to make plain, by no full and untrammeled appeal to a superior court such as imposes caution and moderation upon a judge. I could go far in the study of the Senate bill before us to find argument to adduce in support of my view, but I prefer to ask the Senate especially to give its attention to certain provisions of the so-called Senate bill, notably, sections 6, 10, 12, 20, and 21, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in this context.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The sections are as follows:

SEC. 6. The commissioner, upon his own initiative or in cooperation with existing governmental agencies, shall investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply, consumption costs, and prices of, and all other facts relating to, the ownership, production, transportation, manufacture, storage, handling, or distribution of live stock or live-stock products, including operations of and the ownership of stockyards.

SEC. 10. The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government or of any State or political subdivision thereof or with any person.

SEC. 12. It shall be unlawful for any packer to—

(a) Engage in any unfair, or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce, or in any deceptive practice or device to cheat or defraud in commerce; or

(b) Sell or otherwise transfer to or for any other packer, or buy or otherwise receive from or for any other packer, any live stock or live-stock products for the purpose of apportioning the supply between any such packers, or unreasonably affecting the price of or creating a monopoly in the acquisition of buying, selling, or dealing in live stock or live-stock products in commerce; or

(c) Engage or participate in any manner, either directly or indirectly, in the business of purchasing, manufacturing, storing, or selling foodstuffs other than live-stock products, where the effect of such participation in such business may be substantially to lessen competition in or to restrain commerce or to tend to create a monopoly in commerce.

SEC. 20. Whenever the commissioner believes that any packer or operator is violating any provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, he shall cause notice in writing to be served upon such packer or operator, specifying the alleged violations, and requiring such packer or operator to attend and testify at a hearing before him at a time and place designated therein; and at such time and place the commissioner shall afford to such packer or operator a reasonable opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel and through witnesses under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe. If, after such hearing, the commissioner finds that such packer or operator has violated any provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, he shall make a report in writing in which he shall state his findings as to the facts, and shall issue and cause to be served on such packer or operator an order requiring such packer or operator to cease and desist from continuing such violations. The testimony taken at the hearing before the commissioner shall be reduced to writing and filed in the records of the Department of Agriculture. Until a transcript of the record in such hearing shall have been filed in a circuit court of appeals of the United States, as hereinafter provided, the commissioner may at any time, upon such notice and in such manner as he shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any report or any order made or issued by him.

SEC. 21. An order requiring a packer or operator to cease and desist from violating any provision of this act, or any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, shall be final and conclusive unless within 30 days after service the packer or operator appeals to the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which it has its principal place of business by filing with the clerk of such court a written petition praying that the commissioner's order be set aside or modified in the manner stated in the petition, together with a bond in such sum as the court may determine, conditioned that such packer or operator will pay the costs of the proceedings if the court so directs. The clerk of the court in which such a petition is filed shall immediately cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the commissioner, and he shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in the court a full and accurate transcript of the record in such proceedings, including the notice to the packer or operator, a copy of the charges, the evidence, and the report and order. The testimony and evidence taken or submitted before the commissioner, duly certified and filed as aforesaid as a part of the record, shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case. The proceedings in such cases in the circuit court of appeals shall be made a preferred cause and shall be expedited in every way. Such court may affirm or set aside the order of the commissioner or may direct him to modify his order. No such order of the commissioner shall be modified or set aside by the circuit court of appeals unless it is shown by the packer or operator that the order is unsupported by the weight of the evidence or was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded to such packer or operator for a hearing, or infringes the Constitution of the United States, or is beyond the jurisdiction of the commissioner.

If the court determines that the just and proper disposition of such an appeal requires the taking of additional evidence, the court shall order such additional evidence to be taken before the commissioner in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper. The commissioner may modify his findings as to the facts, or make new findings by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and he shall file such modified or new findings and his recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of his original order with the return of such additional evidence. If the circuit court of appeals affirms or modifies the order of the commissioner, its decree shall operate as an injunction to enjoin the packer or operator, and its officers, agents, and employees from further violating the provisions of the order or modified order.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, Senators ought to ponder carefully the language of sections 6 and 10. Section 6 is as follows:

The commissioner, upon his own initiative or in cooperation with existing governmental agencies, shall investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply, consumption costs, and prices of, and all other facts relating to—

And so forth. Section 10 reads:

The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, or with any person.

The commissioner may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

There are seven subsections in section 12, designed to correct and to prevent abuses, of course. It is their patent purpose to make impossible unfair competition, unjust discrimination, and combination or conspiracy. That is a most admirable purpose. It is an end not only important but necessary to be achieved.

But, Mr. President, it can not be the considered intention of Congress in its determination to put an end to certain abuses at the same time by its own act to lay the foundation for other abuses, and especially that abuse of power, that vindictive and prejudiced pursuit of the individual, that interference with free initiative which we Americans prize so highly. The development of a complex society leads inevitably to the burdens of administration and to the growing responsibility of government for the protection of the individual against oppression by his powerful fellows. At the same time we must move carefully lest the officers whom we create by law shall become oppressors in the stead of those whom we would restrain.

There are, as I have said, several subdivisions in section 12. Let me read the first three, and I ask Senators especially to consider the third in the light of section 10:

It shall be unlawful for any packer to—

(a) Engage in any unfair or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce or in any deceptive practice to cheat or defraud in commerce; or

(b) Sell or otherwise transfer to or for any other packer or buy or otherwise receive from or for any other packer any live stock or live-stock products for the purpose of apportioning the supply between any such packers or unreasonably affecting the price of or creating a monopoly in the acquisition of buying, selling, or dealing in live stock or live-stock products in commerce; or—

So far, so good. Now, mark you!

(c) Engage or participate in any manner, either directly or indirectly, in the business of purchasing, manufacturing, storing, or selling foodstuffs other than live-stock products, where the effect of such participation in such business may be substantially to lessen competition in or to restrain commerce or to tend to create a monopoly in commerce.

Then in section 6 it is provided that—

The commissioner, upon his own initiative * * * shall investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply, consumption costs, and prices of, and all other facts relating to * * * live stock or live-stock products, including operations of and the ownership of stockyards.

It is further provided in section 10 that—

The commissioner * * * may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. * * *

That is to say, he may make such rules as in his discretion are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and must determine in his discretion if under subdivision (c) the packer engages in any manufacturing the effect of which may tend substantially to lessen competition. Consider the vast discretion which is imposed upon the commissioner under the terms of the provisions which I have just read. He is to be the sole judge whether the manufacture of a certain article even tends to lessen competition; he is to make the rules in the exercise of his sole judgment and upon his sole initiative.

If Senators will turn to section 20 they will learn that—

Whenever the commissioner believes that any packer or operator is violating any provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder—

He may summon the offending packer to appear before him—and shall issue and cause to be served on such packer or operator an order to cease and desist from continuing such violations.

Note, Mr. President, that the act of "any agent or other person acting for him," under section 19, is the act of any principal violating the rule.

What is the cumulative effect of these provisions? The commissioner, upon his own initiative, when no complaint has been made by anybody in any quarter, may issue a rule to regulate or forbid an act which may in his judgment tend—

Substantially to lessen competition * * * or tend to create a monopoly.

That is in the sole discretion of the commissioner, who in turn becomes the judge of the observance or violation of his own rule as to what may lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly. There is no clear provision for a hearing before he issues his rule, and a study of sections 20 and 21 will show that there is no provision that on appeal any hearing may be had as to the reasonableness or the justice of a rule or regulation issued by the commissioner in his discretion.

Whenever the commissioner believes—that any packer or operator is violating any provision of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, he shall cause a notice in writing to be served upon such packer, specifying the alleged violations and requiring such packer to attend and testify at a hearing before him.

Thus the hearing is held, not for the purpose of testing the reasonableness or justice of the rule or regulation, but to determine if the packer or his agent has violated the provisions of the act and the rules issued under its terms by the commissioner. If there has been a violation of the rule without regard to its reasonableness, an order will issue to cease and desist. There is, to be sure, under section 21 an appeal to the circuit court of appeals, but under drastic limits, specifically set down in the section, which reads as follows:

No such order of the commissioner shall be modified or set aside by the circuit court of appeals unless it is shown by the packer or operator—

And let us note that the operator is anyone who is doing business in the stockyards—that the order is unsupported by the weight of evidence or was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been offered to such packer or operator for a hearing, or infringes the Constitution of the United States or is beyond the jurisdiction of the commissioner.

Mr. President, under the language of the bill which I have quoted, what is the "weight of evidence" or the "jurisdiction of the commissioner"? It is further set down that the burden of proof in such an appeal is entirely on the operator or the packer. If this bill becomes law as it now stands, there will be vested in the commissioner great and undefined powers, the exercise of which might be salutary if the commissioner were a man of great wisdom, experience, and impartiality, but which, if he were prejudiced or dishonest, would result in irreparable and inestimable injury not only to the dealers, the commission men, and the packers, but to the live-stock producers of the country. This is the vice of the so-called Senate bill. The House bill provides that before the commissioner shall issue an order there shall be a complaint, and, further, that on appeal the circuit court shall be the judge of the reasonableness and justice of the orders and rules. This is conformable to our immemorial practice. Here is preserved our ancient right, for which our fathers fought, for which in generations past they braved kings, because of which we cherish the memory of Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights. Here is the principle, indeed, on which we fought the Revolution.

It requires no vivid imagination to see that if in the not-distant future the consumers of live-stock products were greatly to outnumber the live-stock raisers, a very slight amendment of the provisions of the Senate bill might vest in the commissioner powers to fix prices of live stock and to make rules for their raising and marketing, which would place the farmers of the United States at the absolute mercy of the commissioner, so that he might injure them as directly and certainly as he might indirectly and certainly destroy them under the provisions of the pending bill.

I submit, Mr. President, that in seeking to accomplish a long-sought and long-needed reform the draftsmen of this bill have imported into our jurisprudence a principle alien to it, although common enough to the law of continental Europe, familiar to the Napoleonic code and the Prussian code and the old czaristic Russian code, a principle under which an individual is invested with legislative, judicial, and executive power, to issue lettres de cachê, to make rules, and to condemn the violators thereof, he himself to be the sole judge of the reasonableness of his own rules and of the violation of them.

I can hazard no conjecture as to the action of the majority of the Senators to-day in deciding the issue before us, but I make bold to say that the arbitrary powers purposed to be vested in the commissioner by this bill will not be vested in him by law any more than the last Congress finally denied to men the right to strike as proposed by the railroad bill which passed the Senate. The crux of the difference between us is simple, it is elemental, and fundamental. If we establish the arbitrary and tyrannical principle purposed now to be established in the so-called Senate bill, it will hold not only for one industry but ultimately for all industries. It is one of the characteristics of modern society that the number of administrative tribunals increases as the powers conferred upon them increase. If such powers be necessary, the only protection which society can have from its own agents thus created is to establish orderly processes for the filing of charges and of complaints, for hearings, for the promulgation of rules, for the handing down of decrees, and finally, and above all, for the wide review of the facts, the rules, and their justice by the appellate tribunals established for that purpose.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires to proceed. If so, I will be very glad to yield to him.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not desire to speak at this moment.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I wish to be perfectly fair about the division of the time remaining for discussion on the bill, and I was waiting for the Senator to speak at this time, if he prefers to speak now. However, if the Senator does not care to proceed, if he will indicate how much time he desires, or how much time those opposed to the bill may desire, I will limit my remarks.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the virtual understanding last night was that the two hours should be divided equally, and therefore I shall only be entitled to 30 minutes, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I will certainly see that the Senator gets the 30 minutes and possibly more.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, if I have exceeded the time which by implication was allotted to me, I wish to apologize to the Senator from Iowa. I had no such purpose.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has done nothing of the kind.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not even an imputation that the Senator has done so. The Senator was entitled to take all the time which he used.

Mr. KENYON. We have been trying to be fair about the division of time, and it would be manifestly unfair for either side of this debate to occupy the floor up to the time of voting. I wish to say that if other Senators want to be heard on this bill during the one hour allotted to those who favor the bill, I will be very glad to limit what I have to say so that they may have time, if they will indicate their desire in any way.

Mr. President, I have spoken so often on the general subject of packer regulation in this Chamber that with some hesitancy

I now enter into this discussion, but I think there have been so many unintentional misrepresentations and unintentional misstatements that it is fair, at least, that those of us who support this measure should try to make our position clear.

Mr. President, I am not going to quarrel with other men's judgment about measures. The tendency, of course, is to become enamored of a cause or of opposition to a cause and sometimes to be unfair. We all have that tendency, and I have felt so deeply the necessity for some legislation to regulate, in the interest of the American producer and the American consumer as well, the great market places of this country so that there may be a fair chance for all, that I think some of my friends think, perhaps at times, I have bordered on being unfair, but I have not intended to be and I do not want to be this morning.

The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] a few days ago inquired as to the need for any such legislation. That is a pertinent point. Outside of all the difficult legal questions involved, if there is no reason for this legislation it certainly ought not to be enacted. I have said before and now repeat that, in my judgment, this legislation is based upon and arises out of the report of the Federal Trade Commission.

If it had not been for that report, I doubt if legislation would have been proposed as it has been since the time of that report. If the Senator from Oregon had ever read that report, unless he absolutely disbelieved everything that the Federal Trade Commission said, he would have seen some basis for this legislation. If the report of the Federal Trade Commission is false, then we do not have a substantial basis at present to urge this legislation; but it never has been proven to be false. Here and there certain things have been questioned, but the general scope of the conclusions of the Federal Trade Commission has not been successfully denied.

Now, what were they, just in brief?—

That five great packing concerns of the country—

I am reading from the report—

Swift, Armour, Morris, Cudahy, and Wilson—have attained such a dominant position that they control at will the market in which they buy their supplies, the market in which they sell their products, and hold the fortunes of their competitors in their hands.

Not only is the business of gathering, preparing, and selling meat products in their control, but an almost countless number of by-product industries are similarly dominated; and not content with reaching out for mastery as to commodities which substitute for meat and its by-products, they have invaded allied industries and even unrelated ones.

The combination has not stopped at the most minute integration but has gone on into a stage of conglomeration, so that unrelated heterogeneous enterprises are brought under control.

As we have followed these five great corporations through their amazing and devious ramifications—followed them through important branches of industry, of commerce, and of finance—we have been able to trace back to its source the great power which has made possible their growth.

And here:

The producer of live stock is at the mercy of these five companies because they control the market and the marketing facilities and, to some extent, the rolling stock which transports the product to the market.

The competitors of these five concerns are at their mercy because of the control of the market places, storage facilities, and the refrigerator cars for distribution.

The consumer of meat products is at the mercy of these five, because both producer and competitor are helpless to bring relief.

Those statements are taken from the report of the Federal Trade Commission to the President of the United States; and, if they are true, it is time that in the interest of the people of this country some action was taken. When you come to consider whether they are true or not, you come to the question of whether confidence can be placed in the Federal Trade Commission. That is getting to be an old issue. We have seen the attempt made here to injure the Federal Trade Commission by cutting down its appropriations. It has generally failed. We see the effort made to take away parts of its jurisdiction here and there, to cripple it; and, if that does not succeed, I predict that you will see an attempt made to change the personnel of the Federal Trade Commission. It is the one institution in the way of commissions that is left in this country in which the people have unlimited confidence. The Federal Trade Commission have had to go against every kind of scheme and intrigue, as they show in their report. They have had to cross swords with the highest-priced lawyers and agents that can be found in the whole country. They have tried to turn on the light upon a few of the great monopolies in this Nation, so there comes the cry to "destroy the Federal Trade Commission; let business alone; it is interfering with business."

Just a few days ago the Federal Trade Commission filed a report on the lumber industry that will arouse the ire of the gentlemen engaged in cornering the prices of lumber to the American people. In that report, dated Thursday, June 9, they say:

Between 1915 and 1920 wholesale quotations on fir lumber increased from 300 per cent to 500 per cent, and most items doubled in price after the armistice. Notwithstanding substantial reductions since the spring of 1920 on some items, quotations still range about as they were in May and June, 1919. Fir logs are quoted as of May 1, 1921, at prices identical with those which were fixed by the War Industries Board as the war-time maximum, and which the loggers continued in force as the minimum until June of 1919.

And these gentlemen who have had the lumber combination, who have marked up the quotations on fir lumber from 300 to 500 per cent, will, with their lobbies, be infesting the city of Washington demanding a high protective tariff on lumber. The Federal Trade Commission went into this matter. It disturbs business. Business that makes from 300 to 500 per cent profit ought to be disturbed where it is done through creating a monopoly to rob the American people, and some people in this country are not going to be a bit frightened at the cry of "Keep your hands off business" and "Keep away from regulation of business."

Since this report has been filed you will see throughout the land, wherever the great lumber interests can concentrate against the Federal Trade Commission, that they will open up their 16-inch guns upon it. A short time ago this meddlesome commission, meddling with business, as charged, started a hearing upon what is known as the Pittsburgh plus-rate fixing of prices on steel, steel produced in other parts of the country, whether shipped from Pittsburgh or not, raising the price to cover the rate of freight from Pittsburgh. Talk about price fixing! There was a fine sample of it. They did that. They brought down on their heads the resentment and the curses of the great steel interests of this country.

I pay tribute to these men on the Federal Trade Commission, who, through the pathway of sneers in the Senate, of attempts in the Senate to belittle them, have gone straight forward, with only one idea, to serve the people of the United States. If it is the purpose of reactionary leaders on the Republican side to help destroy the Federal Trade Commission, if that is the Philippi, they will be met at Philippi on that issue.

The last election is misunderstood, I fear, by some leaders. They think it was a mandate against the Federal Trade Commission. I do not believe that the plank referring to that in the Republican national platform influenced one vote in this country. The issue was Wilsonism. I do not want to be offensive, but that was the issue, and you Democrats all know it, and you were cleaned up on that issue. The Federal Trade Commission was not the issue. I suggest to our Republican leaders that great majorities are dangerous, and if they believe that the election was a mandate to take away all regulation of big business, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] argued yesterday, they have misunderstood the election returns. If you could submit to the people of this country the question of abolishing the Federal Trade Commission, nearly everybody would vote in favor of the Federal Trade Commission, except a few Senators in this body.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] and other Senators have sounded the slogan "Let business alone." "This is a bad bill." It interferes with business. We all agree that business must be prosperous to have a prosperous country.

Nobody wants to injure business. "More business in government" was the slogan of the campaign. That did not mean for big business to move in and take charge of the Government. It meant a business-like administration of affairs. The President is trying to bring that about. I do not think the American people voted for more business in government in the sense that some people have taken that to mean.

I do not know about this question of more business in government. When we vote here for an embargo on dyestuffs for the benefit of the great dye monopoly of this country, and the dyestuffs business gets into the Government in that way, I am a little undecided as to whether we can not have too much big business in government. And when the other schedules of the tariff come before us I suppose we will see some more of big business trying to take possession of the Government.

We see in the papers this morning an interview with a Member of this body warning against paternalism, warning against the Government taking any steps to regulate any of the great interests of this country. It is given space on the front pages of the papers. He suggests that there is a coal bill coming, and that is of great concern to him; and there is a coal bill coming. Will Senators sit around and say that the people of the United States are going through another winter like last winter, with coal prices as they were, and be lulled to sleep by the slogan "Let the coal business alone"? No; they are not going to do it.

We are met, of course, as we have been here, by the cry, "If you are going to regulate the packing business, then you are going to regulate all business."

No; that day will never come. I am no more for it myself than is anybody else. Public operation of the railroads has been a dismal failure. But that is the argument, and the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] almost shed tears over the fact that this bill would reach out and regulate the private butcher. It will not do it.

The former Senator from Illinois, Mr. Sherman, at the last session denounced us because we did not have the nerve to tackle the private butcher. Having just a few days ago gone to market and bought a leg of lamb, weighing 6 pounds, and paid $3.30 for it, I have not many tears to shed for the private butcher. I wish there was some way of regulating him.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator have any way of knowing whether that leg of lamb came off one of the lambs we were notified a week or two ago had been shipped to Chicago and sold for 42 cents apiece?

Mr. KENYON. I asked a Senator from the West what those lambs were selling for on the ranch, and he said if they could get $2.50 or $3 for them they would be delighted.

Mr. NORRIS. They can not get it.

Mr. KENYON. I do not think they can get that. But what is this doctrine of letting all business alone? Shall we repeal the meat inspection laws? Shall we repeal the pure food laws? Shall we repeal the law governing the railroad rates? I do not know. I am troubled about it. I do not want to see this Government go into the regulating of all business; but there is a distinct line of demarcation, and it was laid down by old Lord Hale nearly a hundred years ago, and the Supreme Court of the United States has sustained it. It is an important thing, because if this goes on I believe you are going to see this principle the rock upon which political parties will split in this country.

Shall we regulate all business? No; that would be a failure. Regulate some business? Yes. What business? The business which the Supreme Court has said is charged with a public use.

Oh, men reply, "Then you will regulate the shoes, regulate clothing, regulate all these things." No. You are regulating monopoly, and if in regulating monopoly you touch business, it is an incident to the regulation of monopoly. But if five men had all the shoe business of this country practically under their control, or enough of it to control it, and made the prices whatever they pleased, then you would be getting a business that was reaching the point of monopoly, and that the Government has a right to regulate.

There will soon come before the Senate a bill to regulate the coal business. The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who was chairman of the reconstruction committee, as I remember his statement, announced on the floor that the coal operators of this country had pillaged the American people a billion and a half dollars. I may be wrong about the size of the figures, but they were in that neighborhood; a few hundred million would not make much difference. One of those great operators indignantly denied the accusation, and said the Senator from New York was wrong, that they had not pillaged the American people over $500,000,000.

Do you think, on this proposition of "charged with a public use," where God Almighty has put a certain amount of hard coal into the ground in Pennsylvania for his people, that seven or eight railroad companies can acquire it and then say, "Keep your hands off of business. We can charge anything we please for this coal. It is true you have to have it. It is true there is in this little territory all the hard coal in the United States. But it is socialistic for you to talk about the Government having anything to do with it or any control over it."

Do you believe that kind of doctrine will ever stand in this country? I wish I could appeal to some of my friends here whom I think so much of, and whose wisdom I know, when they continually talk about all legislation like this as being socialistic. I wish they would look ahead, to this country trying to get out of the situation it is in; to discontent among our people, who are robbed by syndicates who are controlling the anthracite coal, and robbed and plundered by the men who are controlling the market place of the American farmer, and likewise controlling, in its eventuality, the cost to the consumer.

We ought to bear in mind, when we talk about regulating monopoly, that there is no right in monopoly. You are not destroying property when you destroy monopoly; and when a monopoly gets in the channels of interstate commerce as a great rock and obstructs its flow, it can be taken out. That is what we are trying to do by this measure.

Everybody knows there is a monopoly in the packing business. Men can talk here until they are black in the face about it and not prove the contrary. Five great packers have a monopoly of the meat-packing business of the United States, and they are reaching out into hundreds of other lines of business. Do you believe that the American people are ever going to submit to having five men control the food supply of the United States? If you do, you are mighty shortsighted.

I wish I could refer to a letter which I used here some time ago, from former Senator Weeks, but I am not going to have time. He wrote our committee, not indorsing this measure at all, but indorsing the proposition of the packers getting out of unrelated business, and calling attention to the monopolies which they were building up in unrelated lines of business. But I have not time to refer to that further. We have had as a maxim of law this proposition: "Let the buyer beware"—caveat emptor. That has been a maxim of the law for hundreds of years. It has had a bad effect. It is not serviceable now as a proposition of law.

If a man comes around with a spavined horse, the doctrine may apply, "Let the buyer beware." But you have goods coming now, canned goods, goods in packets, and you can not tell what is in them. That old doctrine of caveat emptor does not apply as it did once, and it is just as important to say, "Let the seller beware" as "Let the buyer beware." That has been bad for honest business in this country, and it has been bad for the country.

Mr. President, what terrible things are in this bill? I want to be perfectly frank. Some sections of the bill, I think, ought to be changed. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], with that merciless logic and that irony and sarcasm of which he is a master, pictures the procedure under section 17. I confess he made some impression upon me at the time.

He talks about the man on his uppers getting a job with the commission and going into these places and telling them, "Hold up your hands and be sworn or else go to the penitentiary, if you do not answer the questions correctly." That seems pretty severe. I know the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], who has had so much to do with this legislation and who is one of the best Senators that ever sat in this body, thoroughly devoted to the public interest, is not in favor of any legislation that is going to destroy the cattle business or that will be too drastic. Section 17, when you first look at it, does look mighty drastic.

"Hold up your hand," the Senator from Missouri said, "and be sworn." There would be some reciprocal justice in that, because the stockman and the farmer who has gone into the stockyards has had to hold up his hands while the packers rifled him, and if now they had to hold up their hands and be sworn about their practices it might not seem so severe.

But section 17 is to cover a situation like this, to which I wish to call the attention of Senators: When the Federal Trade Commission have tried to get facts about the coal business or about the steel business, they have been enjoined in the courts. In the District of Columbia they were enjoined against getting the cost of production of coal, because it was not in interstate commerce and did not relate to it. Out in Indiana about the same time the miners were enjoined in the Federal courts because it was held that in mining coal they were getting it ready for interstate commerce, and hence it entered into interstate commerce. To get away from that situation and that holding of the courts is really the purpose of section 17. If the information were for the benefit of Congress, in part at least, it would be easier to hold it in the courts. By that I mean Congress has the right to secure information. The courts held, as I have said, that the information did not relate to interstate commerce. This section is to solve that situation.

Section 19 I think ought to go out. I do not believe there will be much fight to keep it in.

Subdivision (d) of section 18 makes each day a separate offense. Where that occurred in other places in the bill we struck it out, and it ought to go out here.

Mr. NORRIS. It has gone out.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad it has. The penalty is too severe. I should like to have some Senator tell me, outside of those things—and those are the things on which the fight has been made—what there is that is so terrible about the bill and how it is going to destroy industry. It shall be unlawful for any packer to do certain things—

To engage in any unfair or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce or in any deceptive practice or device to cheat or defraud in commerce.

Does anyone here rise and say that provision is wrong?

Sell or otherwise transfer to or for any other packer, or buy or otherwise receive from or for any other packer any live stock or live-stock products for the purpose of apportioning the supply between any such packers or unreasonably affecting the price of or creating a monopoly in the acquisition of buying, selling, or dealing in live stock or live-stock products in commerce.

I will wait and invite any Senator to rise and point out where that section is wrong.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] finds some objection to subdivision (c)——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to ask the Senator if practically all the practices which are declared in the bill to be illegal are not, as a matter of fact and law, illegal under the present laws of the United States; and is not this substantially all that the bill proposes to do with reference to the illegal things, namely, that hereafter there shall be a method by which these infractions of the law can be summarily tried and punishment imposed without the process of a long, tedious trial in court?

Mr. KENYON. Outside of some parts of subdivision (b), which, I think, are not covered by existing law, practically all these things are covered in the present laws, and they are marshalled here and put in new form for this one great industry, which the evidence before us showed was more powerful than the railroads of the country.

Subsection (d) reads:

Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other packer to apportion territory for carrying on business, or to apportion purchases or sales of any live stock or live-stock products, or to control prices thereof in commerce.

Is that going into business? I will wait while any Senator gets up and explains how that is wrong and how that is going to injure the business of the packers if they want to do an honest business. There is not a thing in the bill that will injure any man who wants to do an honest business and play fair with the market.

Otherwise act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to do or abet the doing of any act, contrary to the provisions of this act, or refuse, neglect, or fail to act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to refuse, neglect, or fail to act in accordance with the provisions of this act.

What is the wrong about that? Will not some of the Senators who are so concerned about the Government getting into business get up and tell us what is wrong about that subdivision?

Otherwise act, or refuse, neglect, or fail to act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to do or aid or abet the doing of any act, or to refuse, neglect, or fail to act, contrary to the provisions of this act and the rules, regulations, and orders made hereunder.

There might be legitimate objection to that last, I concede—as to the rules, orders, and regulations—and I am going to speak of that.

There are the things that the bill prevents. What folly for the packers to waste their money in their great propaganda through the country, in advertising, and in lobbying at Washington to try to prevent the enactment of a measure like that. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] said last night he did not like it because it was too weak. Let us try this.

I have reiterated again and again that no one wants to hurt legitimate business, and no one wants to hurt the packers. They are a necessary part of the delicate mechanism of distribution in this country. Far be it from those of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to wish to injure them.

Title V is assailed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. Bear in mind that Title V is an experiment as to public control. It is entirely voluntary. No one has to go into it at all. The Senator admits that. How in the name of common horse sense is it going to hurt anyone? They do not have to go into it, but he does not like to see it on the statute books. No; and the packers do not like to see it on the statute books either——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. Because it will mean a competition with the packers in the market places throughout the country, and they do not like competition. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has just answered my question.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad I spoke first, because it is a good point. However, I am much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I might ask the Senator if he knows of any opposition, or did anything occur at any time during the hearings of the committee as to Title V, that demonstrated that there was any opposition from any other source than the packers?

Mr. KENYON. Absolutely not.

Paternalism, it is called. What is the harm in experimenting with something to relieve the burdens of the American consumer? The bill is indorsed by the National Consumers' League of this country, an organization composed largely of women who know the household questions, and is indorsed as well by the League of Women Voters.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. KENYON. I do; but I am very anxious to get through.

Mr. KENDRICK. I only wish to ask the Senator if he does not believe that the great difference between the price of live stock on the hoof and the price of meat products delivered to the consumers of the country would justify an experiment in marketing?

Mr. KENYON. Having to buy meat from the butchers, I am willing myself to risk the experiment, and I do not think it will topple over the foundations of the Government or destroy the Constitution.

I wish to refer to one other thing about which we have heard occasionally, and that ought to be clear to Senators. Section 10 is assailed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] and by other Senators. Section 10 gives the commissioner power to make such rules, regulations, and orders—now listen:

As may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

I have talked with a good many Senators who feel that the bill gives to the commissioner the power to make rules and then provides that a violation of any of those rules becomes a criminal offense. It does not do any such thing, and I want to make that clear if I can. It is a little troublesome point in the bill, but even if it did do that—I do not believe in that myself—the Supreme Court has sustained it in the Grimaud case, which went to the Supreme Court on a ruling of the Secretary of Agriculture as to forest reserves and a violation of a rule which had been made a criminal offense under the act.

The Supreme Court sustained it. Legally it is all right. I myself do not believe in giving a subordinate officer the right to make a rule and then make a violation of that rule a criminal offense before the court acts on it, and the bill does not do that.

Turn now from section 10 to the order under section 20:

Whenever the commissioner believes that any packer or operator is violating any provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder—

What does he do? He causes a notice in writing to be served and has a hearing. At that hearing evidence is taken. It is the same as to the violation of a rule as with anything else in the bill. Evidence is taken, and he makes a report stating the findings. Then, here is the important thing, that the commissioner—shall issue and cause to be served on such packer or operator an order requiring such packer or operator to cease and desist from continuing such violations.

They have had the hearing leading up to the making of that order. There is no criminal offense up to that point. Then what happens? Within 30 days they can take this matter to the appellate court, when the appellate court can order a new hearing or order further evidence to be taken. That is pretty well protecting the rights of these people. There is no crime up to this point. Now, if the court sustains the order to desist certain practices—and notice the terms of the order, "to desist"—and then the parties go ahead and do the same thing and break the order again, then it becomes a criminal offense, and it does not become a criminal offense until that time. I challenge anyone who has read the bill to point out anything contrary to that statement. It may not be clear unless one closely analyzes it, but it is very clear when the language is studied.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the regulation by the commissioner must have the indorsement of the Federal courts?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; if the party wants that indorsement. I ought to say in fairness that if the party does not appeal to the court, then, at the expiration of 30 days, the order becomes the same as if the court had affirmed it; but it is not even then a crime unless the parties go on and violate the act after the time for an appeal has expired. Now, have I made myself clear? That feature has been befogged and bemuddled in this Chamber, and I want to get it straight.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. SMITH. I merely wish to ask a question. The Senator from Iowa has stated that the commissioner may make rules and orders to carry out the provisions of the proposed law. So it is proposed to make such rules or orders tantamount to a law; that is, the manner in which the law may be broken or not is determined according to the rules or the orders prescribed for carrying out the law.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, I want to conclude as I only have two or three minutes remaining.

Mr. SMITH. But I want to get this matter clear in my mind. As I understand, under subdivision (g) it is provided that the breaking of a rule or an order shall be the same as the violation of the provisions of the act.

Mr. KENYON. When a person breaks a rule or an order, just the same as when he violates a provision of the proposed act, there has got to be a hearing. Then an order is made by the commissioner to the offender to desist from breaking the rule; but the parties may appeal to the court, and there is no crime committed until after the court has decided the appeal. If they do not appeal to the court, and continue breaking the rule or order, then their act becomes a crime.

Mr. SMITH. Now, I clearly understand it. Any rule or order which may be adjudged to be a crime only becomes a crime after the court has so decided?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. And the rule and order are made a part of the law by that very act?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; they are made a part of the law just as is true in hundreds of other cases.

Mr. President, if there is any other Senator who wishes to speak, I shall yield, though I should like to occupy the next 10 minutes. I do not wish to cut off any Senator.

I want, however, to say that everybody is anxious to know what the program is going to be. I agree with them. What is the program going to be about regulating business in this country? That is an important question. It is important to business; it is important to everybody.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] on yesterday became so enthused in behalf of repealing statutes designed to regulate business that he wanted to repeal the interstate commerce act and let the railroads charge whatever they please. I did not know before he got through whether he would not want to abolish the Supreme Court, the Ten Commandments, and everything else. That idea has become so popular it is in the air. The Senator said that commissions had cost the country, as I now remember his statement, more than the recent war cost. He pointed out what the Interstate Commerce Commission cost; but what would it have cost the people if we had had no Interstate Commerce Commission? One can not figure what the police force costs and say that that is wasted money, because one does not know what the people and the community might be plundered of if it were not for the police force. So what the people of this country would have been plundered by the railroads without the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is difficult to imagine. I do not know how the Senator from Maine got so enthused. He was stating what he was going to say to the farmers of Maine, claiming he was the only real friend of the farmers. Of course that is interesting.

What is the program? Are there men like the Senator from Maine and other distinguished leaders who think the election last November gave that kind of a mandate to the American Congress? I want to know how far we are going in the direction of not touching any business in this country, no matter if it may be charged with a public use or some leaders may convince themselves that that is the program, but I do not believe they can convince the President of the United States, however much they may try, and they can not convince the American people.

There never has been, I venture to say, Mr. President, in the history of legislation, such a lobby against any bill as there has been against this bill, and so much money spent. Possibly there may have been when the Borland resolution was fought.

I am not complaining about its opponents fighting the bill; they have a right to fight it; of course, they are a great industry; but when the lobby investigation proceeds, if it ever shall—and I hope it will—I trust we will have some light thrown on the packer lobby in Washington, which is infesting this building, which is at the doors calling Senators out of the Chamber. Why not invite them into the Chamber? I hope that lobby investigation, if it is within the purview of its power, may go into senatorial elections.

The committee which investigated matters in connection with the election was dissolved after the election had taken place. I wish now it was in existence to go into a few of these questions. A former Senator from the State of Oregon who sat in this Chamber, as brave a man as ever lived, had the audacity to vote against the packers. He received a letter from them, insolent in its tone, calling upon him to explain, and he hit back in that American style in which George Chamberlain always hits. What did they do? They got their batteries to work in the State of Oregon; they assailed him. He struck back. They brought all the force they could bear to defeat him, but he ran 50,000 votes ahead of his ticket. I wish we could ascertain what the packers have done in congressional elections. Some disclosures along that line came out in the investigation of the Agricultural Committee; but I hope the lobby committee will turn on the light and find out if in Congress there is ownership of packer stock and whether there are close connections with affiliated business on the part of men in the American Congress or their families.

Mr. President, we have been told that those who favor this legislation are promoting socialism. The distinguished leader of this side of the Chamber in 1906, in a speech on this floor, said these words about the packers:

> But I say, Mr. President, and I say it in all seriousness, that those packers in Chicago and those owners of the Standard Oil Co. have done more to advance socialism and anarchy and unrest and agitation than all the socialistic agitators who stand to-day between the oceans.

Could you imagine our distinguished leader saying such a thing as that? It is the kind of tactics that they have pursued, as he says here, that have made socialists in this country. This legislation is not socialistic. If it is, the transportation act is socialistic.

Mr. President, my time is up. We hear it rumored that the Senate bill is to be defeated, and that the House bill is to triumph.

One thing is sure—that the House bill is practically satisfactory to the packers. Another thing is sure—that every man here who is against any regulation will vote against substituting the Senate bill for the House bill. Mark that when the time comes.

I shall not be disturbed if the Senate bill is defeated—not a particle. We have made a straight, fair fight, and I am not quarreling with others' opinions. If it is to be defeated, all right. Let it go to the country. It will go there. I should think, for the sake of all concerned, packers and consumers alike, that this agitation ought to stop; but does anybody imagine, in view of the Federal Trade Commission's report, that the people of the country are going mildly to submit, no matter what this Senate may do? They will measure, as they have, this American Congress. They will know the influences that have defeated the bill; and as far as I am concerned, I am just going to sit and wait patiently for the day to come, if this bill is defeated, when there will be a Congress here that will pass a bill of this kind, and possibly a bill that is even more drastic.

Why, are you blind enough, you Republican leaders, to believe that the American people are going to submit to five men controlling the market place of the American stock raiser, and practically controlling the prices of the food of this country to the American people? You are not so blind, only you do not think about it. Let the question go, if this bill is to be defeated, whether Congress is to control monopoly in this country, or whether monopoly is to control the American Congress; and on the verdict the men who have fought for this legislation will be content to rely.

I keep my word with the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the half hour that is allotted to me so limits me that I hardly know where to begin in discussing this measure. We have had speeches made on similar bills for years past. It is not a new question in Congress, and I think nearly every Senator has made up his mind as to just what he wants by way of legislation.

Mr. President, I shall be very brief in what I say. It is impossible to cover in a half hour the questions that have been raised even on the floor this morning without referring to those that have been brought to the attention of the Senate in the discussion of this bill.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] just said that the House bill, if it became a law, would be perfectly satisfactory to the packers of this country. I do not think the Senator from Iowa meant that, for it certainly is a mistake. I want to say frankly that either bill is drastic in its provisions. The Senate amendment is drastic in its provisions; the House bill is drastic in its provisions; and either one of the bills, if it becomes law, is entering upon a new method of controlling the business interests of this country, and in the name of common sense where will it end?

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] asked the Senator from Iowa to state the difference between the cost of meat on the hoof and the cost of meat to the consumer. I wish that every Senator knew the cost, step by step, from the time that the calf is born until the time the consumer pays for the meat over the retail counter; and I can say now that after the beef is delivered to the retailer the consumer is compelled to pay more than the cost from the calf to the door of the retailer. Every conceivable expense—the raising of the calf, the selling of the steer, the putting him on the railroad, the freight from the western prairies to Chicago, or wherever the animal is slaughtered and packed, the cost of killing, the cost of packing, the cost of selling—all these costs will not amount to as much as the difference between the cost that the retailer pays and what he sells the beef for to the ultimate consumer.

If this bill is necessary for regulating business in the interest of the ultimate consumer, why do we not regulate the agency that adds the great cost to the article that is sold to the consumer?

I say again, Mr. President, that the packers do not feel that there is any necessity of legislation regulating them, unless the same principle applies to all other business in the United States, and sorry will be the day if that ever comes in the United States.

Many honest men fail in business. Business prosperity, business success, does not depend altogether upon the honesty of the man, and yet it is the very foundation stone of a successful business; yet business judgment is required. Senators have been appealed to to vote for this measure because Mr. Thomas E. Wilson is drawing a salary of $125,000 a year, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] can not comprehend that a man is worth that amount of money in any business in all the world.

Was Thomas E. Wilson born with a gold or a silver spoon in his mouth?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. If the Government can get a man to manage a billion or two dollars' worth of business of all the butchers in the United States for $7,500 a year, does the Senator see any reason for paying $100,000 a year for anything?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator knows that it is not the amount that is paid the man to whom he refers that keeps him in public office. It is the honor that is conferred. It is not because of the $12,000 a year salary that Mr. Mellon accepts the office of Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. It is not for that $1,000 a month. I was speaking of a business concern. I was speaking as to the amount that a business man is worth to a business; and when you take into consideration what is accomplished, and the volume of sales and the business judgment required, I want to say to you that many of the ordinary little merchants or managers of stores who are drawing $100 per month are drawing more in comparison than Mr. Thomas E. Wilson is drawing.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt further, except to say that the purpose of my interrogatory was this: This commissioner is clothed with more plenary powers than are vested in the president of any one of these packing companies. If he has the capacity to exercise those powers, he is worth $100,000 a year to any one of the packing companies.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; or more.

Mr. STANLEY. And I fancy it will be difficult for the Government to get a department clerk, a man hidden away here in Washington under the Secretary of Agriculture, with the capacity to do this business for $7,500 a year; and, if he has not the capacity to do the business, he will do the business and the people of the country incalculable injury.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is correct. Under the Senate bill there is a commissioner to be appointed, and he is to draw a salary; but how is he to be appointed? Because of his business qualifications? Because of his knowledge of the packing industry? No; far from it. He will be appointed because some State in the Union, through its representatives, recommends him for the position, and if he has sufficient backing no doubt he will be appointed commissioner. As far as I am personally concerned, I would rather take my chances with a Secretary of Agriculture, a man selected by the President of the United States as a member of his own family, a Cabinet position; and I feel that under any circumstances, at any time, the man who stands at the head of that great department will have better judgment as to what is best for the farmer of this country and what is best for the consumer of this country than any political appointment that can be made.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, in criticizing these agents of the Government that may be selected to inspect packing houses and enforce this law, is not the Senator resorting to the same argument which would condemn the bank examiners, earning comparatively small salaries, who now go into New York City and inspect banks with deposits of six or seven hundred million dollars, doing a tremendous business, and having officers who are drawing also immense salaries? Yet that method of inspection has been found necessary with regard to large business concerns as well as with regard to small ones. They do not undertake to run the business. They are simply inspecting it to see that it complies with the law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the production of foodstuffs, the making of merchandise, the trading in them, is quite a different proposition from lending a thousand dollars with a fixed Government value at a certain rate of interest.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator entirely misrepresents me there, unintentionally, perhaps. These banks are not lending a thousand dollars at a certain rate of interest. They are among the greatest banks in the world. I am speaking of the great banks of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, say $10,000,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are subjected to the same inspection to which small banks in country towns are subjected; and it would be just as fair to criticize the law which sends an inspector into those great banks and compels their officers, earning fifty or seventy-five or one hundred thousand dollars a year, to submit to the law of the land, as it is to criticize this law, which proposes to subject these great packers to the same inspection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is just as much difference between the two classes of business as there is between day and night; and, in fact, the banks of which the Senator speaks are organized under a law of Congress. In accepting the charter, under that law they accept the provisions of the law under which the bank is organized; and I say there is not a Senator here who can say that the packers ought to be controlled and the Standard Oil Co. not controlled. I say there is not a Senator here who can say that the packers ought to be controlled and all of the other great trusts in the United States go free.

This eternal agitation about passing legislation to regulate the packers has brought about a condition to-day that is most serious, and if I were a packer, rather than to have this agitation continue until it destroys their credit—and I would not blame the banks for refusing longer to hold the sack, not knowing what Congress is going to do in relation to the industry—I would prefer to take the House bill than to let it go unsettled further.

But if I were a packer I would say it was unjust, unreasonable, and unnecessary, for I say to Senators now that there is not a business in all the world—and I say it without a question of doubt—that does business upon the amount of sales on as low a percentage as do the packing concerns in America.

They are great borrowers; they borrow hundreds of millions of dollars. But when the profits which are made upon the amount of capital stock are brought to the attention of the Senate Senators never take into consideration the risks they have run in borrowing those vast sums of money, nearly all the time greater in volume than their capital stock.

So this bill ought not to be defeated, it will be said, Mr. President, because Mr. Thomas E. Wilson is drawing $125,000 a year salary. Thirty-two years ago Morris & Co. telephoned to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co., asking if they had a young man in their employ who would accept a position with the company to check freight cars in and out. They selected a man who sat next to Mr. Thomas E. Wilson, for he at that time was an ordinary clerk in the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy office. The amount of salary promised was $20 a week; and that young man visited the stockyards, but the next day he came back and said that he would not under any circumstances take the job. He said, "You can not go into the cars without getting in muck over the tops of your shoes."

As the official was leaving, Mr. Wilson said, "May I have that job?" The answer was, "I have no doubt." He accepted the job, Mr. President, and went into the stockyards; and from the moment he undertook the work there was an improvement; there was system put into the checking out and checking in of the cars; and the young man rose by his own power of intelligence and his organization ability from the position of ordinary car checker until he was manager of Morris & Co., drawing a salary of $125,000 a year. Now he is called a robber because, in the reorganization of a defunct business, he was offered the same amount of salary per year that he was drawing at Morris & Co.'s and could have drawn as long as he lived.

The Sulzberger Packing Co. was near failure; $16,000,000 of bonds were falling due. The holders of the bonds refused to extend them unless there was a new management. So they looked around, and there was just one man in the United States they thought could pull that concern out, and that was Thomas E. Wilson. And besides giving him the same salary he was receiving at Morris & Co.'s, they gave him some 4,000 shares of common stock, which was almost worthless; and through his ability he not only made his 4,000 shares of stock worth more than $100 per share, but he made every share of stock held by every other stockholder worth the same.

Let me predict this: That in 10 years Thomas E. Wilson, if he lives, will be the greatest packer in all the world, because he knows every detail of the business, from the work of the checking boy in the stockyard to the management of a great packing concern.

It is said we ought to vote for this measure because Wilson & Co. were convicted under the pure food law. Senators, have you read what that decision was? Wilson & Co. were packing in their plant in Indiana 5-gallon cans of tomatoes, and on the cans they marked "5 gallons"; but in putting them up the tomatoes went into the cans hot, and when they cooled off, the contents shrank a little. If they had indicated the contents in pounds upon the can, there would have been no conviction. The court said there was no intention whatever to deceive; but now we are to vote for the bill because of that occurrence.

The charge is made that the packers were opposed to the meat inspection act of 1906. Mr. President, why do not those making the charge read the testimony? The packers were opposed to being compelled to pay the inspectors whom the Government sent to their plants to inspect the meat-packing industry, but they were in favor of meat inspection, and if I had the time I could read the testimony, not only of Mr. Wilson but of Mr. Veeder and other representatives of the packing industries in Chicago. I do not know whether it is worth while to call attention to the farming organizations which are in favor of the House bill as against the Senate bill—I would if I had the time—as shown by the testimony given before the House committee. The Secretary of Agriculture was there. He helped frame the bill. Mr. President, you have never heard one word of objection from him as to the House bill.

Mr. Atkeson, of the National Grange, is against the Senate committee bill. How often have we heard him quoted upon this floor as the representative of a great farm organization?

Mr. President, I see that I have only five minutes left. I received a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, dated June 13, 1921, in which the Secretary said:

"DEAR SENATOR SMOOT: I inclose herewith a comparison of the Senate and House packer bills which I have had made. This should have gone to you Saturday evening, but it was not compiled until late Saturday, and I could not get it off. I am sending it to you because of your previous request over the telephone."

Mr. President, that was the comparison which was put in the RECORD at the request of the Senator from Iowa. An analysis of these comparisons shows that there are a number of mistakes. I have a summary of them before me, but it is impossible for me to read them at this time.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I put a comparison of the bills into the RECORD, but if there were mistakes, and this is some one's analysis showing the mistakes, I would be glad to have them pointed out.

Mr. SMOOT. There were many other matters I wanted to speak of, but I can not cover them in five minutes; so in the few minutes I have I will hurriedly call attention to some of the mistakes:

"The analysis of the Senate and House bills inserted in the RECORD at page 2495 by Senator KENYON does not seem to fully cover the points of material difference between the two bills.

"It is a splendid and useful piece of work and seems to be reasonably fair as far as it goes, but one unfamiliar with the differences between the two measures might be misled thereby.

"On page 2495 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, under the heading of 'Material points of difference,' seven paragraphs are set forth under the Senate bill column purporting to show the material differences between the two bills, which I briefly call attention to, and desire to show further differences in regard to each paragraph which is not clear from a reading of the analysis.

"Paragraph (1) relates to packer ownership in stockyards. I desire to call attention to the fact that the five larger packers are now forbidden by the consent decree pending in the District Court of the District of Columbia from owning any interest in stockyards.

"There has never been any complaint against a small packer owning interest in stockyards; in fact, the provision in the Senate bill forbidding all packers, large and small, from owning any such interest I fear will deter the establishment of small packing plants in places near the source of production where there are no stockyards, for the reason that outside capital would hardly be interested in establishing such yards where the receipts would be light, and, as experience has shown, would require a number of years to build up a market sufficiently large to make it a paying investment."

I can point to numerous States in this country where those small packing yards are in operation and if the Senate committee provision is adopted I doubt whether they can even operate, or would undertake to operate, or could under the law operate, and I know that it is not the intention of Congress to bring about such a condition.

The statement proceeds:

"No packing plant can be operated successfully without the adjunct of stockyards, and the Senate bill would prohibit such small packing concerns from owning any interest in the yards, and in this respect the House bill seems to be preferable.

"Paragraph 2 of the analysis on page 2495 of the RECORD states as follows:

"'The Senate bill 'confers investigational authority not contained in the House bill and broader than the authority in the annual appropriation act.'

"Section 6 of the Senate bill is set forth to show the extent of the authority of the commission. It will be noticed that among the duties of the commissioner under section 6, the commissioner is required to investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply and prices of, and all other facts relating to the production, handling, and distribution of live stock.

"This provision would require much data and information to be secured from the producers. The analysis does not point out in this connection that, under section 30 of the Senate bill, the producers of live stock are exempted from the provisions of the bill and nothing in the bill shall be construed to include or be binding upon any person whose chief business is the raising of live stock or agricultural products.

"Section 30 of the Senate bill nullifies the most important part of the powers conferred upon the commissioner in section 6, as nowhere in the bill is he authorized otherwise to secure this important information. How can he make an investigation of these important matters unless he is given visitorial and inquisitorial powers necessary to make the investigation, to examine books and records of the producers, and require information and reports under oath or otherwise as provided in the case of the packers?

"Under the authority of the appropriation act of the Department of Agriculture the Secretary of Agriculture is now empowered to perform duties very similar to those provided in section 6 of the Senate bill, and the producers are not exempt from his authority in this respect as provided in section 30 of the Senate bill.

"Under the heading of 'Bureau of Markets' a provision is found in the appropriation bill which enables the Secretary of Agriculture to gather from stockmen, live-stock associations, State live stock and agricultural boards, common carriers, stock yards, commission firms, live-stock exchanges, slaughtering and meat-packing companies, and others, information relative to the number of different classes and grades of marketable live stock, especially cattle, hogs, and sheep, in the live-stock feeding districts and growing sections; prices, receipts, and shipments of the different classes and grades of cattle, hogs, and sheep at live-stock market centers; prices of meats, fish, and meat and fish-food products, and the amounts of such products in storage; to compile and publish such information at frequent intervals as most effectively to guide producers, consumers, and distributors in the sale and purchase of live stock, meats, fish, and other animal products; and to gather and publish any related information pertaining to marketing and distribution of live stock, meats, fish, and animal by-products, for which the sum of $89,340 is appropriated, also the appropriation bill provides $300,000 for acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distributing of farm and nonmanufactured food products and in the purchasing of farm supplies, independently and in cooperation with the other branches of the department, State agencies, purchasing, and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the transportation, marketing, and distributing of farm and food products.

"In addition to the foregoing the Secretary of Agriculture, under section 402 of the House bill, is vested with all the jurisdiction, power, and authority, visitorial and inquisitorial, of the Federal Trade Commission to examine the books and records and to require reports on any subject within the terms of the House bill which, taken together, with the other powers of the House bill, give to the Secretary all the power of investigation and publicity found in the Senate bill which are broader really, because the House bill does not exempt the producers from being required to furnish information as to the supply, costs, and prices of live stock as is provided in section 30 of the Senate bill.

"The next difference pointed out in the analysis is in paragraph 3, page 2495 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which reads as follows:

"(3) Forbids conspiracy to prevent any person from competing; this provision is not in the House bill.

"The person who compiled this analysis was evidently mistaken when he framed that statement. The House bill contains a provision the effect of which does exactly contrary to the statement here made.

"Section 202 of the House bill contains language which would make any conspiracy to prevent any person from competing guilty of violating the law.

"Section 202 of the House bill makes it unlawful for any packer '(e) engaged in any course of business or do any act for the purpose or with the effect of manipulating or controlling prices in commerce or creating a monopoly in the acquisition of, buying, selling, or dealing in any article in commerce or of restraining commerce, or (f) conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person (1) to apportion territory for carrying on business in commerce, or (2) to apportion purchases or sales of any article in commerce, or (3) to manipulate or control prices in commerce; or (g) conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to do or aid or abet the doing of any act made unlawful by subdivision (a), (b), (c), (d), or (e).

"I will not take the time to read paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d), but I think it clear from the language of those paragraphs also that it would be unlawful for any person to engage in any conspiracy to prevent competition as stated and contrary to the statement made in paragraph 3 of the analysis.

"The author of the analysis also failed to point out in this connection a very vital and fundamental provision found in section 12 of the Senate bill, which differs from the House bill.

"Paragraph (c) of section 12 of the Senate bill is as follows:

"(c) Engage or participate in any manner, either directly or indirectly, in the business of purchasing, manufacturing, storing, or selling foodstuffs other than live-stock products, where the effect of such participation in such business may be substantially to lessen competition in or to restrain commerce or to tend to create a monopoly in commerce.

"If the author of the analysis had this paragraph in mind when he made the statement contained in paragraph 3 of the analysis, he failed to point out the full scope and effect of such provision and there is nothing in his statement by which attention is directed to this section of the bill. If he was referring to subdivision (e) of section 12, then his analysis completely fails to call attention to the vital difference between the Senate and House bills found in subdivision (c) of section 12 of the Senate bill. Under this paragraph the commissioner is given the extraordinary power to limit or even prohibit a packer from engaging, directly or indirectly, in the business of purchasing, manufacturing, storing, or selling foodstuffs other than live stock and live-stock products where, in the judgment of the commissioner, such participation may be substantially to lessen competition, restrain commerce, or create a monopoly. The decision as to when such an effect has been created is left solely and exclusively to the judgment and will of this commissioner. It is not necessary under the law that the packer should have any agreement or conspiracy with any other person to accomplish anything denounced by the paragraph, but he may violate the law and be put out of any such lines if he grows large enough in such a business to bring about, in the opinion of the commissioner, any of the results specified in paragraph (c). Under the power thus delegated the commissioner can by the mere issuance of a rule or regulation, under the provisions of section 10 of the Senate bill, forbid any packer to engage in the business of distributing butter, eggs, poultry, and cheese overnight, notwithstanding that these commodities require refrigeration at the point of slaughter and preparation, in transportation, and at the point of distribution, and notwithstanding further that the packer has developed the most perfective distributive system for such products in this country, and, in fact, virtually built up that business from a sensonal one to a year-round business throughout the length and breadth of the land.

"The commissioner may forbid by a rule or regulation such participation in these or any other lines, which rule or regulation may be issued by him without a hearing or prior notice, and if a packer does not immediately obey such rule or regulation a complaint will be filed against him and on appeal from an order to cease and desist the courts will have no authority to inquire into the reasonableness or justice of said rule or regulation. This is the most extraordinary, autocratic, and despotic power ever attempted to be conferred upon any governmental agency within my knowledge, and it is unfortunate that the compiler of the analysis did not call attention to it for the benefit and information of Senators about to vote upon this important measure. This provision alone, which is not found in the House bill and which was expressly omitted from that bill, is sufficient within itself to warrant the voting down of the Senate amendment.

"The next paragraph in the analysis is not quite fair, because, under section 406b of the House bill all the powers, rights, duties, and obligations of the Federal Trade Commission act, in so far as they are visitorial and inquisitorial, are preserved and made applicable to the duties and jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture in enforcing the provisions of the act. The House bill, like the Senate bill, terminates the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission in so far as it applies to persons subject to the provisions of the House bill, which is proper, because the House bill undertakes to set up a single agency to deal with this industry in all of its branches and inasmuch as it is the largest single industry in the country it is entitled to be so supervised and not be subjected to conflicting jurisdiction and rivalry of different branches of the Government. The banks and railroads are expressly excluded from the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, and there seems to be no sound reason other than a sentimental one why this change should not be made in relation to the packing industry under a bill as broad and comprehensive as we are attempting to provide.

"The only real difference between this provision in the two bills is that in the Senate amendment it is provided that the Federal Trade Commission may make an investigation when directed by the President, the Secretary of Agriculture, or either branch of Congress.

"Congress can at any time, by proper resolution, order such an investigation by the commission if it deems one necessary. The Secretary of Agriculture is already equipped with departments and agents essential to carry on much of the work provided in the bill, and he is authorized to employ such additional agents, accountants, attorneys, and other employees necessary to perform all the duties required of them which would make it unnecessary to call upon the Federal Trade Commission. Moreover, the Federal Trade Commission has left to its jurisdiction all other business concerns outside of banks, railroads, and packers upon which to exercise its power, and no doubt sufficient to employ all of its time and talents.

"The Secretary of Agriculture is an appointee of the President, sits in his Cabinet, and it is inconceivable that there is any necessity for providing any other agency than the Secretary in order that the President may secure an investigation on this subject.

"The next paragraph in the analysis is found on page 2495 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and is No. 5, and provides for voluntary registration of packers and operators; a number of subdivisions are set forth. The House bill eliminated that section because they believed, as stated in their report, that it contained the germ of a license system.

"I desire to call attention to other features of the section. It seems to contain a paradox, because under section 25a no packer can register unless he is engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or both. If he is so engaged he will be subject to all the previous provisions of the bill and will be under the complete supervision and regulation of the commissioner and subject to all of his rules and regulations, and wherein does the necessity lie for placing him under the same supervisory power twice? Moreover, under subdivision (e), page 50 of the Senate bill, it is provided that no registrant shall take title to any products handled by such registrant; therefore he would be limited solely to a slaughtering business, which is purely a local or intrastate transaction under the decisions of the court, and no packer now doing business would be qualified to register under such circumstances, as they all purchase their live stock.

"If, as has been stated on the floor, this section is designed to encourage cooperative associations and municipal abattoirs, it is inconceivable how any such concerns can register when they do not own any of the products handled by them, are confined to a slaughtering business, and have nothing to ship in interstate commerce, which they must be engaged in before they can register.

"Another interesting feature about this section is the statement contained in the analysis at the top of page 2496, the compiler states:

"In return for submitting themselves to the regulations prescribed for registrants, the commissioner is required to do the following things for them.

"The compensations promised to the registrant for surrendering all right of control over his business to the commissioner and to subject himself to the rules and regulations he may from time to time prescribe are set forth in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d) of the analysis, page 2496, of the RECORD. I desire to call attention to the fact that all the matter contained in these four paragraphs is now provided for by existing law and all such service and information can be procured from the Department of Agriculture and the Interstate Commerce Commission by any citizen without cost and without surrendering the right of control of one's business.

"The matter contained in paragraph (a) is covered in the current appropriation bill under the head 'Bureau of Chemistry,' as follows:

"For the study and improvement of methods of dehydrating materials used for food in cooperation with such persons, associations, or corporations as may be found necessary, and to disseminate information as to the value and suitability of such products for food, $23,500.

"There are other provisions of the appropriation bill covering some of the subjects found in paragraph (a).

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is fully authorized and empowered to render all the service promised in paragraph (b). The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized under existing law to furnish all the information and service provided for in paragraphs (c) and (d). Moreover, under the regulations of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, no meat or meat-food products can be transported or offered for sale in interstate commerce until it has been inspected and passed by the inspectors of the Bureau of Animal Industry. Hence there is no apparent necessity or benefits to be derived by enacting section 25, and the House bill seems to be more scientifically drawn by its omission.

"The remaining material difference pointed out by the author of the analysis is found in paragraph 7, page 2496 of the RECORD.

"Manifestly the author of the analysis was laboring under a misapprehension when he pointed out the matter found in paragraph 7 as a material difference between the House and Senate bill.

"Under the provisions of section 401 of the House bill the Secretary is given the power to prescribe the manner and form in which such accounts, records, and memorandum shall be kept under certain conditions, and thereafter any person who fails to keep such accounts, records, and memorandum in the manner and form prescribed by the Secretary is guilty of an offense, punishable by severe penalties.

"Moreover, section 402 of the House bill makes the provisions of sections 6, 8, 9, and 10 of the Federal Trade Commission act applicable to the powers of the Secretary in enforcing the provisions of the bill.

"Section 10 of the Federal Trade Commission act, among other things, provides:

"Any person who shall willfully make, or cause to be made, any false entry or statement of fact in any report required to be made under this act, or who shall willfully make or cause to be made any false entry in any account, record, or memorandum kept by any corporation subject to this act, or who shall willfully neglect or fail to make or to cause to be made full, true, and correct entries in such accounts, records, or memoranda of all facts and transactions appertaining to the business of such corporation, or who shall willfully move out of the jurisdiction of the United States, or willfully mutilate, alter, or by any other means falsify any documentary evidence of such corporation, or who shall willfully refuse to submit to the commission or to any of its authorized agents for the purpose of inspection and taking copies any documentary evidence of such corporation in his possession or within his control shall be deemed guilty of an offense against the United States and shall be subject, upon conviction * * * a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or to imprisonment for a term of not more than three years, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

"Thus it would seem that the analysis does not clearly and correctly disclose material differences between the two bills. Another important and fundamental difference omitted from the analysis under the heading of "Material differences" is the power of the commissioner to make rules and regulations under section 10 of the Senate bill having the force and effect of law, and from which there is no appeal, by which their reasonableness or fairness can be tested in the courts.

"The House bill gives to the packer full protection of the courts against arbitrary and autocratic use of such powers and does not give the Secretary power to make rules and regulations defining the general laws provided in the bill. His function is to establish the status of the law by filing complaints when he believes any of its general provisions are being violated and to order the packer to cease and desist from such violation. If such order is appealed from, the court may inquire into its reasonableness and the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the charge, and is not restricted in its power and jurisdiction in this respect, as provided in section 20 of the Senate bill.

"It is not pointed out in the points of material difference of the analysis that the commissioner, while nominally 'in' the Department of Agriculture, is appointed by the President and has no limitation to his term of office; he may serve for life. He can not be removed by the Secretary of Agriculture and can only be removed by the President or a concurrent resolution of Congress for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. The commissioner is vested with the power to appoint all officers and employees necessary to carry out the purposes of the act, and may, under his powers, duplicate many of the departments in the Department of Agriculture, Federal Trade Commission, Interstate Commerce Commission, and other agencies, in case of any disagreement or conflict between himself and the Secretary of Agriculture as to the manner or policy of carrying out the provisions of the act. This is an important matter, and such an important industry should not be subjected to the possibilities which might easily arise under such a situation.

"The analysis does not point out under the head of 'Material points of difference' the important distinction between the House and Senate bills, at hearings held under the acts. The Senate bill does not provide as a matter of law any right for a packer to be informed as to the evidence introduced against him or to cross-examine witnesses at any hearing held under section 20 of the Senate bill. Such rights are fully safeguarded in the House bill under section 203a—lines 16, 17, and 18.

"Under the strict language of section 20 of the Senate bill the commissioner might, if he chose, conduct a part of the hearing at least ex parte, as the Federal Trade Commission did of the packing industry. This is an important distinction between the two measures, and the right of the packers to be informed of the evidence and to cross-examine witnesses at any hearing should be plainly provided for as a matter of law, because the powers to be exercised, especially the power of the commissioner to make rules and regulations, are very broad and comprehensive. These differences which I have here pointed out, in my opinion, commends the House bill as a fairer and more reasonable measure. There are other differences which might be pointed out, but these are sufficient, it seems to me, to make manifest the important distinctions.

"There is nothing prohibited under the Senate bill which should be prohibited not prohibited by the House bill. There is no power of a visitorial, inquisitorial, or supervisory nature which can be exercised by the commissioner under the Senate bill which is not provided for and usually in almost identical language in the House bill.

"The Secretary of Agriculture, under the powers of the House bill, and of the Federal Trade Commission act, delegated to him by section 402, and through the departments now existing in his organization, will have the most complete machinery and powers necessary to completely supervise the industry."

Mr. President, the hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, and inasmuch as I desire to speak upon the amendments at least five minutes, I shall have to close at this point.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Nebraska proposes to amend the Senate committee substitute bill by striking out section 5 and in lieu inserting:

SEC. 5. Nothing in this act shall affect or take away any of the power or jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question with reference to his amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. All the powers of the Federal Trade Commission in respect to the things which the bill proposes to regulate are taken away from the Federal Trade Commission, are they not? The bill itself distinctly says so, as I recollect the provision.

Mr. NORRIS. If the amendment to the amendment which I have just offered is agreed to, it will strike out the section that does say so. It is section 5 which I propose to strike out, which provides that the Federal Trade Commission powers are taken away except in cases where they are directed to investigate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am puzzled about it, and that is why I make the inquiry. I want to understand it. Does the Senator propose to leave the Federal Trade Commission with jurisdiction over the packing business?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the amendment to the amendment would have that effect.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And also give the Secretary of Agriculture the same powers?

Mr. NORRIS. Whatever the bill gives him.

UMI

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry in this connection. According to the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, if I correctly understand him, the Federal Trade Commission will now have power with reference to all the prohibitions and restrictions provided for over the packing business.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not quite understand the Senator's question.

Mr. STERLING. Under the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, I infer that the Federal Trade Commission, according to his construction, is to have power in regard to all the prohibitions and restrictions provided for in the bill. Am I correct?

Mr. NORRIS. If the amendment to the amendment prevails.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, the effect of that would be to have a double-headed control, two bodies with exactly the same jurisdiction.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly that would be the effect of it. We would have the commissioner under the Secretary of Agriculture having this jurisdiction, and then we would have, too, the Federal Trade Commission, having identically the same jurisdiction and power as the commissioner under the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there would be, if the amendment to the amendment prevails, a lapping of authority. I have already called the attention of the Senate to the fact that if it does not prevail and if we do not have something of the kind in the bill there will be an absence of authority to investigate. There will be a field that will be covered as a matter of practical proposition by no one's authority. In practical operation, if the amendment to the amendment prevails, there will be no duplication of authority.

There is no question, and the history of the past shows it, that the Federal Trade Commission would not investigate the packers unless they were directed to do so. In the great investigation which they did make it was not upon their own initiative, but they were directed to do it by the President. On the other hand, see where we will be under either the House bill or the Senate bill, but particularly the House bill—it will not be so bad under the Senate bill, because there is a difference in the definition—if we take away from the Federal Trade Commission a great share of their authority. Then we will defeat the plan as it applies to other than the packers for products that are not direct—for instance, hides, shoes, woolen clothing, leather, automobiles, automobile upholstery that is usually leather, underclothing, stockings. If we do not provide some such amendment as this, we will have taken away the authority of the Federal Trade Commission ever to investigate any unfair competition charge because those things come from the by-products of the packers.

It is true that under the House bill we have given the authority to the Secretary of Agriculture, and in the Senate bill to the commissioner, to make that investigation, but no one expects them to investigate things of that kind. They will investigate the packers or the business of the big packers. Technically, if the amendment to the amendment prevails, the Federal Trade Commission could do the same thing.

Practically they will not do it, but if they start to investigate a charge of unfair competition between manufacturers of woolen clothing and they run the wool into the packers, they would have to stop. It is probably not so broad under the provisions of the Senate bill, because the definition of those products in the Senate bill protects that situation. I am going to offer a similar amendment to the House text because I think it is a good deal broader. It is to save that condition that I am offering the amendment to the amendment at this time.

There will be no practical interference whatever if we pass either one of the bills. The Federal Trade Commission will not of its own initiative ever start an investigation against the packers, because of the other instrumentality that the law provides for that purpose, but if they are investigating some other industry that goes into the by-products of a packer they will undoubtedly go to the bottom of it.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Nebraska now says that the Federal Trade Commission will not of its own initiative investigate. It will not institute a proceeding perhaps on its own initiative, but will it listen to a complaint made by some one else?

Mr. NORRIS. Probably not, but I do not know.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator leaves the jurisdiction with the Federal Trade Commission, why should it not take cognizance of a complaint that is made?

Mr. NORRIS. Probably it should. Personally I have not any objection to it. If there is unfair competition coming within their jurisdiction, I have not any objection to their investigating it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator answer me this question?

Mr. NORRIS. I will if I have time and can do so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator has five minutes to speak on his amendment to the amendment and I am asking him in that time. What powers under the proposed Senate committee bill are given to the Secretary of Agriculture or the Federal Live Stock Commissioner which the Federal Trade Commission does not already have?

Mr. NORRIS. I could hardly answer that question directly. I would wish to examine the Federal Trade Commission act carefully before I would be satisfied in my own mind that I could give the Senator a proper answer.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not made an examination, with the knowledge or experience that the Senator has, either of this bill or the act creating a Federal Trade Commission, but I was on the committee which framed the Federal Trade Commission act, though I was opposed to it and voted against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nebraska for speaking on the amendment to the amendment has expired.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am speaking on the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired for speaking on the amendment to the amendment. He is entitled to speak five minutes on the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am speaking, then, in my own time.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care to speak on the bill now. My own idea is that technically we can not couple up speeches in that way. The amendment to the amendment is now pending and all speeches are supposed as a matter of parliamentary law to be on the amendment to the amendment that is pending, and we can not speak on the bill now.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know what the rule will be about that, but at any rate I am now speaking in my own time on the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska simply for the purpose of making this statement.

According to my recollection of the terms of the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, that commission has every power that is sought by this bill to be vested in the Secretary of Agriculture and the Federal Live Stock Commission. While we created the Federal Trade Commission with powers to investigate and make orders and enforce them by the injunctive processes of the court in relation to every kind of device and practice of any person or corporation engaged in interstate commerce, we are now selecting a particular industry and giving those same powers to the head of a bureau to be established in one of the executive departments in Washington.

Of course, ultimately people who are dissatisfied with the way various businesses are conducted will ask that a separate bureau be set up in some one of the departments to run that business. When I say "run" it, I mean to regulate it or control it.

They will want a special bureau or executive appointee, through his clerk, unknown to the public, to control the grain business, the sugar business, the cotton business, the wool business, the steel business, the copper business, the oil business—in fact, every big business that is engaged in interstate commerce. They will appear here with just as much force and just as much reason for that. If the dissatisfaction or clamor, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] describes the demand for this kind of legislation, is sufficient, they will in the end have special bureaus and special commissioners, with their hordes of employees, examining and controlling every business in the country.

I simply say to the Senate that those who vote for this legislation are creating a precedent and taking the first step toward infringing upon the powers and jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission. That commission has all these powers now over all businesses; but it is proposed now to take away their jurisdiction in separate parts or else, if the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the committee amendment is agreed to, to leave them with all the jurisdiction and powers that they now have over all industries engaged in interstate commerce and then to confer, as the Senator himself describes it, by a process of overlapping of jurisdiction separate parts of the Federal Trade Commission jurisdiction upon those separate commissions.

At any rate, all the power of the Federal Government, without any legal definition of what it shall be, is to be placed behind these different bureaus, which, according to their own sweet will and without legal definition, are to make any rules and regulations for the conduct of any and all of these businesses as they may evolve out of their inner consciences from day to day as they go along, to decide what is fair and unfair, and order a man to refrain from what they think is unfair and to do what they think is fair, and so to surround the conduct of every business in the country with their rules and regulations, with their inspectors sitting in the offices, with their requirements for reports and publicity—to so surround and shackle the business of the country and to control it all here in political departments by political appointees in the city of Washington. I submit, Mr. President, that it is much safer for the country for a man, if he be hesitant or in doubt about the wisdom of this policy, to give the benefit of that doubt against taking this step until he feels sure of the result to which it may lead.

Mr. McCORMICK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is it in order at this time to offer amendments to perfect the so-called Norris bill or to offer amendments to perfect the House bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that it is in order to offer amendments to perfect either one. There is an amendment to the amendment now pending.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is it in order to offer amendments to either bill and to vote upon them at this time? Which amendments are to be first voted upon, the amendments to the so-called House bill or to the so-called Senate bill?

Mr. CURTIS rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is necessary first to perfect the text of the House bill.

Mr. McCORMICK. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. CURTIS. I was going to call the attention of the Chair to Rule XVIII, which provides for first perfecting the text of the House bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If amendments to the House bill are in order, I should like to offer one. I should like to inquire of those who are sponsoring the House bill whether it is intended by the House bill to repeal the Sherman Act? I call attention to subdivision (c) of section 202 of the House bill, appearing in the double print of the two bills at page 5.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is an amendment to the proposed substitute?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Subdivision (c), section 202, of the House bill reads as follows:

> (c) Sell or otherwise transfer to or for any other packer, or buy or otherwise receive from or for any other packer, any article for the purpose or with the effect of apportioning the supply in commerce between any such packers, if such apportionment has the tendency or effect of restraining commerce or of creating a monopoly in commerce; or

My understanding is that the acts mentioned in that provision would be a violation of the Sherman Act. Now, we forbid those acts by this bill, and we provide a remedy, which I take it would be an exclusive remedy, and the provision would repeal the Sherman Act to that extent. The next subdivision, subdivision (d), reads:

> (d) Sell or otherwise transfer to or for any other person, or buy or otherwise receive from or for any other person, any article for the purpose or with the effect of manipulating or controlling prices in commerce, or of creating a monopoly in the acquisition of, buying, selling, or dealing in, any article in commerce, or of restraining commerce.

Such activities, of course, would be a plain violation of the Sherman Act. Now, we provide a remedy for acts of that character by the pending bill, and, of course, that would operate as a repeal of the Sherman Act. I apprehend that we are not at this time intending to repeal practically the whole substance of the Sherman Act as applied to the packers of meats. Accordingly I submit the following amendment:

> Nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal, in whole or in part, any provision of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, or any act amendatory thereof, or to exempt any person from liability or prosecution thereunder.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment is properly before the Senate, unless some Senator makes the point of order that amendments to the House text must be first considered; but speaking to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, I desire to say that I sincerely hope that it will prevail.

If I had my way about the matter, the entire administration of the pending measure, whether the House bill is adopted or the Senate bill is adopted, would be committed to the Federal Trade Commission. That body ought to administer this bill; and it ought to administer every bill of similar character. We would in that way attain greater economy in government, and, I think, would attain very great efficiency in the administration of the law. The Federal Trade Commission, while it seems to be under suspicion, and certainly is under criticism on the part of some Senators, is one of the most valuable and helpful functions ever created in recent times. It has abundantly justified the hopes of those who are responsible for its existence, and it has repeatedly every year vindicated the necessity for its creation.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question, simply for my information?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I have just come into the Chamber. The effect, then, of the amendment to which the Senator refers would be to put the packers under two organizations—under the one created by the bill and also under the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. CUMMINS. It may be that that is true, but practically, as the Senator from Nebraska has stated, it will not create or give rise to any conflict. The real jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission is based on a complaint alleging unfair methods of competition filed with the commission. It then investigates that complaint and renders such decision as the facts may seem to warrant.

It is true that the Federal Trade Commission has authority to make other investigations, and it might be that the Secretary of Agriculture or the live-stock commissioner, as the case may be, would have concurrent authority to make some investigation, but I can not see any real objection to that course. I hope before we are through with the matter that the Federal Trade Commission will be substituted for the Secretary of Agriculture or the live-stock commissioner in the administration of this bill, although I do not know that any Senator has prepared an amendment of that character. I think such an amendment would be a wise one, and that it ought to prevail.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Iowa that I have an amendment which I intend to propose at the proper time, substituting the Federal Trade Commission for the agency provided by the bill for the administration of the act.

Mr. CUMMINS. I presumed that some Senator would have such an amendment, and, so far as I am concerned, I favor it.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. FERNALD. I should like to inquire of the Senator, whom I know to be a most excellent lawyer, whether or not the Federal Trade Commission at this time has not the authority to do everything that is proposed to be done or suggested to be done under this bill by the commissioner or by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; it has not.

Mr. FERNALD. What particular authority does not that commission have?

Mr. CUMMINS. There are a great many things that it has no authority to do that some agency would have authority to do under the measure, if either the House bill or the Senate measure prevails.

Mr. FERNALD. In what particular?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Iowa has expired.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will answer the question later.

Mr. FERNALD. The Senator can answer in my own time, if he pleases.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will answer it later.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. What is that amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understood the Chair to rule that the text of the House bill was first to be perfected, in which case I had supposed the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] would have been in order.

Mr. NORRIS. The Chair has stated that the amendment has been agreed to. There was no point of order made against the motion, and after we have voted on it, and the question has been decided, it is hardly right for a Senator to ask to go over the proceedings again. I have no objection to the yeas and nays being called, if Senators did not understand the question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not made a point of order. I stated my understanding of the situation. However, if I should want to make a point of order, it is too late to make it, and I do not insist upon it at all.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it would certainly be too late after the result of the vote has been announced.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Personally I do not care when the vote is taken on any of the amendments.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not see anything wrong in voting on amendments to the Senate bill first, or the House bill, just as the amendments may come up.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They can be voted on at the same time, if the Senator wants to pursue that course.

Mr. NORRIS. But if there should be a conflict, and two Senators were trying to offer amendments, one to the House bill and one to the Senate bill, the Chair would decide and give preference to the Senator proposing an amendment to the House bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I shall be perfectly satisfied if the Chair decides in that way.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I did not understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska was being voted on. I thought another amendment was before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I had the same impression.

Mr. LODGE. I did not understand the question, or, of course, I should have asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to the yeas and nays.

Mr. LODGE. The bill has not been reported to the Senate as yet.

Mr. NORRIS. I am willing to have the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are called for. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. NORBECK's name was called). I am authorized to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If the Senator from South Dakota were present, on this motion he would vote "yea."

While I am on my feet I desire also to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] is necessarily absent and that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence, being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS. Has the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WILLIS. I am paired for the day with that Senator. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ELKINS. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with whom I have a general pair, I think has not voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. LODGE. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], but I understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote, and I am therefore privileged to vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Ashurst	Glass	Kenyon	Smith
Borah	Gooding	La Follette	Spencer
Capper	Harreld	McCumber	Sterling
Caraway	Harris	McLean	Swanson

So Mr. NORRIS's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I rise at this time to address myself to an amendment that I propose to offer to the Senate bill. I speak of it now so that I may explain the nature of it. The amendment that I desire to offer is directed to a certain portion of section 17, which appears in the parallel print on page 13.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, may I not renew my parliamentary inquiry, to the end that we may consider one bill and the amendments thereto until the end? I understood the Chair to rule that we must perfect the so-called House bill first by amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but if I wait until all the amendments to the House bill are presented to say what I have to say I shall have no opportunity, because debate will close.

Mr. McCORMICK. I am not objecting to that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not intend to tender my amendment now. I recognize that amendments to the House bill are in order.

On reading section 7 of the Senate bill and section 17 of the Senate bill I was first impressed with the belief that they were practically duplicates of each other, simply a different remedy being given. I am inclined to think, however, that there is some virtue in the first part and the concluding portion of section 17 separate and apart from anything that is contained in section 7. Section 7 gives a plenary power to subpœna witnesses and to call for books and papers, and so on, and provides for proceeding in contempt against a contumacious witness. Section 17 practically covers the same ground, but makes a contumacious witness subject to penalties under the criminal law. If one proceeds under section 17 he can not get the testimony immediately, but must await an indictment by a grand jury or information by a prosecuting officer, while section 7 gives a speedy relief by contempt proceedings in court against the contumacious witness.

Some of our legislation proceeds upon one theory and some upon another. Usually, however, the way in which a witness who is contumacious is proceeded against is by a contempt proceeding, although there are some statutes which authorize prosecutions upon criminal charges; but I am not aware of any statute which will authorize both processes, and I see no particular occasion for it here. Moreover, it might be questionable whether, for various reasons, it would be desirable to include both. It might seem that the provisions were inspired by vindictiveness.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? What is the language that the Senator proposes to strike out?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I propose to strike out, commencing at line 12, on page 13, down to and including the word "imprisonment."

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would give it in the regular bill, so that we can all follow it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is on page 41.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is on page 41, commencing with the word "any" in line 2, down to and including the word "imprisonment" in line 13. I read as follows:

> Any packer or operator, or any officer, agent, or employee of such packer or operator, who, within a reasonable time prescribed by the officer or agent making the request, not exceeding 30 days from the date of the receipt of the request, willfully fails or refuses to answer such questions or to produce such books, papers, records, or correspondence, or who willfully gives any answer that is false or misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator that there is some duplication in those two sections. Personally, I have no objection to striking out this language. I think we ought to strike it out or else amend the other section.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was moved to make a study of the two sections by reason of the comments made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in his remarks a few days ago, and I thought there was some justice in some of the criticisms that he made of these two sections.

At the appropriate time I shall move to amend section 17 by eliminating that language.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to make a suggestion to the Senator from Montana, who discussed that matter with me some days ago. I spoke briefly this morning about the reason for section 17. I do not know that the Senator was here. The Federal Trade Commission have been enjoined by the courts where they have tried to secure evidence as to the cost of production. For instance, in the coal matter and in the steel matter the courts have held that that was information concerning manufacturing in States, and was not related to interstate commerce.

The purpose of this section is to strengthen the situation by providing that the information is to be secured for Congress. Whether that argument will be good or not, that is the purpose of section 17.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator will understand that the amendment I offer does not in any wise restrict the power of the commission or the duty of the packers. It simply eliminates the penalty for failure.

Mr. KENYON. I am inclined to think the Senator is right about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment is the committee bill, and there has been one amendment made to it; and now the question is on agreeing to that amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended by two amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the House text been perfected?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No amendments have been offered to the House text.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] offered an amendment to the House text.

Mr. KENYON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. If the Senate agrees to the committee amendment as amended, then it will be adopted as a substitute for the House bill, will it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is there not pending now an amendment to the so-called House bill offered by the Senator from Montana?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not understood that the Senator from Montana has as yet offered his amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did offer an amendment to the House text.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At which time there was an amendment pending.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. May I suggest to the Senator from Montana, who, I understand, desires to amend the House text, that under the ruling of the Chair the pending question is the adoption of the committee amendment, which substitutes the Senate committee bill for the House text, and after that has been agreed to how can the House text be amended when it has been eliminated by something else being substituted for it?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as I understand the procedure of the Senate, as determined by its rules, in such a case as this there are two distinct, independent propositions; one is the text of the House bill, the other is the proposed substitute reported by the committee, and before there can be a vote which will determine whether the Senate committee substitute shall take the place of the House bill the text of either can be amended, or the texts of both can be amended. So it would seem to me that our rules require us to proceed first to amend the text of the House bill and next to amend the text of the proposed substitute, and then we will have a comparison of the two and can vote as to whether the substitute shall be adopted or not. I have no objection whatever to proceeding in the reverse order——

Mr. McCORMICK. I have.

Mr. CUMMINS. Amending the text of the Senate substitute first and amending the text of the House bill later. But they ought to be treated as two independent and distinct propositions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is not any dispute. The Chair must eventually put the question which he said is the pending question. If some Senator wants to amend the House text or the Senate committee amendment, why does he not offer his amendment?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, it may be that we are laboring under some misapprehension. Certainly I understood that an amendment had been offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Montana also so understood it. I offered the amendment.

Mr. McCORMICK. Precisely.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquired beforehand whether amendments to the House text were in order, and on being informed that they were I tendered my amendment. Thereupon attention was called to the fact that an amendment to the committee amendment was pending; and, by unanimous consent, and without objection, the amendment to the Senate committee amendment was taken up for consideration. I simply waived the priority to which my amendment was entitled. But if there is any question about it at all, I now tender the amendment to the House text.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the place where he desires to have his amendment inserted.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. At the end of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the end of what bill?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. At the end of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Montana moves to amend by adding at the end of the House text, on page 29, after line 7, the following:

> Nothing herein contained shall be construed to repeal, in whole or in part, any provision of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," or any act amendatory thereof, or to exempt any person from liability or prosecution thereunder.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to section 316 of the House text.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Illinois moves to amend section 316, found on page 24 of the original print, by striking out the section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

> SEC. 316. Sections 203 and 204 of this act shall be applicable in enforcing the provisions of this title.

Mr. McCORMICK. The purpose of that amendment, Mr. President, is to subject the commission men and dealers to the same provisions as apply to the packers under section 204. It makes the provisions identical.

Mr. SMOOT. Does it give the right of appeal?

Mr. McCORMICK. The same right of appeal is afforded. It puts the little commission men and the dealers in exactly the same position as the packers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to section 309.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Illinois moves to amend section 309–A, found on page 18 of the House text, by striking out, in line 13, the words "one year," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "ninety days."

Mr. KENYON. Will not the Senator explain the amendment?

Mr. McCORMICK. Certainly. If the Senator from Iowa and other Senators will turn to section 309, they will find the following language: "Any person complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer," and so forth, "may make complaint within one year." That provision giving a year in which to file complaint, especially as it applies to the small dealers and commission men, who keep no elaborate system of books, is liable to very grave abuses. If there is ground for complaint, surely 90 days gives the complainant time enough to file his complaint. If it does not, I should be interested to have some Senator explain why it does not.

Mr. KENYON. Would it be possible that the matter might not be known? I see no objection to the amendment at all if it is a cause of action that is apparent. If it is something which a man knows, he should, of course, present it within a reasonable time. Any difficulty would be avoided by putting in the words "and is known."

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator from New York consider the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa? He is more familiar with the wording of the act than I am. I can not conceive that there would be ground for a complaint that would not be known. These complaints arise out of the sale of live stock within the yards, the prices paid, the charges made for the service, and so forth. Surely the owner of live stock would know within 90 days if the service had been unsatisfactory.

Mr. KENYON. Then there would be no objection to putting in the words "and is known." A cause of action might accrue and might not be known. There might be such a circumstance. I do not know that it is likely to arise, but how could there be any objection to putting in the words "and is known"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Where does the Senator from Iowa propose to put in those words?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Illinois proposes to strike out, on page 18, line 13, the words "one year," and to insert the words "ninety days," and I suggest that the words "and is known" be inserted.

Mr. McCORMICK. Known to whom?

Mr. KENYON. Known to the complainant. The cause of action might have accrued, and the party might not know it.

Mr. McCORMICK. How could it be that he would not know it?

Mr. KENYON. He might not. There might be a case of that kind.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think if the words suggested by the Senator from Iowa are put in, it will remove all limitation whatsoever as to the time in which the complaint may be made.

Here is the situation. A buyer goes to the stockyards to purchase some cattle and take them home, we will say, to put them on feed, or on pasture. He goes through the yards and interviews commission men, or traders, and asks them if they have the kind of cattle he is looking for; he tells them, generally, what sort of cattle he is looking for, what ages he would like, what weights, and what quality. The commission man says to him, "Yes; I think I have some that will suit you, and if you will come around to pen numbered such-and-such, I will show them to you."

The prospective buyer goes to the pen, he looks at the cattle, and he discusses with the commission man those cattle, what kind of cattle they are, where they came from, and how they were bred and how they were fed before they came to the yards, if the commission man happens to know, and how much they will weigh; and he will say to the commission man, "I would like to buy a couple of loads of steers that will average about 950 pounds. How much do you think those cattle will weigh?" The commission man will say, "I think they will weigh 1,000 pounds, or they may weigh 975 pounds. Judgments vary."

No record is kept of those conversations. It is utterly impossible to do it. But finally the buyer purchases the cattle after this hurried conversation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired. The Chair will recognize the Senator from New York in his own time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If a Senator rises while another is speaking and takes up his time, does he still have the right to speak in his own time? I am not raising the point on the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A Senator who yields loses his right at the end of five minutes.

Mr. KENYON. Then a Senator can give his time to some one else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; he can not; but the Senator from New York was answering a question asked by the Senator from Illinois; the time of the Senator from Illinois expired, and the Chair, supposing that the Senator from Illinois desires to hear the explanation of the Senator from New York, will recognize the Senator from New York in his own time.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest to the Chair that if he follows that procedure, a Senator could talk as long as he could get Senators to yield time or ask him questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair would not permit a thing of that kind to occur. In this case the Senator from Illinois asked a question of the Senator from New York, and the Senator from New York was answering the question. The Chair rules that the time of the Senator from Illinois has expired. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As I was saying, the purchase is finally consummated and the purchaser ships the cattle to his place at home. Later on after the cattle arrive at home it may be found that the cattle did not weigh a thousand pounds. The commission man may have been 25 or 50 pounds per head off in his estimate given to the purchaser. They may turn out not all to be 3-year-old steers. Some in the load may be less than 3 years old, a fact which can only be finally determined by an examination of the teeth.

As the House bill is written it would seem to give the purchaser of the cattle, after he has got them home, a whole year in which to bring a complaint against the commission man or the trader, complaining that he had falsely described the cattle to him, although he had seen them himself, as to their age or their weight or their quality or their previous history.

It would put the trader or the commission man at the absolute mercy of any crooked man who went to the yards and then was disappointed in the cattle which he bought and would try to lay the blame on the commission man, later on file a complaint with the Secretary of Agriculture, have a hearing on it, and the commission man, who in the meantime will have had thousands and thousands of other transactions involving thousands and thousands of cattle, will have no record of the conversations, and the complainant can set up an affidavit, if he wants to, asserting that he has been fooled.

Not all of the men who buy cattle in stockyards are honest. The overwhelming majority are, but sometimes there is a crooked buyer who, when suffering from the result of his own bad judgment, would like to place that burden upon the commission man and penalize him. Therefore the commission men and the traders say that that man ought to have a restricted period assigned to him in which he can make his complaint. If I had my way about it, I would make it 30 days instead of 90.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I wish to say a word about the proposed amendment. There would not be a single vote against the amendment if everyone were familiar with the facts. It ought to be agreed to unanimously, because it involves transactions in the yards, the correctness and integrity of which can be proved more correctly within a few days after they occur than one year after they occur. The amendment ought to be agreed to without a single objection.

Mr. McCORMICK. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming, who is so familiar with the subject, if he would suggest 30 or 60 days instead of 90?

Mr. KENDRICK. I would prefer to have it 60 days rather than 90 days.

Mr. McCORMICK. If the Senator will offer that amendment to my amendment, I shall be glad to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois may modify his own amendment if he desires.

Mr. McCORMICK. I ask that it be modified in that respect and made 60 days instead of 90 days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment as modified will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 18, line 13, strike out the words "one year" and insert in lieu thereof the words "60 days."

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am not in charge of the bill and have little detail knowledge of the subject, but I am very heartily in favor of some legislation providing for the governing of the packing industry. It seems to me if we reduce to 60 days the time in which complaint can be made and make it that shorter period instead of 90 days, that it would place at a great disadvantage persons who may desire to make complaint.

The stockyards and those handling the cattle product or products which are brought into their business have within their knowledge the details of all transactions. If something is done that might be fraudulent upon the seller or the purchaser, it is possible that he would not discover it within a certain length of time. If we make the limitation too short we preclude him from making his complaint. Take as an illustration the matter of selling products on commission through the commission merchant system. I have known of instances where the seller was probably defrauded or there was every indication of it, and yet the producer and shipper of the products would not ascertain that fact perhaps for 60 or 90 days thereafter. There might be some evidence that indicates early in the transaction that there had been some crooked work done in connection with it, but the producer a thousand or two thousand miles way from the market and from the stockyards has an uphill business in ferreting out his case and ascertaining whether he had been mistreated or not. Yet it is proposed now, even by the friends of the bill, to preclude him if he does not discover it within 60 days.

Feeling in sympathy with some effective, sincere regulation of the packing industry, I am opposed to limiting the time to 60 days. I think 90 days would be a great deal better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I understand amendments are being offered and are in order to the House text. I wish to offer several. I offer the amendment which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 11, line 16, after the word "receiving," the first word in the line, insert the words "buying or selling on a commission basis," so that the paragraph will read:

The term "stockyard services" means services or facilities furnished at a stockyard in connection with the receiving, buying, or selling on a commission basis, marketing, feeding, watering, holding, delivery, shipment, weighing, or handling, in commerce, of live stock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. I now move to insert, on page 12, at the end of section 301 of the House text, the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 12, at the end of section 301, at the end of line 2, after the word "purchaser" and before the period, insert the following:

And includes any packer in his capacity as a buyer or seller of live stock in commerce and any employee or agent of any packer in such capacity.

Mr. KENYON. The purpose of this amendment is simply to make it specific that the buyers of the packers, who may operate under assumed names or as dummies in the stockyards, shall be included. There can not be any question about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. I now offer a new section, to be inserted in the House text, to be known as section 307½, to follow section 307, on page 17. If anyone understands the numbering of the House text, I wish he would explain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 17, after line 18, the Senator from Iowa offers the following as a new section:

SEC. 307½. If any market agency participates in the enforcement of or enforces or carries out any rule, regulation, or practice of a live-stock exchange or similar organization of which he is a member which is designed to prohibit or has the effect of prohibiting membership in such organization to a cooperative association of producers engaged in business similar to that of such member because of the method of distributing surplus earnings of such association among its members, such action by the market agency shall be deemed an unjust, unreasonable, and discriminating practice.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator from Iowa explain that? That is important.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; it is. "Market agency" is defined, of course, in the House text. The purpose of the amendment is to make certain that cooperative associations shall not be excluded by the rules of a live-stock exchange. That is all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator a question in his time?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean that a cooperative association must be admitted to the exchange, even though it refuses to abide by the rules which govern all other exchanges?

Mr. KENYON. No; but if the live-stock exchange refuses admission for that mere reason, because of their method of distributing surplus earnings in such association, that shall be considered a discrimination.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to it, if that is the sole purpose of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. On page 25 I move to strike out section 401 of the House text and insert what is practically section 6 of the Senate bill, except that I add in line 20 of section 6 of the Senate text the words "and principal"; otherwise it is exactly the same as section 6 of the Senate committee bill. I think section 6 of the Senate committee bill is one of the most important things in the whole matter. It provides for publicity.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean Title VI?

Mr. KENYON. No; I am taking section 6 of the Senate bill and offering it as the substitute for section 401 of the House text.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment be reported in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The READING CLERK. On page 25, in line 7, strike out all of section 401 after the numerals "401," being from line 7 to line 20, inclusive, and insert:

The Secretary, upon his own initiative, or in cooperation with existing governmental agencies, shall investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply, consumption costs, and prices of, and all other facts relating to, the ownership, production, transportation, manufacture, storage, handling, or distribution of live stock and principal live-stock products, including operations of and the ownership of stockyards. He shall likewise compile and furnish to producers, consumers, or distributors by means of regular and special reports, or by such other methods as he deems most effective, information respecting the condition of the live-stock market and the supply, demand, prices, and other conditions affecting the market.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator from Iowa ought not to ask to strike out section 401 of the House text. It is a very important provision. I understood the amendment just offered was to be offered in addition to that section. I am in favor of the amendment. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is a good thing.

Mr. KENYON. I probably ought to say that I shall offer as an amendment to the House text section 16 of the Senate committee bill to follow the amendment now pending to complete the publicity proposition and uniform accounting proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all very important and all necessary, I think, but the Senator is striking out section 401 of the House text.

Mr. KENYON. Section 401 does not accomplish anything.

Mr. NORRIS. It provides for the keeping of books, accounts, and records.

Mr. KENYON. Section 16 of the Senate committee bill provides for that in a much better way.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is true, too.

Mr. KENYON. I am going to offer it in a moment as a further amendment to the House text.

Mr. NORRIS. All right.

Mr. SMOOT. Section 6 of the Senate committee bill provides that—

The commissioner, upon his own initiative—

And so forth.

Mr. KENYON. I have changed that, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no commissioner provided for in the House text.

Mr. KENYON. I know that. I am able to understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Secretary to read it "commissioner" just as it is in the print.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Secretary read it as I had it, "Secretary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment again.

The reading clerk read as follows:

The Secretary, upon his own initiative, or in cooperation with existing governmental agencies, shall investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply——

Mr. KENYON. That is enough.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Now, in order to make the publicity provision complete and to meet the objection of the Senator from Nebraska, I offer section 16 of the Senate bill as a separate section to the House bill, to be known as section 401½.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 25, after line 20, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 401½. Every operator and packer engaged in commerce shall keep such records and statements of account, and make such reports or returns, verified under oath or otherwise, as the Secretary shall require, as will fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in its business, and the true ownership of such business by stockholding or otherwise, in such form and at such times as the Secretary shall by order require. The Secretary may, in his discretion, prescribe uniform systems of accounts and records and require the installation and use thereof by packers or operators. For the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, or of verifying any such reports or returns, any officer or agent of the Government designated by the Secretary may, during the usual hours of business, enter and inspect any place used by any packer or operator in its business, and examine any books, papers, records, or correspondence relating to such business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARRELD. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that that amendment leaves out the penalty for not keeping such records which is provided for in section 401 which was stricken out. It seems to me as though that is a very good provision to have in the bill.

Mr. KENYON. It should be in the bill. I was under the impression that section 16 covered that matter.

Mr. HARRELD. No.

Mr. KENYON. There is, however, a general penalty provision in the Senate bill, which I think would cover that matter.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma to page 41 of the bill, which provides:

Any packer or operator, or any officer, agent, or employee of such packer or operator, who, within a reasonable time prescribed by the officer or agent making the request, not exceeding 30 days from the date of the receipt of the request, willfully fails or refuses to answer such questions or to produce such books, papers, records, or correspondence, or who willfully gives any answer that is false or misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

That is a general penalty provision.

Mr. HARRELD. That is a general provision covering this matter?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. HARRELD. It may, then, cover the point I had in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. FERNALD. I should like to have the yeas and nays on the amendment. This is one of the most important sections of the bill. It proposes to give the commissioner or his agent authority to go into every butcher shop and packing house in the country and demand of every business man his papers to the last scrap. It may divulge the secrets of any business, and I do not believe any man should have authority to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine demands the yeas and nays. The demand is not seconded. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it; the noes have it, and the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, of course that leaves the text of the House bill with the most important provision out of it—the publicity and uniform accounting provision—and makes the House bill absolutely good for nothing as a regulatory measure. However, I am going to keep on offering amendments to see if I can not improve the House bill.

Mr. KING. Is there anything in the House bill that touches the question of publicity?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; but it is very inadequate.

Mr. KING. But it was deemed to be adequate by the Members of the other House?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, I presume so; and I am sure it is also deemed to be adequate by the packers.

I move to amend section 407 by inserting, after the word "may," on line 13, page 28, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 28, it is proposed to amend section 407 by inserting, after the word "may," on line 13, the words "make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and may," so that it will read:

The Secretary may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government—

And so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. I offer an amendment to section 402 of the House bill by striking out the words "For the purpose of securing effective enforcement of the provisions of this act" and inserting what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 25, in section 402 of the House text, it is proposed to strike out the words "For the purpose of securing effective enforcement of the provisions of this act" and to insert "For the efficient execution of the provisions of this act and in order to provide information for the use of Congress."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I offer to the Senate bill the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York offers an amendment to the Senate text, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 30, in lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "owned or controlled by a packer" and to insert "used for food," so that it will read:

The term "live-stock products" means all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived from live stock and used for food.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I discussed this matter the other day at some length. The amendment is of great importance, just as is the definition of "live-stock products" as contained in the Senate bill. I merely wish to state very briefly the purpose of the amendment.

Passing for the moment to the definition of the term "packer," I invite Senators to read the language which commences on line 17, on page 30:

The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce—

The reading to that point is sufficient for my purpose. Under that definition of the term "packer" any retail butcher in the country who happens to purchase any live stock and slaughters it will be termed and deemed a packer if he sells any of that product or any of the by-products in interstate commerce, whether those products or by-products are used for food or not.

Every Senator who has lived in the country knows that the average village contains a butcher shop, and that while the local butcher gets some of his supplies from the packers' refrigerator cars that come through the country once a week, he also purchases live stock from the farmers in the neighborhood. If he purchases live stock from the farmers in the neighborhood and slaughters it himself and sells the food products in the community, and they do not pass into interstate commerce, he is not a packer under this definition; but if he sells the hides or the bones or the offal or any other of the by-products not used for food to any person who transports them into interstate commerce, that little butcher then becomes a packer, because he is dealing in interstate commerce with a live-stock product, and the term "live-stock products" under the terms of the bill "means all products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived from live stock and owned or controlled by a packer." My amendment is to strike out the words, on line 9, "owned or controlled by a packer" and substitute for them the words "used for food," so that the butcher will not be deemed a packer unless he ships food products in interstate commerce; that he shall not be deemed a packer if he merely ships the hides, five or six a week, or the bones, which are the by-products of his little butcher business.

The contention against this amendment of mine is that the authors of the bill want to get at the by-product operations of the big packers. I have contended all along that this bill does that without using the definition contained in the bill. Section 16 makes it possible for the Secretary of Agriculture to examine all the books of the packers in their slaughtering business as well as in every other, and if the slaughtering end of a big packing concern makes fraudulent or deceptive entries upon its books relating to the transfer of the by-products of the slaughtering end to a subsidiary corporation which makes fertilizer or glue or buttons of pepsin or which tans hides, then that deceptive practice can be spotted, as it were, by the Secretary of Agriculture, for under section 16 he has access to the books and can prescribe the methods for keeping those books, and another provision of the bill forbids packers to engage in any deceptive practice. So the bill is safeguarded from its authors' own standpoint even if my amendment be adopted. If my amendment shall be adopted, it will relieve thousands of small butchers all over this country from being deemed packers and compelled to make reports and be investigated and regulated in all their little businesses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON of Indiana in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if what the Senator from New York suggests were all the amendment accomplished, I do not believe anybody could have any legitimate objection to it. It was discussed in the committee, and the thought of many members of the committee was that it took from the bill the side lines and the by-product business of the packers, and we did not want to do that. According to the 1917 report of the Federal Trade Commission on dressed beef, which is a food product, the losses were $3,516,341—those figures are for Armour & Co.—while on oleo the profits were $1,364,186 and on glue, another side product——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oleo, may I say, is used for food?

Mr. KENYON. That is true of oleo; but as to glue, which is not used for food, the profits were $1,453,651 and on fertilizer the profits were $2,737,691. So the scheme is very beautiful of showing a complete loss on food products, while the profit is made on the by-products.

There has not been any intention of getting at the little butchers of whom the Senator speaks; but the bill, if good for anything, will be of no avail unless the by-products are also included.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator permit a question in his time?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is not the practice, to which the Senator alluded a moment ago, of crowding down the apparent profits on meat or the slaughtering end in order to make the profits from the by-products end a deceptive practice, and can not it be identified and stopped under the provisions of the bill which give the Secretary of Agriculture the right to prescribe the method of making and keeping accounts?

Mr. KENYON. I do not know that it would be an unfair practice, but it could be shown under that section; but that is the section that the Senate beat a few minutes ago. It is not here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is still in the Senate bill.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, it is in the Senate bill, yes. I very much hope the Senate bill will be enacted, and that will relieve the situation of a great many of these difficulties.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this identical amendment was given a great deal of consideration by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I think the language now in the definition was agreed to, after full consideration, by everybody on the committee except the Senator from New York; and the prevailing idea was that the amendment of the Senator from New York would relieve an immense amount of packer business from control. It would take out everything that was not used for food. It is unnecessary to enumerate all the things, and I could not do it in the time I have, anyway; but everybody knows that the by-products of the slaughtering business that are not fit for food run into the millions of dollars. They take in glue, hair, hides, clothing; they are almost innumerable, and the money value of them runs into many millions. If we are going to control the packers at all we ought to control them in their by-products as well as in their food products, because if we do not they can make an apparent loss on one and make it up, and a good deal more, on another.

I do not believe there is any danger of the small butcher being hurt. In the first place, the last section of the Senate bill reads as follows:

> None of the provisions of this act shall be construed to include or be binding upon a person whose chief business is the raising of live stock or agricultural products.

So that eliminates any possibility of the man who slaughters something on the farm and brings it in being regulated by the bill. I think the definition will eliminate the butchers. I can conceive how there might possibly be a case here and there, perhaps, along the line somewhere, where a butcher might do something of that kind only on particular occasions, so that it would not be much of his business. Nobody provided for in this bill will try to injure that kind of a man or try to make his business difficult. If there should be such cases, the regulatory power is not going out to hunt the little butcher and the corner groceryman; but if they get into the business enough, of course they ought to be regulated.

Possibly there will be some men that technically could be included under this measure that never will be touched. The idea, of course, is not to get the fellow who has no perceptible influence on the business. On the other hand, if we eliminate it, then we open the door wide.

At the request of the Senator from New York in the committee we modified the language as it was in the bill as originally introduced, and put in the words "and owned or controlled by a packer."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not suggest those words.

Mr. NORRIS. I know the Senator did not; but when I proposed that language, and it was agreed to, it was satisfactory to the Senator at the time. Afterwards—I am not finding fault with the Senator, but we all supposed that was ended and settled, and satisfactory even to the Senator from New York—at the next meeting it developed that he wanted to change it again.

It strikes me that it would be a very serious mistake if we put in the language that the Senator from New York wants to put in this definition, because we would let a whole lot of business, millions of business every year, out of control or regulation by whatever authority is given control of the matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senators who have charge of this bill seem to agree that the thousands of little butchers who happen to buy a few products from what we all know to be packers, but who also kill their own stock and sell their hides and other matters that are not food products in interstate commerce, ought not to be designated as packers. The surprise to me is that those who have charge of this bill, and the members of this committee, have not the ingenuity to frame an amendment that will exclude these small meat men in the little villages and cities who are not packers in any sense, and at the same time include the real packer, so that his products, whether they be food products or by-products, may be covered by the bill.

One Senator in charge of the bill says that if we adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, it will open the door wide for the benefit of the great packers; and the Senator from New York says that unless we do adopt this amendment we will make every little butcher and meat dealer in every little village in the country a packer, and subject him to the investigation of this new bureau. Now, it does seem to me that before we get through the two Senators having this matter in charge can devise an amendment that will protect the small dealer, the little butcher in the village, and at the same time will not leave the door wide open for the packer.

I hope that before we vote upon this amendment the two Senators will take the matter in hand, and will formulate an amendment that will cover just what both of them wish it to cover.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as I construe the paragraph that the Senator from New York attempts to amend, it means just exactly what the Senator from North Dakota desires. If my construction is wrong, it seems to me that that paragraph should be changed, rather than the amendment of the Senator from New York.

He offers an amendment to the paragraph that provides:

> The term "live-stock products" means all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived from live-stock and owned or controlled by a packer.

Then we turn over to the next page and we find the definition of a packer, and upon that definition depends whether the Senator from North Dakota is right or wrong:

> The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce.

Whether or not the words "sale in commerce" are intended to mean "sale in interstate commerce" I do not know; but it seems to me that the great packers that we are after undoubtedly are dealing in interstate commerce, and that if that were amended so as to read "interstate commerce" it would so designate packers as to protect the little butcher everywhere.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that in another portion of the bill the word "commerce" is defined as meaning "interstate commerce"?

Mr. PITTMAN. All right. Then, if it is defined as meaning "interstate commerce," the word "packer" does not affect the little butcher in the village.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the little butcher in the village sells his hides in interstate commerce, is he not a packer?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; but the little butcher in the village, as a general thing, does not sell his hides or anything else in interstate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, Mr. President, he sells tons of them, tons of them. They ship them to tanneries across State lines.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, there is not a butcher in my State who does not send his hides out of the State, in order to sell them to the Minneapolis or the Chicago market.

Mr. PITTMAN. If that is true, then the difficulty of making the distinction between the little butcher and the great packer is evident, and the charge of the Senator from North Dakota that there has been a dereliction in work on the part of the committee in not discovering some method of distinguishing between them is not well founded. In fact, I should like to have the Senator from North Dakota or the Senator from New York suggest some amendment that would distinguish between the little packer and the big packer. If he does, I will vote for it; but if he can not do it I do not feel at liberty to excuse the big packer for the crimes that I believe have been committed by reason of the fact that it may work some injury upon some little butcher somewhere.

While I am on my feet I want to call attention to another provision here, although it is not directly in point. It was introduced by me the last time this bill was before Congress for the purpose of protecting, as far as possible, the people who were not really chiefly engaged in the packing business. I refer to this provision, which is now upon the bill, section 30:

None of the provisions of this act shall be construed to include or be binding upon a person whose chief business is the raising of live stock or agricultural products.

That amendment was offered by me during the last session, and is now a part of the bill. It certainly protects the cattle raiser and the farmer. Now we get down to the sole point that there are a few little butchers that may be injured by this act. I should like to exclude them from the effects of this act, and I should like those who criticize the committee for lack of ingenuity to make a suggestion along that line.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like either the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] or my colleague [Mr. KENYON], in my time, as far as this amendment is concerned, to explain what is the objection to the definition of "packer" contained in the House bill. As I understand the definition of "packer" in the House bill, it will include the by-products of the big packer, but will not include those of the little butcher referred to by the Senator from New York; and I have not yet heard any statement with regard to any objection that may exist to the definition of "packer" in the House bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have not criticized the definition of "packer" in the House bill. As a matter of fact, I have not given the House definition as much consideration as the Senator has, and the Senate committee did not go into that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Would not the Senator be willing to substitute in the Senate bill the definition of "packer" as found in the House bill?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I would not, Mr. President, at least not without more consideration being given to this definition. Here is the way we looked at it, I think: A great deal of time was given to these different definitions, but the definitions in the House bill and the definitions in the Senate bill will both be in conference if the Senate substitutes the Senate bill; and I presume the theory was that they could get the best there was in the definitions of both bills. Probably it will come to that anyway in the end.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, there are some things I can not favor in the Senate committee bill and some things I can not favor in the House bill; but the definition of "packer" in the House text is a much clearer and fairer definition of that word, as employed in the bill, than the definition contained in the Senate committee bill, as I view the question, and it would not impair the efficiency of the measure in any way that I can perceive to accept the House definition.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. It might be all right, as the Senator says, to substitute the definition; but when you are dealing with a definition, something that is very technical, it would be dangerous, it seems to me, without full consideration, to see whether it would not be necessary to change a good many other definitions if we made this exception.

Mr. CUMMINS. I quite agree with the Senator from Nebraska. I supposed these two definitions had been very carefully compared in the committee, and that the definition in the Senate committee bill had been adopted with a full knowledge of what it meant.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the definition of "packer" in the House text is rather a complicated definition. It takes a couple of pages of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is necessarily complicated. There is not any form of language that could be simpler and that would express what either the House or the Senate intends to express by the term. But I thought I would suggest that for the consideration of the members of the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think Senators are unduly alarmed about the condition in which the poor butcher in the little village will find himself. At the same time, Mr. President, I think there is an erroneous idea entertained with respect to the importance of the language criticized by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. Under the definition of "packer," any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock is a packer. Of course, that includes the five big packers. We need not go further to include them. They are packers because they slaughter live stock, and it is not only the slaughterers of live stock and the preparers of meat products who are under regulation and control, but everything they produce comes under the provision. All of their business becomes subject to regulation.

It is intended to go beyond that, and to regulate also those people who are not engaged in slaughtering live stock, but who are engaged in preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce. In addition to the five great packers in Chicago, there are a lot of corporations that go to the stockyards and secure certain of the by-products. For instance, I know of a firm which goes there and gathers up the entrails and prepares those entrails so that they become casings for sausages. They clean them and pack them, and that kind of thing.

The words "preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce" are intended to expand the definition of "packer," so as not only to include the five great packers who slaughter the live stock, and also prepare the side products, but is intended to embrace those people who are not engaged in even slaughtering live stock but are engaged in preparing these side products.

So that when you have a definition making everybody a packer who is engaged in slaughtering live stock, you have the big packer within your definition and subject to all the regulation and control the act provides for.

Accordingly, Mr. President, when we come to deal with these outside organizations or associations or individuals it does not seem to me necessary to expand it so as to include anything except food products.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator construe that definition to mean that anyone, a farmer, for instance, who slaughters his own cattle for his own table, is a packer under the definition?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; he must slaughter for sale in commerce.

Mr. McCUMBER. And "commerce" means interstate commerce.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It means interstate commerce. We have the man who slaughters for sale in interstate commerce, which includes all the great packers. But we want to include some one else besides them, namely, those persons who do not slaughter at all, but take live-stock products and prepare them for sale in interstate commerce. Those are the only people who are affected by the concluding language in the section to which the amendment of the Senator from New York is directed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not very well informed about this bill, and I want to know, for information, if the terms of the bill will apply to those industries which prepare hides for market.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should say that the language now proposed does.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That would carry it into the tanner's establishment and into the harness maker's establishment and into the bootmaker's establishment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It quite obviously makes a packer one who prepares hides so that they may be sold in interstate commerce.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That would cover boots and shoes, would it not?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should say not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The maker of boots and shoes is preparing hides for sale in the market, is he not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He has to be "a subsidiary of or an adjunct to any such slaughtering or preparing business."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. "Or of marketing live-stock products." That is a third class. There are three classes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am asking the Senator for information.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should say that one who went to the packing houses in Chicago and took a contract to take all the hides they produced, and then pickled those hides, or otherwise prepared them, so that they could be marketed, would, under the provisions of this act, considering the definition given of "live-stock products," be under the supervision of the act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If he was a shoemaker who bought the hides at the packing house, and then ultimately sold the products of those hides, his disposing of his shoes would be commerce in shoes, and he would be a packer.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If he was not only a shoemaker but was a tanner and a dealer in hides, he would be subject to the provisions of the act, not because he was a shoemaker but because he was a dealer in hides, and was preparing the hides for sale in commerce.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I mean; it would carry to that point if he tanned his own hides.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I simply rose to say that I do not attach any particular importance to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York; at least, I do not attach anything like the importance to it that was indicated by the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish to call to the attention of both the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] this qualification of the definition of a packer, which clearly shows that it does not include a harness maker or a bootmaker. The language to which I call their attention reads:

As a subsidiary of or an adjunct to any such slaughtering or preparing business.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator from Nevada yield for a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The term "packer" includes three classes—first, those who are engaged in slaughtering live stock for sale in commerce; second, those who are engaged in preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce; and, third, those who are marketing live-stock products as a subsidiary of or an adjunct to any such slaughtering or preparing business.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. A butcher, in order to be brought in under this definition of "packer," would have to go further than the Senator from New York has indicated. The bill provides that—

The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce.

He gives the case of a butcher selling the hide in interstate commerce. That alone would not make him a packer. He can buy the hide of the farmer and sell it and handle it in interstate commerce, but he is not preparing it. He does not come under this definition, even under the Senator's statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator is mistaken. Mr. President, I believe I have about a minute left.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement no Senator is allowed to speak more than once or longer than five minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Have I consumed five minutes on this amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has spoken once.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New York, because I am interested in this question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can not be done.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to this matter, I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. As the language now reads, it seems to me the marketing of live-stock products under the bill is not "in commerce."

Under the language as it stands, anyone engaging in the marketing of live-stock products would be under the terms of the bill, whether engaged in commerce or not. I wanted to ask the Senator from Nebraska if that was what it meant.

Mr. NORRIS. Where is the language to which the Senator refers?

Mr. LENROOT. The bill provides that—

The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce, or of marketing live-stock products as a subsidiary of or an adjunct to any such slaughtering or preparing business.

In other words, the words "in commerce" do not qualify the last part of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think they qualify the first part of it?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; the words "in commerce" qualify the slaughtering.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator suggests that those words should be repeated?

Mr. LENROOT. I think they should be.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not any objection to that, although I do not believe it is necessary. If there is any doubt about it, they ought to be repeated.

Mr. STERLING. Does not the word "such" cover the question raised by the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LENROOT. No; a subsidiary business, without the qualification, need not be engaged in commerce at all.

Mr. STERLING. But the slaughtering or preparing business referred to in line 21 goes back to the slaughtering or preparing business referred to in the first three lines of the paragraph. The language is, "the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce." Now, the balance of the language is, "or of marketing live-stock products as a subsidiary of or an adjunct to any such slaughtering or preparing business."

Mr. LENROOT. To bring a person within the terms of this definition, he must first be engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce; but, that being so, there may be a subsidiary or an adjunct to that business with reference to live-stock products where he does not engage in interstate commerce at all, and yet he clearly would be within the terms of the bill, which, of course, is beyond the power of Congress.

Upon the point the Senator from New York spoke of, it seems very clear that it would not apply to a farmer, because the farmer must be engaged in interstate commerce in the slaughtering of his beef, for if not, he would not be an adjunct or subsidiary to the principal business that would bring him within the definition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was never contended that he would.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in an act of this kind, bearing the penalties it proposes, it seems to me it is of the greatest importance to have clearly defined the people who are to be subject to it. I want to read in full the definition of what would constitute a packer in the bill and see how many Senators think they understand who the parties would be who would fall within these provisions. The House provision defines the term "packer" this way on page 3 of the House text:

The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business (a) of buying live stock in commerce for purposes of slaughter, or (b) of manufacturing or preparing meats or meat food products for sale or shipment in commerce, or (c) of manufacturing or preparing live-stock products for sale or shipment in commerce, or (d) of marketing meats, meat-food products, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, or eggs, in commerce; but no person engaged in such business of manufacturing or preparing live-stock products or in such marketing business shall be considered a packer unless—

(1) Such person is also engaged in any business referred to in clause (a) or (b) above, or unless

(2) Such person owns or controls, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or control or otherwise, by himself or through his agents, servants, or employees, any interest in any business referred to in clause (a) or (b) above, or unless

(3) Any interest in such business of manufacturing or preparing live-stock products, or in such marketing business is owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or control or otherwise, by himself or through his agents, servants, or employees, by any person engaged in any business referred to in clause (a) or (b) above, or unless

(4) Any person or persons jointly or severally, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or control or otherwise, by themselves or through their agents, servants, or employees, own or control in the aggregate 20 per cent or more of the voting power or control in such business of manufacturing or preparing live-stock products, or in such marketing business and also 20 per cent or more of such power or control in any business referred to in clause (a) or (b) above.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the definition which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] said was so simple.

Mr. CUMMINS. On the contrary I said it was not simple but very much better than the definition contained in the Senate committee bill. It is very complicated in any event.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senate committee definition of the people who are to be controlled by the provisions of the bill is in my opinion also deficient, and I am perfectly convinced that there would be no way in practice for the commissioner charged with the execution of the duties under the bill to decide what class of people fell within it. Instances have been given here of small butcher shops, all of which receive some of their products in commerce and sell some of their products in commerce. Now, unless you are prepared to say this whole class of people shall be included, everybody who buys any cattle anywhere in one State for sale in another shall be a packer, everybody who buys a dozen eggs in one State for sale in another State shall be a packer, and it will be hopeless of enforcement unless you decide to allow the secretary or the commissioner in charge of the provisions of the bill to himself make the classification and decide against which of all these people he will enforce the law, then it will be hopeless of enforcement.

For myself I think I agree with the senior Senator from Iowa. I do not know that he has said this, but I will say it—that it is an imposition upon the people to pass statutes which have criminal results without defining clearly the people who are to fall within those statutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

UMI

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it seems to me inscrutable that the objections which have been announced can be made to this clause of the bill. It reads:

The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce.

That phrase means interstate commerce. If any butcher or farmer does not slaughter or prepare his beef for interstate commerce, he does not come under this clause, neither as to the food products nor the by-products. Listen to this language:

The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce—

Now, listen to this language—or marketing live-stock products as a subsidiary of or an adjunct to such slaughtering or preparing business.

It does not reach the hides and extra products in that case if the man is not slaughtering the animal for interstate commerce. The phrase is perfectly clear.

Or of marketing live-stock products as a subsidiary of or an adjunct to any such slaughtering or preparing business.

If the slaughtering and preparing business of the village butcher does not include slaughtering and preparing for interstate commerce, but simply for local trade, it does not reach the case, nor does it reach the hides of such animals because that is an adjunct of the business, and that business is not slaughtering for interstate commerce. If a man butchers and prepares meat for interstate commerce, he would come under the provision, but the ordinary village butcher does not do that. He butchers animals and prepares them for use in the neighborhood, and therefore he is not engaged in interstate commerce, and if he does not butcher in interstate commerce how can the adjunct of that come under the head of interstate commerce?

The provision of the bill seems to me perfectly consistent and clear. If a butcher does not engage in butchering and preparing meat for interstate commerce, he does not come under the provisions of the bill. If the village butcher, perhaps on a boundary line between two States, should butcher and distribute meat in two States, he would come under the provisions of the bill, but that would only be in a few isolated cases along State boundary lines. In the great area of the States where the farmer or anyone else butchers for local consumption and not for the purpose of interstate commerce he does not come under the term "packer."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. A person in the interior of my State is engaged as a butcher and sells all his meat in the little town in which he is so engaged, but when he skins Mr. Steer he is preparing that hide for sale either in Minneapolis or Chicago——

Mr. NELSON. But the Senator is blind to the balance of that phrase.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; it says "or preparing live stock."

Mr. NELSON. Is not cutting off the hide of the animal an adjunct to the business of butchering? Will the Senator answer that question?

Mr. McCUMBER. I answer the question in the language of the bill, that it means "any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products," and the hide is a live-stock product for sale in commerce.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator overlooks the word "adjunct."

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I do not. The language is "or." If it said "and," having reference to the marketing of live-stock products as subsidiary, then the Senator's statement might be true; but it says "or marketing."

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator were a village butcher and killed a steer and took off the hide, is that hide not a subsidiary to the butchering of the animal?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but it does not have to be subsidiary in order to come within interstate commerce.

Mr. NELSON. Is it not an adjunct of the business?

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. NELSON. If it is not subsidiary and adjunct to the business, how can the Senator say it brings in the village butcher or farmer?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I move to amend by striking from the House text, on page 2, from line 16 to the close of the title, including line 9, on page 3.

In order to make my motion understandable, I shall be compelled to read the paragraph immediately preceding, as follows:

(6) The term "commerce" means commerce between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof; or between points within the same State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof; or within any Territory or possession, or the District of Columbia.

What follows is an effort on the part of those who prepared the bill to define or to secure a legislative declaration of what constitutes interstate commerce. Any such declaration would be entirely futile. Congress can not make or unmake interstate commerce. That is determined by the character of the transaction or movement, or whatever it may be.

This is the language I propose to strike out:

(b) For the purpose of this act (but not in anywise limiting the foregoing definition) a transaction in respect to any article shall be considered to be in commerce—

That is, to be in interstate commerce—

if such article is part of that current of commerce usual in the live-stock and meat-packing industries, whereby live stock, meats, meat food products, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, or eggs, are sent from one State with the expectation that they will end their transit, after purchase, in another, including in addition to cases within the above general description, all cases where purchase or sale is either for shipment to another State, or for slaughter of live stock within the State and the shipment outside the State of the products resulting from such slaughter. Articles normally in such current of commerce shall not be considered out of such current through resort being had to any means or device intended to remove transactions in respect thereto from the provisions of this act. For the purpose of this paragraph the word "State" includes Territory, the District of Columbia, possession of the United States, and foreign nation.

I can not imagine the process of reasoning which finally arrived at the conclusion stated in this paragraph. The substantial language, it is true, is taken from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Swift case, and was entirely true as applied to the particular case, but it may be very untrue as applied to the circumstances or conditions of another case.

While I have not any responsibility for the bill, I can not sit silent when an effort is made to confuse interstate with intrastate commerce. I do not desire the Senate to assume that all commerce falls within the regulatory power of the Congress of the United States. The very Senators who have favored this general plan have objected very seriously to the interpretation of the transportation act because it seemed to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal Government and curtailed the jurisdiction of the State governments over rates within a State.

Without pausing to inquire into the justice of that criticism, I simply suggest that if we pass this bill—and some of these observations are true of parts of the Senate bill as well as of parts of the House bill—if we pass this bill as it is we shall have done very much to adopt a principle that will lead to the destruction of all State regulation and to the destruction of substantially all State police power. We ought to content ourselves with the language of the Constitution of the United States. It is for the courts, or an administrative body, in the first instance, to discover whether a particular transaction or series of transactions constitute interstate commerce or whether they constitute intrastate commerce. I could not see my way clear, I think, to vote for any measure which contained this usurpation of legislative authority and which pointed the way to a conclusion which I think is exceedingly undesirable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the House text, on pages 2 and 3 of Title I, it is proposed to strike out subsection (b), which begins in line 16, on page 2, and ends in line 9, on page 3.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to present another amendment to the House text. I will say, in a preliminary way, that the amendment I am now proposing to the House text is equally applicable to the Senate bill, and if it prevails with regard to one it ought to prevail with respect to the other.

I move to strike out from line 23, on page 4 of the bill, the words "unjustly discriminatory." In order to catch the connection that those words have with those parts of the bill immediately preceding and following, I read the language:

SEC. 202. It shall be unlawful for any packer to:

(a) Engage in or use any unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practice or device in commerce.

In other words, it is made a crime for a packer to unjustly discriminate in the business which he carries on. I venture to say that there is no one who can define the words "unjustly discriminatory," as applied to the business of a packer; I venture to say that there is no concrete conception of those words in the mind of any Senator here. How can a packer unjustly discriminate? The packer buys and sells; he buys live stock and sells the products of live stock. Would it be unjust discrimination for the packer if he pays 10 cents a pound for hogs in the morning to pay only 8 cents a pound in the afternoon? If he is to observe a price that he may establish for himself with regard to any particular product, how long must he observe that price?

What I am saying with regard to purchases applies with equal force to sales. Does the packer unjustly discriminate or discriminate at all because he pays to John Smith for his cattle 10 cents a pound and immediately thereafter buys the cattle of John Jones for 8 cents a pound? Does he discriminate against a locality because he pays to the cattle raisers in one locality in Iowa a certain sum per pound and pays to the cattle raisers in another locality a greater price per pound?

I should like to hear somebody attempt to define what constitutes "unjust discrimination" in a business of this character. We know what unjust discrimination is in the transportation service. Railroads are compelled to treat everybody alike; they are compelled to file their schedules prescribing the rates for their service, and they can not depart from those rates. In order to change their rates for service, they are compelled to give 30 or 60 days' notice, and, as a broad, general proposition, they must apply those rates to everybody in the same way. Is a packer or any other business man, no matter how sorely regulation may be needed, compelled to follow a prescribed course of that kind? When it comes to challenging the lawfulness of a packer's conduct, who is to determine what is "unjust discrimination" or what is any discrimination at all? Everything that I have said applies, of course, to the sale of his products just as effectually as to the purchase of the raw material.

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped with his gavel.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall resume the discussion when I move to strike out the same words in the proposed Senate substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment is to the text of the House bill, and I am not so particular about it; but the same language appears in the Senate bill. It is, however, the first time that I have ever in any debate or any consideration of the subject heard criticized the language which the Senator from Iowa is now criticizing. As I understand—my attention was temporary diverted—the Senator from Iowa moves to strike out the words:

> It shall be unlawful for any packer to—
> (a) Engage in or use any unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or destructive practice, or device in commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Nebraska did not give attention to my amendment. I had proposed merely to strike out the words "unjustly discriminatory."

Mr. NORRIS. I have stated that my attention was diverted. If I am mistaken as to the Senator's amendment, I should like to be corrected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 24, in line 23, it is proposed to strike out the words "unjustly discriminatory" and the comma.

Mr. NORRIS. I now understand the Senator's amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. On page 5, I move to strike out paragraph (b) of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 5, Title II, in the House bill, it is proposed to strike out subsection (b), being all that is comprised in lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6.

Mr. CUMMINS. The amendment proposes to strike out the language which will make it unlawful for any packer to—

> (b) Make or give, in commerce, any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person or locality in any respect whatsoever, or subject, in commerce, any particular person or locality to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever; or

I can not understand what that means as applied to the business of a packer. What is an undue or unreasonable advantage extended to a particular person or to a particular locality?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NELSON. The packers in Chicago of course not only buy cattle but sell and ship the products of cattle. Suppose a Chicago packer ships his product to Baltimore, Alexandria, and Washington and charges Alexandria people 10 cents a pound more than is charged to the people of Washington, or suppose the packer charges the people of Baltimore 5 cents a pound less, would not that be a discrimination worthy to be considered? Or suppose he shipped beef to this very city and sold it to one of the dealers here for 10 cents a pound and to another dealer for 20 cents a pound, would not that be an unjust discrimination, assuming the quality was the same?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know what discrimination means as applied to this subject. This is a business to which we do not propose to attach rates or prices. I am not very conservative with regard to attaching conditions to the transaction of business, but I do want every person who engages in business to know the rules by which the law intends to judge him if it brings him to account. I think that until the law declares that a packer must sell in any given community at the same price, or that he must buy in any given locality at the same price, the packer has the right to charge one more than another. If we intend to declare that there shall be uniformity in the treatment accorded by a packer to the people of a community well and good; let us do it, but there is not a Senator here who is willing to declare that a packer or any other person engaged in what has hitherto been a private business shall sell at the same price to every man in the community. I am sure he will not be willing to declare that he must pay the same to the people of every locality.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would the Senator say that it was a discrimination if the packer should sell to one dealer of meats and refuse to sell to another dealer, thereby driving one man out of business and building up the business of another man? Would that be discrimination?

Mr CUMMINS. I do not think it would. I think it would be a violation of the law, a very sharp and palpable violation of law, but it would not be a discrimination.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator tell us what law it would violate, if we do not pass the pending bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am unwilling to make men criminals until we define the crime with some reasonable certainty. If it is proposed that the packer shall sell to every person in the same community at the same price, and that he shall buy during the same day, or during the same week or the same month, from every person at the same price, we might well consider those propositions.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator if the Supreme Court has not very lately decided similar language, used, I think, in the Lever Act, to be unconstitutional for lack of certainty?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is a matter of opinion, of course, upon which lawyers may differ. I take it that the natural inference from the language used by the Supreme Court in construing the Lever Act would condemn this rather vague language.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator if it is his view that performance of these acts declared to be unlawful is made criminal?

Mr. CUMMINS. Every act that is unlawful is criminal in a certain sense.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is not criminal unless the law makes it so.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suppose what the Senator means is that they have to be prosecuted before they are declared criminals?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No, Mr. President; I have a totally different view of it. I understand that performance of these acts does not make a man a criminal at all, but simply subjects him to the revisory proceedings provided for in the act; namely, he can be brought before the Secretary of Agriculture, under the House bill, and enjoined from the performance of these things.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I answer the question in the Senator's time?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Revised Statutes of the United States make every act declared unlawful by the laws of the United States a crime and punishable as a misdemeanor. In this particular case it is true that one who is guilty of an unlawful act of this sort could not be indicted until he had been warned by the Secretary of Agriculture and had refused to desist.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will say, for the information of the Senator, that I had that view myself, as I stated upon the floor the other day; but I searched with very particular care the statutes of the United States, and I found no statute declaring an act which is declared to be unlawful to be a misdemeanor. That is a very common provision of State statutes, but I have been unable to find any such provision in the Federal law; so that if that is correct these acts would be simply subject to regulation and control as provided by the pending measure. Because the Senator has said so, I shall immediately proceed to make a further examination, because it would be a matter of very serious import if all of the things denounced here were made crimes.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, the acts complained of, the things that it is attempted to punish under this act by a very inadequate and loose definition, are already punishable by law under a more carefully prepared and more accurate definition, and under an act that has been interpreted by the courts. This character of discrimination is contrary to existing law.

The Clayton Act, now section 8835–B of the Revised Statutes, provides—

That it shall be unlawful for any person—

Packer or otherwise—

engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities, which commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States * * * where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation, or discrimination in price in the same or different commodities made in good faith to meet competition: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to say that that is the statute I had in mind when I replied to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. STANLEY. This statute abundantly covers everything that is intended to be covered here. The thing that the Clayton Act punishes is an offense, a serious offense, with a serious punishment, under a well-digested law; and it is just as wrong for the packer, and no worse, than for the oil man or the coal man or the butcher or the baker or the candlestick maker to do the same thing. All are entitled to know what the law is, and all are entitled to have it enforced in the same way, for the same offense.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, whether the violations of the orders of the Secretary or the commissioner as provided for under the House bill or the Senate bill are technically crimes or not, they are enforceable in the courts. Penalties are attached to them, money penalties, forfeitures, and the amount is prescribed in certain cases here—$500 for each day during which they neglect to obey the orders—and the orders can be enforced, on application to the courts, by injunctive proceedings by orders of the courts; and, of course, if they do not obey the instructions they are in contempt of court, and the penalty for contempt of court is jail, which, of course, is the penalty prescribed by criminal statutes. So it is entirely immaterial whether these are alleged to be crimes or misdemeanors, and punishable by jail penalty.

That is apparent on page 24 of the House bill. After section 315, providing for the payment of the money penalty for disobedience of the order, it provides, in line 15:

If after hearing the court determines that the order was lawfully made and duly served and that such person is in disobedience of the same, the court shall enforce obedience to such order by a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such person, his officers, agents, or representatives from further disobedience of such order or to enjoin upon him or them obedience to the same.

I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa in my time, if I may, if he regards the language which he did not strike out in the clause of the bill to which he submitted an amendment which prevailed as to unfair practice as being perfectly definite?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it is definite, but when the words "deceptive" or "unfair" are used you have a glimmer of its meaning; you know in a general way what it is; but when you speak of discrimination in ordinary business, unless it is coupled up as it is in the Clayton antitrust law, I do not know what it means, and I do not believe that anybody else does.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think anybody is capable of defining what is an unfair practice in commerce unless you go to the decisions of the courts where unfair methods of competition have been adjudicated, and where certain cases have been decided to present instances of unfair competition; but there is no general rule or definition that I know of which will at large or which possibly can define what unfair practices are.

Of course, that was the fundamental error that we made, in my judgment, in the jurisdiction which we conferred upon the Federal Trade Commission. Their sole duty and power and jurisdiction, outside of the inquisitorial processes with which we clothed them, was to decide and prohibit what were unfair methods of competition in commerce; and we gave them no definition or rule by which they could proceed, except their own notions, to define what constituted such unfair practices. This bill does the same thing with respect to the Department of Agriculture.

I want to say, in reply to the question which the Senator from Arkansas asked of the Senator from Iowa——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I shall have to reply later on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the amendment adopted on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] relating to the definition of live-stock products. I do that because I do not believe that Senators realized—and I doubt if the Senator from New York himself fully realized—the scope that that amendment takes or how far it will reach.

I feel sure that every Senator, whether he is for or against this bill, if we are to have a bill at all, desires it to accomplish, as far as possible, the results that are desired; but with this amendment adopted, no product of any of the big packers, other than food products, will be controlled in any way by the bill. There can not be even an inquiry upon the part of the commissioner under this bill with reference to hides, which are an inseparable part of the packing industry.

For instance, on page 33 the commissioner is given power to investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply, consumption costs, prices, etc., of live stock or live-stock products, including operations of and the ownership of stockyards. It seems to me it is absolutely indispensable in any inquiry that is made that is to be of any value, and that the commissioner must be given power to make a full inquiry into all of the business that the packer does that is inseparably connected with the packing business.

Then, again, with reference to violations, with the definition that has now been adopted by the Senate there can be any monopoly of hides by the big packers, there can be any monopoly of any by-products so long as it is not a food product, and it is utterly outside of the purview of this bill. I can not believe that Senators desired that result. I think the Senator from New York had another purpose in mind rather than that, if I understood him correctly in giving his reasons for the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the Senator, apropos of the last observation he made, that monopolies in restraint of trade are already prohibited by law and subject to severe penalties.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, that is true. The same thing can be said of all of the provisions with regard to monopoly in this bill. You might as well say that there is no reason for applying the provisions of this bill to food products because they are covered by the general law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is not, for that matter, none at all. The things that are now illegal are not affected by this bill. This bill does not make them any more illegal.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true; but if it is desirable to apply them to food products the Senator will agree that they should apply to hides, for instance, just as fully as to food products.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator will yield again, I see the point made by the Senator, applicable to section 6. I still believe that our definition of "live-stock products" is the safe and proper one. I have no objection to amending section 6 so as to permit the commissioner or the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the supply and distribution and other things, but I do not want the man who happens to sell some live-stock products in interstate commerce to be regulated just for that reason.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the great evil of making the amendment apply to section 6 would be such a limiting of the power of inquiry as to perhaps destroy any value of the inquiry; and conceding the point of the Senator from New York, as between these two I think the Senate would make a great mistake in permitting the amendment of the Senator from New York to remain in the bill, at least unless section 6 is amended.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator desire to press his motion now?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think we will have very much of an opportunity to consider an amendment to section 6 to cover the point I had in mind.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin if he called attention to the use of the term "live-stock products," also in subdivision (d) of section 12, declaring that—

It shall be unlawful for any packer to sell or otherwise transfer to or for any other packer, or buy or otherwise receive from or for any other packer, any live stock or live-stock products—

And so forth.

Mr. LENROOT. I did call attention to that. Those were the two things that will be most seriously affected if this amendment remains in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin has expired. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], which I transfer to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], and vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who is absent. I am unable to secure a transfer. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair that I made before, and making the same transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). My pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has been, by mutual consent, dissolved for to-day, in so far as the pending bill and amendments to it are concerned, and a pair has been arranged between that Senator and the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I make this explanation now so that it may be understood why I am at liberty to vote on succeeding questions. I vote "nay" upon the pending question.

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair to-day with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and not knowing how he would vote on this question, I am compelled to withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], and in his absence, being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]; and

The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Ashurst	Harreld	La Follette	Spencer
Borah	Harris	Lenroot	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	Nelson	Swanson

So the Senate refused to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I move, on page 33, line 20, after the words "distribution of live stock," to insert the words "by-products of the live-stock industry," so that it will read:

The commissioner, upon his own initiative or in cooperation with existing governmental agencies, shall investigate and make certain the demand for, the supply, consumption costs, and prices of, and all other facts relating to the ownership, production, transportation, manufacture, storage, handling, or distribution of live stock, by-products of the live-stock industry, or live-stock products.

And so forth.

This is to carry out the suggestion of the Senator from New York to permit the commissioner to inquire fully into all by-products. The Senator from New York has no objection to the amendment, I understand.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I move, on page 33, line 20, after the word "products," to insert the words "in commerce," so that it will read, "or live-stock products in commerce."

I think it is necessary that this power be limited to the marketing of live-stock products in interstate commerce. I understand the chairman of the committee has no objection to the amendment.

The amendment to the amepdment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I move, on page 38, line 4, to strike out the word "packer" and to insert the word "person," so that it will read:

(e) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to engage in any course of business.

And so forth.

This, I think, is a very important amendment. As the bill now reads, a packer might agree or arrange with any other person to engage in any course of business or to do any act for the purpose of preventing any person from carrying on a competitive or similar business in commerce, and there would be no violation of law in so doing, so far as the bill is concerned. We will all agree that for a packer to enter into such a conspiracy with any other person is equally as reprehensible as entering into such a conspiracy with a fellow packer. The word "person," of course, will include the packer. The amendment I have proposed broadens it so that if such a conspiracy were engaged in by a packer with anyone, he is subject to the provisions of the section.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the amendment just suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, but during my time I wish to say a word in reference to the question raised by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] when he interrogated the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] as to whether a person engaged in commerce under the definition of the bill must treat everybody uniformly, as I understand the purport of his question; that is, whether the shipper or seller of a product can in any way discriminate in favor of or against a purchaser.

When we prevented unjust discriminations by interstate common carriers, we were dealing with one class of people. A common carrier, of course, should treat all applicants alike, and is compelled to receive them, but a person engaged in private business, although it be in interstate commerce, is not a common carrier, and I doubt if Congress has the power to declare that he is clothed with a public necessity or that he is a public utility and must sell to everybody and must not discriminate in any of his prices or practices. It is because of that belief that I should think the provision at the bottom of page 22, section 312 of the House text, should be invalid. It does not deal with the packer at all. It says:

It shall be unlawful for any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer to engage in or use any unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practice or device in connection with the receiving, marketing, feeding, watering, holding, delivery, shipment, weighing or handling in commerce at a stockyard of live stock.

Until these concerns become public utilities and in the nature of common carriers I do not believe that at present under the Constitution Congress has the authority to pass such a provision.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire only to say that so far as I can I accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. I think the amendment improves the text of the bill, and ought to be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as I recollect the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to the House text, on page 2, it struck out all of subdivision (b). I call attention to lines 14 and 15 on the same page, in paragraph 6. The term "commerce" is there dealt with, and the last two lines of that paragraph state that "commerce" means commerce "within any Territory or possession or the District of Columbia." That language is still left, as I understand it, in paragraph 6.

Subdivision (b), which was stricken out, was an attempt on the part of the House to modify or qualify or further explain what commerce within a State or Territory should be regarded as interstate commerce. As that is now stricken out, the House text now attempts to say that commerce within a State or Territory shall be regulated by the Congress as interstate commerce. I wish to move——

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator a question? Of course, the two lines to which the Senator from New York refers are in paragraph 6 and read:

Or within any Territory or possession or the District of Columbia.

Congress has plenary, absolute power to legislate upon any subject within the District of Columbia, within any possession of the United States as that term is used, and within any Territory.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was in error in my supposition. I shall not offer the amendment.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, if I understood correctly, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] a moment ago, his statement was that it is beyond the power of Congress to say that goods and wares sold in interstate commerce shall be regulated by Congress so as to prevent a sale to one party at a price less than to another. The Senator questioned the power of Congress to do that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I did.

Mr. CARAWAY. In the antitrust laws Congress provided that—it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities.

We have already done that, and it has gone through the courts. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], as I understood him, questioned whether anyone knew what unjust discrimination is or could define it. As found in the act, it was stricken out for uncertainty. I should like to call his attention to the fact that the terms "unjust discrimination" and "unjustly discriminatory conduct" have been on the statute books and have been defined by the courts—not only the State courts but the United States courts. The term has a well-defined meaning in law.

So neither of the provisions ought to have gone out, because there was no warrant in law for believing that the unjust discrimination would be so vague and uncertain that it would be void. It has a legal meaning—it has been defined—and the Congress has already said that one dealer in a commodity could not sell to one person at one price and to another person at another price so as to create an advantage or to drive one person out of business—to discriminate in favor of one person against another.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will allow me, I do not doubt the power of Congress to prescribe exactly as it did for those purposes. An attempt to drive another person out of business by discrimination in price would be an attempt either to form a monopoly or to restrain commerce. But I do not believe that Congress has the power to say to the Senator from Arkansas, if he were keeping a grocery store, that he could not sell a quart of peaches and send them over the State line to one person for 6 cents and to another person for 7 cents if he wanted to do so.

There are a great many reasons which justify differences in prices. The perishability of the commodity, the length of the trip it has to travel, the condition of the market, and so forth, enter into that question; and it can not be said that if a man sees fit to take a quick profit by shipping some goods from Washington to Baltimore that he can not do so and can not sell another quantity of exactly the same goods in another part of the country for a different price if he does not intend to violate the terms of the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. CARAWAY. How does the Senator prove a man's intent except by what he does? If he sells to one man at one price and to another man at another price, and by that means drives one man out of business, it would not avail him, I take it, in a court to say that he did not intend to drive the man out of business, but that it was merely an incident of his getting rid of his goods at the one price to one party and at another price to another party.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator, as a lawyer, knows prefectly well that intent always has to be proved. How we can prove intent is a matter of the testimony that we have on hand and the peculiar circumstances of each case. Certainly in most of the laws that we have passed, especially the criminal laws, we do not make it an offense unless the man intended to do the thing willfully and intended to consummate an improper purpose.

Mr. CARAWAY. A man is presumed to have intended the natural consequences of his conduct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. His conduct is simply evidential as to his intent.

Mr. CARAWAY. The viciousness of striking out the words "unjust discrimination" lies right here. If you leave them in, the man might sell at one price to one party and at another price to another party, and show the different circumstances. When you strike those out and just leave the phrase as it was, that he shall not sell at different prices to different people, you have increased the hardships of the packer and not lightened them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the bill goes far enough, and in my opinion a great deal too far, when it condemns what it calls any unfair practices and makes the Secretary of Agriculture the judge of what an unfair practice may be. Unjust discrimination would certainly be an unfair practice. The words "unfair practices"——

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought it was stricken out, because it was so vague and uncertain that no one knew what it meant.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought so, too.

Mr. CARAWAY. And now, I understand the Senator to say that unjust discrimination is unfair practice.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I say that the term "unfair practice" is so broad that it includes unjust discrimination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. NORRIS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I intended before we get through to offer the amendment which I referred to some time ago on page 41, beginning at the word "any," in line 2, to strike out everything down to and including the word "imprisonment," on line 13. I now offer that amendment to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 41 of the committee amendment the Senator from Montana moves to strike out, beginning with the words "any packer," in line 2, down to and including the words "fine and imprisonment," in line 13, in the following words:

Any packer or operator, or any officer, agent, or employee of such packer or operator, who, within a reasonable time prescribed by the officer or agent making the request, not exceeding 30 days from the date of the receipt of the request, willfully fails or refuses to answer such questions or to produce such books, papers, records, or correspondence, or who willfully gives any answer that is false or misleading, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in section 10, on page 36, I move to insert, after the word "orders," in line 18, the words "as to procedure."

Senators who were here the other day and heard the statement and argument of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] will understand the general object that I have in view. The section now reads as follows:

The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government or of any State or political subdivision thereof, or with any person.

I think it is repugnant to our notion of government to delegate or attempt to delegate to any individual so broad a power as is here suggested. I do not think that the authors of the bill intend really that the commissioner or the Secretary of Agriculture, if he be substituted for the commissioner, shall be empowered to make rules, regulations, and orders except for the procedure of the administration of the act. The proposed law is full of specific authority to the commissioner to make certain orders. That is all right; but it certainly can not be intended that the commissioner shall have the authority to make general rules and regulations which shall interpret the act; that is, suppose, for instance, he is dealing with the following provision, should it remain in the law:

SEC. 202. It shall be unlawful for any packer to:
(a) Engage in or use any unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practice or device in commerce.

It can not be contemplated that we shall vest the commissioner with the authority to say by rule or by regulation what constitutes an unjust discrimination or what constitutes an unfair or deceptive practice or device in commerce. The proposed law says that if the Secretary is of the opinion or if the commissioner is of the opinion that any packer is guilty of an offense of that character, he must make a complaint and bring it before the officer for investigation and trial. Then, it is for the commissioner to determine whether or not the accused is guilty of the offense stated. It is simply an instance of the general thought in my mind of the undesirability of vesting so broad a power in the commissioner. I think that, with all the powers we have given him here, if we then provide that he shall have the authority to issue rules and regulations and orders as to the procedure to be followed under the provisions of the act, we shall have guarded the public interest in as effectual a way as it is possible to protect it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not think this amendment should be adopted. There are many things in the way of rules and regulations and orders that really do not relate to procedure. As I pointed out this morning, the violation of such orders can not become a criminal offense until after the court has acted upon the case. It seems to me that we are restricting the matter to an unnecessary degree if we limit the rules and regulations and orders merely as to procedure.

Section 10 is a general provision, which must be taken in connection with the remainder of the bill. The remainder of the bill provides for orders, as, under section 21, requiring the packer or operator to do certain things and to cease and desist from violating the provisions of the act. Is the power of issuing orders to be taken away? Take, for instance, "wiring on," that used to be practiced; I do not know that it is now. Suppose an order is made that the practice of "wiring on" shall not continue; that act does not become a criminal offense until after the court has passed on it or the time for taking the case to the court has expired. If this amendment is agreed to, it seems to me it will thoroughly cripple anything that we are trying to do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not find any provision in the bill making a violation of an order or rule or regulation a criminal act, although I have again made a search of the statutes.

Mr. KENYON. The order has to go through the same processes as everything else in the bill, to a hearing and then to the court.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I may say that a further examination of the general statutes does not reveal any statute making criminal the act which is denounced as unlawful. Accordingly the only procedure which can be instituted on charges of having violated an order, rule, or regulation is the procedure recited in the proposed act. If the Secretary or the commissioner believes that the rule, regulation, or order comes under the act, of course he will make the order; but that will be ineffective until it is passed upon by the court, and the court will pass upon the question as to whether the rule, regulation, or order falls under the provisions of this act so as to make disobedience of it a contempt. I think that the result is of no very great consequence and is quite different from what it would be if the act were subject to penal punishment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to the committee amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Secretary please state the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In section 10, page 36 of the committee amendment, line 18, after the word "orders," it is proposed to insert the words "as to procedure."

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. NORBECK's name was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and his pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If the Senator from South Dakota were present, on this motion he would vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same statement as to my pair as heretofore made, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as I have made on previous roll calls, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement heretofore made with regard to my pair, I withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to the transfer of my pair as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as previously made concerning my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], I feel obliged to withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

I am also requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. BROUSSARD. I wish to make the same statement as heretofore made with reference to my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. He would vote the same way that I intend to vote, and I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea." I ask that this announcement concerning my pair and my reason for voting stand for all subsequent roll calls on this bill.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—33.

So the amendment of Mr. CUMMINS to the amendment reported by the committee was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I move to strike from section 12, page 37, in line 7, the words "or unjustly discriminatory."

These are the same words that have already been stricken from the House bill; and the reasons which I attempted to give at that time for their elimination are as persuasive now as then, and I hope the same result will follow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 37, line 7, after the word "unfair," it is proposed to strike out the comma and the words "or unjustly discriminatory."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not think these words are vital or necessary here. I think we could get along without them. I think it would not seriously impair the working of the bill, providing the Senate bill were agreed to, to strike out the words "or unjustly discriminatory."

As it reads at present, the language is:

It shall be unlawful for any packer to engage in any unfair or unjustly discriminatory practice.

The motion is to strike out the words "or unjustly discriminatory"; but, Mr. President, it seems to me that we are getting down to splitting hairs with a technicality. Is there anybody that wants to permit a packer or anybody else to engage in discriminatory and unjust practices? All that this says is, "Be honest." It does not say anything but what everybody admits in all business ought to be done according to the stipulations of the statute that is here proposed. Why should not the packers be forbidden to engage in discriminatory practices that are unjust?

This language went out of the House bill, it is true. I did not care so much about that, because it is a part of the legislative program for which I am not responsible, and, while I should like to improve it as much as possible, I did not care so much about it; but no good can come from striking this out. Why are we hunting technicalities to relieve great, big business on every occasion and at every opportunity? Why are we so afraid to say in the law to the packers, "You must not discriminate; you shall not be unjust"? What hurt does it do to say that and to put it in the law as against any honest man or any honest corporation? When we are dealing with these great institutions that as a matter of fact, from the evidence, have been condemned before the moral sentiment of the world, when it is proposed to say, "You shall not discriminate; you shall not be unjust," why are we saying, "You must not put that in the law for these fellows"?

If we were going to legislate about a pauper, I do not suppose there would be so much objection to laying down a rule of honesty for him. This does not hurt anybody if it does not do any good; and why are we wasting our time trying to provide technical loopholes in the law for these big corporations to crawl out of? If they are not doing a discriminating business, if they are treating nobody unjustly, it will not hurt them.

When a complaint is made against these packers for something of this kind that is claimed to be wrong, there is a hearing, an opportunity given to be heard, a trial; and the judgment of the commissioner, if it is against the packers, is that they must desist. In other words, after they have been found to be doing wrong, and come up for trial, the only judgment the commissioner renders is, "Be good. Do not do it again." If they do not do it again, it is all over and it is all past; and then, if they think even that is wrong, they have the right to appeal to the court of appeals, and from there to the Supreme Court of the United States. When the question is finally determined in the travel of the case up there, wherever it stops and becomes final, either before the commissioner or clear to the Supreme Court of the United States, then, if the decision is violated, there is trouble; then they are punished.

This motion, however, only strikes out of the language the words "or unjustly discriminatory." It seems to me they ought to be retained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. HITCHCOCK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. NORBECK's name was called). I desire to announce again the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK]. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. SIMMONS's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably absent, and is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore made with regard to my pair, I am compelled to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement I made before concerning my pair with the Senator from Tennessee, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KENYON. I announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD]. Were he present he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 38, as follows:

So Mr. CUMMINS's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following:

Or the selling of live-stock products in intrastate commerce.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to take care of the situation to cover which the Senator from New York offered his amendment. In other words, if a butcher is chiefly engaged in the business of intrastate commerce he will not be subject to any of the provisions of this act under the amendment that I have offered. If he sells hides in interstate commerce it will not affect him, because his chief business is in intrastate commerce.

I offer the amendment for that purpose, so that it will exclude those who simply do business in interstate commerce purely incidentally to their chief business, intrastate commerce.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I imagine that to ascertain whether a man's business is chiefly intrastate or interstate it would merely be required to figure out whether his sales were larger within the State or without the State?

Mr. PITTMAN. I assume that that would be one method of determining the fact, and to my mind it would determine it. For instance, the case we had before the Senate was the case of a butcher whose chief business is the selling of meat in a city or town. Incidentally to that business he ships hides in interstate commerce. I desire to protect that kind of business and separate it from the business with regard to which we are now trying to legislate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to say to the Senator that his amendment, if adopted, would have a tremendous effect.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to hear the amendment read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Nevada moves to amend by adding at the end of the substitute reported by the committee "or the selling of live-stock products in intrastate commerce," so that the last section would read:

SEC. 30. None of the provisions of this act shall be construed to include or be binding upon a person whose chief business is the raising of live stock or agricultural products or the selling of live-stock products in intrastate commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Nevada will not press that amendment. I would not have any objection if an amendment could be framed which would exclude from the operation of the bill, if there was any doubt in anybody's mind about it, the retail butcher. But this would be a dangerous proposition. As I understand the amendment from its reading at the desk, it might be possible under it to relieve a very large packer or operator. I suppose the chief part of the business of some of the largest is intrastate business. They might be doing millions of dollars of business in the packing industry and yet be let out by this amendment. I do not believe the Senator wants to do that.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I do not want to do that, Mr. President. I am offering this amendment in the hope that it will be carried, so that I may ask for a separate vote upon the amendment of the Senator from New York, which has been agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me tell the Senator that the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, if the committee amendment prevails, will be a part of the committee amendment, and we can not get a separate vote on it in the Senate, as I understand the parliamentary situation. But we can offer in the Senate an amendment to the amended bill, if this becomes the amended bill, to change it back. We could offer an amendment and have another yea-and-nay vote on it, if the Senator or others thought it was wise to do it. But this amendment which the Senator has offered, it seems to me, as I understand the wording of it, might absolutely nullify the entire bill. A packer in Chicago might be doing a majority of his business in the State of Illinois and still be doing $50,000,000 worth of business and escape all the regulatory provisions included in the bill. I am not sure just how many it would relieve, but certainly it seems to me that its possibilities of evil are almost unlimited.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from New York, which was put over here so quietly and comfortably, absolutely destroys the bill as to everything except meat. As far as fertilizer, and hides, and all the other by-products are concerned, they are eliminated from the operations of this act entirely by the amendment of the Senator from New York. There is an objection to this bill without some form of an amendment which will limit it to the men we are after. We are after the big packers, and there is not a big packing concern in the United States that does not sell more meat products in interstate commerce than in intrastate commerce. This is a self-evident proposition. Do you suppose for one moment that Armour or Cudahy or Swift or any of the others sell in the State where their stockyards are located more than they sell in interstate commerce? The supposition of the Senator has not any foundation in reason whatever.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Would it not be a very easy thing for a corporation, whether it is one of the big ones or not, say in the city of Chicago, if it did $10,000,000 worth of business in the State of Illinois, to be doing $9,000,000 worth of business outside of the State of Illinois, and escape all the regulations provided for in the bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. Swift & Co. might do as small a business as a butcher in Kansas, but that does not happen to be the case. Swift & Co. might sell as much in Chicago as they sell in all the rest of the world, but they do not. The hearings disclose that fact. These big concerns we are after do 90 per cent of their business in interstate commerce. That is shown by the hearings. There is no dispute about it.

There is an objection to bringing this bill to bear on the little butcher who ships his hides in interstate commerce. His chief business is in intrastate commerce, and the shipping of hides is only incidental. I wanted this amendment agreed to so that we would have ground in some way to attack the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nevada if, under his proposed amendment, it would be possible for these large packing concerns to sell to another corporation all of their products, and let the other corporation do the distributing in interstate commerce?

Mr. PITTMAN. Then the other corporation would come under the provisions of this act.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The other corporation would be subject to none of the provisions, except as to the mere sale of the products.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer the Senator by asking if he thinks that Cudahy & Co., by organizing a second corporation, could avoid the provisions of the act?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I rose for the purpose of getting information from the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. My idea is that they could not; that they would gain nothing by organizing a dummy corporation, because they would own the dummy corporation and the dummy corporation would be subject to the provisions of the act. The whole point is this: We are after certain big concerns. We are not after the man who incidentally engages in interstate commerce in connection with his chief business, which is not interstate commerce.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am in full sympathy with the purpose the Senator is seeking to accomplish, but I am just making the suggestion to see if some difficulty might not arise through bringing into the bill the definition which the Senator has suggested.

Mr. PITTMAN. No more difficulty than there would be with any other provision of the act. If one of these companies can escape one provision through a dummy corporation, then it can escape any provision of the act. I take it that they can not escape through a dummy corporation.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the Senator from Nevada if he would be willing to withdraw his amendment if in place of it we could adopt an amendment at the end which would make the section read as follows:

None of the provisions of this act shall be construed to include or be binding upon a person whose chief business is the raising of live stock or agricultural products, or whose chief business is the operation of a retail butcher shop.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I am willing to accept that, except that I do not think it is as definite as the other. I do not know but what Armour & Co. might be a retail butcher shop. I like the one I suggested better.

Mr. NORRIS. It is clearer language, and it may be that the Senator does not know what a retail butcher shop is.

Mr. PITTMAN. But I do know what intrastate commerce is.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me make a suggestion which may be acceptable to both the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Nebraska, namely, that a limitation be placed upon the amount of the business, so that it will exclude the man engaged in small business, say a limit of $50,000 a year. I think the language of the Senator from Nevada is preferable to that suggested by the Senator from Nebraska; but that is a matter of no consequence to me. I believe that a limitation in value on the amount of business would meet all the requirements of the case. Suppose we fix it at fifty or a hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am willing to accept any suggestion or any amendment to carry out that idea. I will ask that at the end of the amendment I have offered there be added the following, "where such business does not exceed in the aggregate $100,000 per annum."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator mean gross sales?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not know enough about the larger retail meat markets to know, and I may be entirely in the dark, but it seems to me the amount stated by the Senator is entirely too large. It might let in corporations which ought to be kept out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Nevada moves to amend by adding at the end of the substitute bill of the committee the following:

Or the selling of live-stock products in intrastate commerce, where such business does not exceed in the aggregate $100,000 per annum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, we now approach the point in this discussion where the utter inconsistency of this proposal is apparent. Just because a man is not engaged in a business which exceeds in its gross sales $100,000 a year, apparently is to be his certificate of character, and relieve him of all regulation. If his business involves gross sales of $101,000, he therefore is to be deemed something in the nature of a public utility, and regulated. It is class legislation, just as surely as we are sitting here. I do not know anything about the constitutionality of it, but we ought to have one rule for all.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thought the Senator wanted class legislation to protect the little fellows.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not want class legislation; I want one rule fixed in the law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, just a word with regard to the general question, which I assume is now about to be submitted.

Notwithstanding the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska that the amendment to the amendment I offered a few moments ago was intended to allow wrongdoers to escape, I intend to vote for the substitution of the Senate committee bill for the House text.

I think so far as being drastic is concerned, the one is just as drastic as the other, but I shall vote to substitute the Senate bill for the House text for one reason and one only. It is because in section 6 of the Senate bill there will be found provisions which in my opinion are the most valuable and helpful provisions in either the House or the Senate text, and these provisions are not in the House text.

My view of the regulation of interstate commerce, aside from our great public utilities, is that the time has come for the completest and widest publicity. I think the people of the country are entitled to know what is being done in the great industries of which we are so justly proud. In section 6 of the Senate committee bill I predict the people of the country will find more aid in the struggle through which we are passing than they will find in any other provision of the bill. Therefore, I shall vote to substitute the Senate bill for the House text. It has the additional advantage of the parliamentary situation that then the whole subject will be in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. NORRIS. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on page 25, line 20, I move to strike out "3" and insert "4."

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no such paragraph in the bill now, it having been stricken out. The whole paragraph has been stricken out.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then I will simply change my reference, because I am making the motion only in order that I may address the Senate. I move to strike out the last paragraph of section 315, on page 24.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized on his amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I make the motion and I say to Senators that it is a mere pro forma motion. I make it for the purpose of having the opportunity to address the Senate for a few moments. I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate, before we decide upon the issue as to the House bill and the Senate bill, some facts which have come to my knowledge. I believe that I ought to do that. I think there is some misapprehension in the Senate as to the character of the House bill that is about to be voted upon.

It has been stated in the course of the debate that farm organizations quite generally are in favor of the House bill. If I understood the remarks of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], he stated that Mr. Atkeson, who represents the National Grange organization, approved of the House bill.

I believe that I shall be able, in the five minutes allotted to me, to show that not only Mr. Atkeson, but the representative of practically every single farm organization in the United States is opposed to the House bill, that they consider it inadequate, that they believe its enactment as a regulation of the packing industry will prove a great disappointment to the country.

Mr. President, in connection with what I have to say upon the subject, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate during the five minutes allotted to me the origin of some of the amendments that appear in the Haugen or House bill. I believe that I will be able to convince the Senate that the House bill as modified by amendments, the adoption of which they secured while the bill was pending before the House committee, rendered the bill quite satisfactory to the packers.

Their position upon the subject is not unlike that of every other great monopoly in the country that resists any and all governmental regulation of their business. The railroads defeated attempts to regulate transportation rates and services for almost a generation of time, and when the time came that they could no longer successfully resist, then they acquiesced in legislation and joined in framing it and in so amending and weakening the interstate commerce act of 1887 that it afforded very little protection to the public.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before that is done I desire to answer the statement made by the Senator by reading the testimony of Mr. Atkeson in the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, found on page 77 of those hearings.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What date, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. SMOOT. May, 1921.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May what? I have a letter, in which Dr. Atkeson has joined, of date May 25, in which he criticizes the House bill and says it is entirely insufficient and joins with all the other representatives of the agricultural organizations of the country in demanding amendments to strengthen its provisions.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah stated that as between the House text and the Senate bill Mr. Atkeson favored the House text. That is what the Senator from Utah said, and this is what Mr. Atkeson said.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is the date of it?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not tell the Senator without looking it up. If the Senator would see it, there it is [exhibiting volume of testimony].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is the date of it?

Mr. SMOOT. If I could turn readily to the date, I would be glad to do it. It was in the hearing before the House committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The letter of protest I have before me is dated May 25, which is subsequent to the date of the hearing to which the Senator refers.

Mr. SMOOT. This is what Mr. Atkeson said——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Do not reports of hearings give the dates?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. If I have time I shall go back through the hearings and ascertain the date when this particular hearing took place. If it was the first day of the hearings, I can give the date. I will go back to the very beginning. It can not be later than May 2, 1921.

This is what Mr. Atkeson said, and this is what I think Mr. Atkeson believes to-day.

Mr. ATKESON. He could not do it, and it might cost more to start it. I can not answer that question, but I would call your attention to the fact that my first choice would be a separate commission and my second choice would be the Secretary of Agriculture. Assuming that the Senate passes a bill providing for a special commission, as they did before, and that the House is likely to pass a bill providing for its administration by the Secretary of Agriculture, then taking that viewpoint I want to call your attention to one feature of what is commonly known as the Haugen bill.

Beginning in section 302, on page 12, as I have studied this bill, I fail to see any reason for introducing two administrative factors or authorities. Maybe I am entirely at sea in regard to the matter, but if I were writing this bill I would substitute for "Interstate Commerce Commission," "Secretary of Agriculture" clear through.

That is what Mr. Atkeson said, and that is what I said this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I believe I have the right to perfect my amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is suggested to me that I avail myself of the opportunity to speak for five minutes upon the bill, and I do that.

I hold in my hand a letter dated May 25, 1921, signed by T. C. Atkeson and other representatives of farmers' organizations, in which they criticize the House bill as reported from the House Committee on Agriculture on May 18. The bill as the committee reported it to the House on the 18th of May was a very different bill from the bill that was pending before that committee when Mr. Atkeson made the statement which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has just read.

Now, I can not in my limited time read the entire letter of protest signed by Mr. Atkeson and other representatives of farmers' organizations. But I will take the time to read as much as I can from that letter.

It is addressed to Mr. HAUGEN, as chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, and dated May 25, 1921. I read as follows:

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned as authorized representatives of national organization of farmers, of consumers, and of labor, have carefully examined the provisions of the Haugen bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate the interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, packing-house products, dairy products, etc., and we urgently protest that this bill in its present form is inadequate and needs important revision before it can command our confidence or support.

That is May 25, after the bill had been reported to the House. That bill passed the House as it was reported. And it is now before the Senate just as it was reported from the committee, and is in all respects the bill which this letter of Mr. Atkeson and others criticize. The letter says:

That this bill in its present form is inadequate and needs important provisions before it can command our confidence or support.

Passing over a portion of the letter, because I have not time to read it all, I read the following:

The most crying need of the live-stock producers and of the consumers of meats and other live-stock products is for authoritative current public information, made possible through the medium of uniform accounting systems, on the industry, on the state of the markets, on the costs and profits of the packers and other agencies operating between the producer and the consumer. We believe that unless information of this character is specifically provided for it will be impossible to secure that state of public confidence that is so sorely needed in this industry. This the Haugen bill does not do in its present form.

That goes to the question of uniform accounting. There can not be any regulation of any industry in the country by the Government unless uniform bookkeeping and uniform accounting is required. The Interstate Commerce Commission brought that before the Congress of the United States years ago and made it plain that it was impossible to have any regulation of the railroads without a system of uniform accounting. The Haugen, or House, bill now before the Senate fails to provide a uniform system of accounting. Such a system of accounting is provided in the Senate bill. It is not provided in the House bill, and that is one of the criticisms that these representatives of the farm organizations make of the House bill in this letter. I am going to read the names of the representatives who signed the letter presented to the House committee after the Haugen bill had been reported to the House. And I again remind the Senate that the House bill now before us is in all respects the bill which Mr. Atkeson and these other representatives of farm organizations are discussing and criticizing in the letter from which I am reading.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not the only objection they make to the House text, is it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no; no. I am hurrying because I can not in the five minutes allotted to me note all the objections in the letter which they filed with the committee. I am going to read the signatures now to show how representative this body was that signed the letter:

T. C. Atkeson, Washington representative National Grange.
George P. Hampton, managing director Farmers' National Council.
Benjamin C. Marsh, executive secretary People's Reconstruction League.
E. C. Lasater, representing live stock.
Charles A. Lyman, secretary National Board of Farm Organizations.
Mrs. Florence Kelley, president National Consumers' League.
Mrs. E. P. Costigan, chairman food-supply committee League Women Voters.
W. M. Clark, vice president and national legislative representative Order of Railway Conductors.
W. N. Doak, vice president and legislative representative Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen
P. J. McNamara, vice president and national legislative representative Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers.
H. E. Wills, vice president Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.
E. F. McGrady, legislative committeeman American Federation of Labor.
John A. McSparran, master Pennsylvania State Grange.
C. S. Barrett, president Farmers' National Union.
J. H Kimble, legislative agent National Farmers' Congress.
C. W. Holman, acting secretary National Milk Producers' Federation.

Practically every single organization representing either the farmers or the laborers of this country on legislation before Congress protest against the Haugen bill as it is now presented in the Senate, and Senators must make the choice between it and the Senate bill.

Mr. President, if I have a moment's time remaining I shall present to the Senate the telegram from the president of the Farm Bureau Organization, addressed to Senator NORRIS, June 8, 1921, in which he says:

American Farm Bureau live-stock committee not satisfied with House packer bill. Desires conference Monday night with Senate leaders. Can you arrange same?

(Signed) J. R. HOWARD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as amended.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, an attempt has been made here to make a false issue out of this measure. It is claimed that the pending bill seeks to embark upon a policy of Government interference with and control of private business. I do not find here any issue whatever of Government control or interference with private business as such; I do not find any issue here of Government control of monopolies as such; I do not find any issue here even of Government control of those industries that produce and sell the necessities of life; but I do find this issue: An attempt by the Government to undertake to control, inspect, and regulate and give publicity to the business methods of monopolies which are engaged in producing and selling the very fundamental necessaries of life, which is quite a different issue from that of control of private business by the Government. The issue is, Shall we allow to go uncontrolled monopolies that control the food supply of our people? Shall we say to these gigantic food trusts from whom our people must buy the things that pertain to their very existence, you are free, so far as the Government is concerned, to manipulate your business in any manner you choose, even to the extent of extorting blood money from our people?

I shall vote for this bill because it seeks to give publicity to and to regulate and control an industry that is a monopoly; an industry that is dealing with the very prime essentials of life—food; a monopoly whose abuses are well and generally known. I consider as a Democrat that the future of that party depends upon its taking a position in favor of the regulation and control of those monopolies which deal with the essential necessaries of life. This particular bill deals with a very vital and a very important essential of life.

Let me say further, we are to-day debating and voting on a question that defines very accurately the difference between the liberal and the conservative thought of America; here is the difference between the political parties. I respect the man who takes the position that the Government should not interfere and should not attempt to inspect or to give publicity to or regulate any industry whatever, either a monopoly dealing in the necessaries of life or any private industry; this is the reactionary policy of the Republican Party. But the political party of which I am a member—and I have its platforms for the last 20 years upon my desk—again and again has said that private monopolies are indefensible, undemocratic, and that monopolies dealing with the necessaries of life must be regulated, controlled, and checked when they reach a condition in their management and control of prices which leads to widespread and general public abuse. If the Democratic Party is not with the people against dishonest big business, then it might just as well cease to exist. It can not win in the future unless it honestly and earnestly champions such a policy.

I refute the statement that a vote for this bill is a vote for Government interference with private business. The question here is, and the record will so show it, not whether the Senate is for interference with private business, but does it favor the regulation, control, and publicity of monopolies, controlling and dealing in the very basic necessaries of life? If this bill fails, then any monopoly can organize to control the production, price, and sales of what the American people must have to exist and go unchecked.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as amended.

Mr. NORRIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I withdraw the amendment which I offered, which was only a pro forma amendment, in order to give me an opportunity to address the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin had withdrawn his amendment, and I do not ask for a roll call on his amendment. I ask for a roll call on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I misunderstood the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin withdrew his amendment some time ago, and the Chair so stated. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. KENYON. A parliamentary inquiry. Is the vote now on the question of substituting the amendment reported by the committee as amended for the House text?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee as amended as a substitute for the House text.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate upon the pending amendment.

Mr. President, I wish to state that I have before me here some very important information as to changes made in the Haugen bill after it was first introduced in the House on April 11 and before it was reported to the House by the Committee on Agriculture on May 18.

I hold in my hand a bill, which is the first bill which was introduced by Representative HAUGEN, modifications of which are now before the Senate. The Senate is about to decide as between that bill as amended by the House Committee on Agriculture and passed by the House without further amendment and the Senate bill which has been reported by the Senate committee.

The bill which I hold in my hand is the Haugen bill as introduced in the House on April 11. It was delivered to Dr. Atkeson by the attorney of the packers and contains the interlineations which the packers desired to have made in the Haugen bill as originally introduced. Seven of the most important of those interlineations appear in the Haugen bill as passed by the House of Representatives; and I stand here to say at this moment, when the Senate is about to decide whether they will vote for the House bill or for the bill as reported by the Senate committee, that the House bill carries the seven amendments which the packers' attorney wrote into the original Haugen bill and presented to Mr. Atkeson. The packers suggested some other amendments, but seven of the important ones were written into the bill before it was reported out of the House committee.

Senators will notice that one corner of this bill [exhibiting] is cut off. That corner which does not appear in the bill had the stamp of the packers upon it; it came from their hands to the hands of Dr. Atkeson. He cut it off because he did not choose to have a bill in his possession bearing the impress of the Beef Trust. It contains, as I can show to any Senator who cares to examine it, the interlineations proposed by Mr. Lightfoot, the attorney of the Beef Trust, as the modifications in the Haugen bill as originally introduced, which they desired to have adopted, and as I have said seven of the most important of those amendments were adopted by the House Committee on Agriculture and appear in the House bill as passed.

Mr. President, I have before me an analysis of that bill. If I had the opportunity to present it, the Senate would see the significance of the amendments that were made, as I have stated, in the House bill. I am not charging the House committee with collusion with the Beef Trust; but I wish to say in the moment of time that I have left that these great powers that resist Government regulation of monopoly come in at the last moment, when they see that legislation is inevitable, and seek to mold and shape that legislation to their liking. That was the history of the interstate commerce act; that was the history of the pure-food legislation; that has been the history of every attempt on the part of Government to regulate any monopoly in this country.

The bill to which I have referred is the bill that Senators are about to pass upon; they are to decide whether they will take that bill, with those provisions made as stated at the suggestion of the packers, or pass the bill as reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. President, the first amendment of importance which was suggested and secured by the packers, is in section 402, line 21, page 25, which was section 208 of the original Haugen bill, except for the fact that a sentence has been added, as shown in lines 4 to 7, on page 26. They sought to add after the word "corporation" in line 4, page 26, the following:

And the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission in so far as it relates to persons dealing in live stock and meat food products as defined in this act shall be terminated.

These words were not inserted just as presented by the representative of the packers, but subsection (b) of section 406, lines 1 to 12, page 28, reading as shown below, was inserted and the purpose sought in the words as quoted above was accomplished.

Subsection (b) of section 406 reads as follows:

On and after the enactment of this act, and so long as it remains in effect, the Federal Trade Commission shall have no power or jurisdiction so far as relating to any matter which by this act is made subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary, except in cases in which, before the enactment of this act, complaint has been served under section 5 of the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, or under section 11 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore concerning my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. LADD's name was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD]. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. NORBECK's name was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK]. He is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If present, the Senator from South Dakota would vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. SIMMONS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as that made heretofore concerning my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence, and being unable to obtain a transfer of my pair, I am compelled to withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I am compelled to withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON];

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]; and

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 37, as follows:

So the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry as amended was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill, and I ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the proposed substitute.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I take it, from the looks of this instrument, that it is a complete substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. STERLING. I will say to the Senator that it is a complete substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. BORAH. Is it expected that the Senate of the United States will pass upon a complete substitute for the bill with five-minute debate?

Mr. STERLING. This is the only time I have had in which to offer the substitute.

Mr. BORAH. Then let us adjourn until to-morrow morning, so that we can at least have a chance to read it.

Mr. NORRIS. And let me suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that instead of having the substitute read, he take his five minutes to explain it. It has been printed, and I think he has explained it to most of the Senators already. Everybody understands the principles involved.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota, if he will permit me, that he ask to have his substitute bill printed in the RECORD, and give Senators an opportunity to examine it and compare it with the pending House bill, the packer bill; and then I trust that we will have an adjournment to-night, and take up the consideration of this important measure to-morrow.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it is embarrassing to me, of course, to be compelled to send to the desk so important a substitute as this is for this important bill at this time of the day.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator, instead of asking that his substitute be read, that he ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and then we will take a recess until to-morrow. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] has some resolutions he wishes to offer.

Mr. STERLING. I consent to the suggestion offered by the Senator from Nebraska. Meanwhile I hope that Senators will give due and fair consideration to the substitute. It is offered in the interest of economy and efficiency in the administration of the law regulating the packers. It substitutes the Federal Trade Commission as the body that shall administer the law. Otherwise the bill is very much like the Senate bill. It provides for procedure as provided for the Federal Trade Commission in the Federal Trade Commission act for the most part.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by Mr. STERLING is as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. STERLING, and pending, to the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That when used in this act, unless the context indicates otherwise—

"The term 'person' includes a partnership, a corporation, or an association of two or more individuals, and the members of a partnership or the directors, officers, receiver, or other person charged with the duty of the management and operation of the business of a corporation, partnership, or association.

"The term 'commission' means the Federal Trade Commission.

"The term 'commerce' means commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or in any Territory or possession of the United States or in the District of Columbia, or between any such Territory or possession and any State or foreign nation, or between the District of Columbia and any State, Territory, possession, or foreign nation.

"The term 'live stock' means live or dead cattle, sheep, and swine.

"The term 'live-stock products' means all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived from live stock and owned or controlled by a packer.

"The term 'stockyard' means any place, establishment, or facility maintained and conducted at or in connection with a public market and consisting of pens or other inclosures and their appurtenances in which live cattle, sheep, and swine are received, held, and sold for shipment or slaughter in commerce.

"The term 'packer' means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce or of marketing live-stock products as a subsidiary of or an adjunct to any such slaughtering or preparing business.

"The term 'operator' means any person engaged in the business of conducting or operating a stockyard in which live stock is handled in commerce and any trader or commission man, or other person performing services wholly or partly in commerce with respect to live stock handled in or in connection with a stockyard.

"The term 'corporation' includes any public, quasi public, or other corporation or cooperative association and any agency controlled or operated by any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States or any political subdivision thereof.

"SEC. 2. That the commission shall have all the powers and duties heretofore exercised or performed by the Bureau of Markets in the Department of Agriculture relating to the acquisition and dissemination of information regarding the production, distribution, and consumption of live stock or live-stock products. It shall investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply, consumption, costs and prices of, and all other facts relating to the ownership, production, transportation, manufacture, storage, handling, or distribution of live stock or live-stock products, including operations on and the ownership of stockyards. It shall compile and furnish to producers, consumers, or distributers, by means of regular and special reports, or by such other methods as it deems most effective, information respecting the conditions of the live-stock market and the supply, demand, prices, and other conditions affecting the market.

"SEC. 3. That any agent or employee of the commission who, without its authority, unless directed by a court of competent jurisdiction, makes public any information concerning the business of any packer or operator obtained by the commission shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 4. That the commission may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government or of any State or political subdivision thereof or with any person.

"SEC. 5. That the several departments and agencies of the Government, when directed by the President, shall furnish to the commission, upon its request, all records, papers, and information in their possession relating to any person subject to any of the provisions of this act, and shall from time to time detail to the commission such officers and employees as the President may direct.

"SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for any packer to—

"(a) Engage in any unfair or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce; or

"(b) Sell or otherwise transfer to or for any other packer, or buy or otherwise receive from or for any other packer, any live stock or live-stock products for the purpose of apportioning the supply between any such packer, or unreasonably affecting the price of or creating a monopoly in the acquisition of buying, selling, or dealing in live stock or live-stock products in commerce; or

"(c) Engage or participate in any manner, either directly or indirectly, in the business of purchasing, manufacturing, storing, or selling foodstuffs other than live-stock products, where the effect of such participation in such business may be substantially to lessen competition in or to restrain commerce or to tend to create a monopoly in commerce; or

"(d) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to apportion territory for carrying on business, or to apportion purchases or sales of any live stock or live-stock products, or to control prices thereof in commerce; or

"(e) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other packer to engage in any course of business or to do any act for the purpose of preventing any person from carrying on a competitive or similar business in commerce; or

"(f) Otherwise act or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to do or aid or abet the doing of any act contrary to the provisions of this act and the rules, regulations, and orders made hereunder.

"SEC. 7. That after two years from the date when this act becomes effective, no packer engaged in commerce shall own or control or have any interest in, directly or indirectly, by community of stock ownership or otherwise, any stockyard, unless the commission shall determine that ownership or control or interest is not in violation of the purposes of this act or that such packer has been unable, despite due diligence, to dispose of such ownership or control of or interest in such stockyard, in which case the commission may, by order, extend the period during which such ownership, control, or interest may continue.

"SEC. 8. That every operator and packer engaged in commerce shall keep such records and statements of account and make such reports or returns, verified under oath or otherwise, as the commission shall require, as will fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in its business, and the true ownership of such business by stock holding or otherwise, in such form and at such times as the commission shall by order require. The commission may, in its discretion, prescribe uniform systems of accounts and records and require the installation and use thereof by packers or operators. For the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, or of verifying any such reports or returns, any officer or agent of the Government designated by the commission may, during the usual hours of business, enter and inspect any place used by any packer or operator in its business, and examine any books, papers, records, or correspondence relating to such business.

"SEC. 9. (a) That it shall be the duty of every operator—

"(1) To provide and maintain or secure, when necessary and practicable, adequate railroad connections with its place of business;

"(2) To furnish the services and facilities of its business on fair and reasonable terms and without unjust discrimination to persons applying for such service and facilities: Provided, That it shall set aside such portion of the facilities of its business, as determined by the commission, as may reasonably be necessary to accommodate small shippers and local patrons;

"(3) To impose only such charges and rates as are reasonable for the service or facility afforded.

"(4) To exercise such care of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs handled by it as may be necessary to prevent undue loss in connection therewith.

"(5) To maintain sanitary conditions in the conduct of its business.

"(6) To refrain from unfairly discriminatory or deceptive practices or devices in the conduct of its business.

"(7) To keep complete and accurate accounts and records of the business and to submit reports when called for, and in such form as may be prescribed by the commission.

"(8) Otherwise to conduct its business in such manner as may be prescribed in rules, regulations, and orders issued under this section by the commission to carry out the purposes hereof.

"(b) The commission may from time to time cause inspections to be made of the places of business and operations of operators to determine their compliance with the provisions of this section and the rules, regulations, and orders issued hereunder.

"(c) It shall be the duty of the commission to—

"(1) Prepare standardized plans and specifications for grounds, buildings, and other facilities suitable for the business conducted or to be conducted by operators, and to furnish such plans and specifications free of charge to such operators who have given assurances of undertaking the construction and operation of such buildings and facilities;

"(2) Furnish to operators reports embodying existing knowledge concerning satisfactory and economical appliances and methods of food preservation by cold storage, freezing, cooking, dehydration, or otherwise, and of all improvements in the art, and to detail persons experienced in such art to consult and advise with operators.

"(3) As far as practicable, when requested by any such operator, provide for the inspection by agents of the commission of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs received or distributed by such operator to determine the quality, quantity, or condition thereof, and for the issuance by such agents of certificates showing the results of such inspection; and in the conduct of such inspections to cooperate with duly authorized local authorities. Such certificates shall be accepted in the courts of the United States and of the States as prima facie evidence of the quality, quantity, or condition at the time and place of inspection of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs covered thereby.

"SEC. 10. That no operator shall engage in any unfair or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce, or in any deceptive practice or device to cheat or defraud in commerce, or charge, collect, receive, or demand any unreasonable charge or rate for any service in commerce performed in connection with the business of such operator.

"The commission may, after hearing, upon complaint or upon its own initiative, determine and fix, and by rule, regulation, or order prescribe fair and reasonable practices, charges, and rates to be observed by operators, and fair and reasonable terms and conditions upon which the services of operators in commerce shall be rendered or performed.

"SEC. 11. That whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that any such packer or operator is engaged in any conduct, business, or practice of the kind herein prohibited or declared unlawful, or has refused or failed to perform any duty herein prescribed, or to comply with any order, rule, or regulation made by said commission in pursuance of the provisions of this act, the commission shall proceed against such packer or operator in the manner prescribed in section 5 of the act entitled 'An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,' approved September 26, 1914, for its proceedings against any person, partnership, or corporation which it has reason to believe has been or is using any unfair method of competition in commerce, and all the provisions of said section 5, together with the provisions of sections 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 of said Federal Trade Commission act, are hereby made applicable to all the proceedings for the enforcement against such packers and operators of the provisions of this act, and for the purposes of such proceedings and enforcement the commission shall have all the powers and duties prescribed in sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, as aforesaid, and all the penalties for the violation of the provisions of said act and of any orders, rules, or regulations made thereunder are hereby made applicable to the violations of any of the provisions of this act and of any orders, rules, or regulations made thereunder.

"SEC. 12. That nothing contained in this act, except as otherwise provided herein, shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the enforcement of, or the procedure under, the provisions of the antitrust acts, the acts to regulate commerce, the act entitled 'An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,' approved September 26, 1914, the act entitled 'An act to promote export trade, and for other purposes,' approved April 10, 1918, or sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of the act entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved February 27, 1894, as amended by the act entitled 'An act to amend section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,"' approved February 12, 1913, or with any investigation, proceeding, or prosecution begun and pending at the time this act becomes effective, nor shall anything contained in this act be construed to alter, modify, or repeal such acts or any part or parts thereof, except as specifically provided in this act.

"SEC. 13. That if any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances be held invalid the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely wish that we shall understand the situation before we adopt what will necessarily be an adjournment resolution. As I read the unanimous-consent agreement it provides that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill or any amendment offered thereto. I understand that that agreement, of course, continues.

Mr. STERLING. That is my understanding, that the agreement continues.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I had no other idea about it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Nobody takes issue with that.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wanted to have it made clear; that is all.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6754) to amend sections 2, 13, and 14 of an act entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea," approved March 4, 1915, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LADD presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from E. Eberg, of Tioga; Rogers Lumber Co., of Kenmare; and Rogers Lumber Co., of Wimbledon; all in the State of North Dakota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation imposing a tariff on lumber, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the North Dakota Women's Nonpartisan Club, No. 114, of Upham, N. Dak., favoring the calling of an international disarmament conference by the President, and protesting against increased military appropriations pending such proposed conference, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions of the Women's Auxiliary, American Legion, of Leavenworth; Women's Auxiliary, James R. Cutter Post, No. 39, of Abilene; and Scottish Rite bodies of Topeka; all in the State of Kansas, favoring the enactment of legislation providing adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of the pastor and congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Effingham and the pastor and sundry members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Russell, both in the State of Kansas, favoring the calling of an international disarmament conference, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition of the pastor and congregation of the United Presbyterian Church of Eskridge, Kans., praying that relief be afforded the Armenians, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

RELIEF OF DISABLED EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. SUTHERLAND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 93), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate resolution No. 59, agreed to June 9, 1921, be, and hereby is, amended to authorize the special committee thereby created for the investigation of various bureaus and agencies of the Government in matters relating to the veterans of the World War to employ such clerical and other assistants as may be deemed necessary in furtherance of the purposes of said resolution.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM E. MASON.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON, late a Representative from the State of Illinois, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions of the House of Representatives be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolutions of the House of Representatives, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, JUNE 16, 1921.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON, a Representative of the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I submit the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 94) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON, late a Representative from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the presiding officer, to join the committee appointed by the House of Representatives, to take order for the superintending of the funeral of Mr. MASON at Chicago, Ill.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

The Senate thereupon (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 17, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 16, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, we linger a moment in Thy holy presence. We are deeply conscious of the frailties of human nature. We call upon Thy holy name in the limitations which we feel. Give unto those who are in such bereavement the comforts and the consolations of our most holy faith. Impress us with the abiding truth that weeping may endure for a night but joy cometh in the morning. As Thy children take us by the hand, lead us on in wisdom and in truth and when the evening shadows gather and our weary feet are touching that line that separates mortality from immortality, when earth's door is closing, may heaven's door open and by the way of the divine gleam may we be led to the Father's house. May the richest blessings of Thy holy presence abide with those whose heads are bowed and whose hearts are laden is our prayer. We ask in the name of Him who spake as never man spake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4091. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Borderland Coal Corporation to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, in Mingo County, W. Va.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order to-day may be in order on Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is pension business?

Mr. MONDELL. The business that was in order on Friday last, pensions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. What does the gentleman propose to take up to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. Claims and the conference report on the Army bill in the morning probably.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow, Friday, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DEATH OF HON. WILLIAM E. MASON.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty to announce to the House the death of our colleague, the Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON, Representative at Large from the State of Illinois, who died at the Congress Hall Hotel at 6 o'clock this morning.

I shall not attempt at this time to say anything about our late colleague, but at some later time I shall ask the House to set aside an hour for fitting testimonial to his memory and public services.

Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 118.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON, a Representative of the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That a committee of 18 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Friday, June 17, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BURTNESS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 252) to amend an act approved February 22, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States," reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 182), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. McKENZIE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7158) to amend the Army appropriation act approved July 11, 1919, so as to release appropriations for the completion of the acquisition of real estate in certain cases, and making additional appropriations therefor, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 183), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LINEBERGER: A bill (H. R. 7192) to permit the purchase of subsistence stores; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAMMER: A bill (H. R. 7193) to repeal the act creating the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SINNOTT: A bill (H. R. 7194) making appropriation for the prevention of loss of timber from insect infestations on reserved and unreserved public lands in Oregon and California, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 7195) authorizing the advancement of an officer on the retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McDUFFIE: A bill (H. R. 7196) to further extend the benefits of the war risk insurance act to the beneficiaries of those who served in the World War in certain cases; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KISSEL: Resolution (H. Res. 119) directing Herbert Clark Hoover to furnish to the House of Representatives certain information regarding the European Relief Council; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAKENEY: A bill (H. R. 7197) for the relief of H. J. Baker; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOUGHTON: A bill (H. R. 7198) granting a pension to Robert Clark; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McDUFFIE: A bill (H. R. 7199) to reinstate policy No. 2599746 issued on the life of the late Lieut. William Sikes Tucker; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7200) for the relief of Capt. Edward T. Hartmann, United States Army, and others; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7201) for the relief of Bessie Sikes Tucker; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 17, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord, Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Our fathers trusted Thee and they were not disappointed. Thou hast never failed the trustful soul. We commend unto Thee this morning the sorrow that has shadowed this Capitol and beseech Thee to be the widow's God, the Father of the fatherless. Be near to all who mourn, and may the shadows of the dark valley be lightened with the prospect of the better life beyond. Help us each to fulfill our sphere according to Thy good pleasure. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, June 13, 1921, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

FUNERAL OF REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM E. MASON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints as the committee on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral of Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON, late a Representative from the State of Illinois, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 16) repealing the joint resolution of April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and Germany, and the joint resolution of December 7, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the United States and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. PORTER, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. FLOOD were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS presented a resolution of the Scottish Rite bodies, of Topeka, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation to provide adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Philathea Class and Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Augusta, Kans., praying that relief be afforded the Armenians, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented six resolutions of sundry organizations and citizens of the State of Kansas, favoring the enactment of legislation imposing a tariff duty on petroleum, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of the pastor and congregation of the Solomon Methodist Episcopal Church; the pastor and congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Norwich; the pastor and congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Blue Rapids; the pastor and congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Linwood; the pastor and congregation of the First Baptist Church of Lawrence; the congregation of the Washington Creek Church of the Brethren, of Lone Star; and the pastor and sundry members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Russell, all in the State of Kansas, favoring the calling of an international disarmament conference, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I present several communications and resolutions from individuals and religious organizations in Massachusetts, urging our Government to find a way to give relief and protection to the imperiled and distressed peoples of Armenia. These communications lay much stress on the fact that these people are threatened with annihilation, and they ask for immediate action. They believe America is in a position to give assistance, and they insist that America vigorously and speedily respond to this humanitarian service. I ask that the petitions be sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

These communications are from the Wareham Federation of Churches; Pawtucket Congregational Church; Trowbridge Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church; the faculty of Clark School; the Burnham School, of Northampton; the King's Daughters of Westfield; First Congregational Church of Ware; First Church of Christ, Longmeadow; the Congregational Church of Reading; citizens of East Northfield; Asbury First Methodist Episcopal Church of Springfield; the First Church of Chicopee; Park Congregational Church, of Springfield; Christ Church, of Springfield; First Unitarian Church of Ware; Trinity Church, of Ware; First Congregational Church of Sharon; Emmanuel Church, of Springfield; and the Methodist Episcopal Church of Ware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communications and resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FLETCHER presented resolutions of the American Legion, Department of Florida, and Florida Development Board, of Jacksonville, Fla., protesting against the so-called McNary-Smith bill proposing to augment the United States Reclamation fund in amount $250,000,000 from the general fund of the Treasury, and favoring the so-called Bankhead-Borah bill, extending the reclamation benefits of such proposed legislation to the South Atlantic and Gulf States, particularly by drainage, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

He also presented a memorial of sundry newspaper publishers of the State of Florida, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation repealing the present zone postal law, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented resolutions adopted at the recent annual convention of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association (Inc.), of Jacksonville, Fla., favoring the enactment of legislation to provide a penalty for failure of common carriers to settle claims promptly and to require payment of interest on loss and damage claims; amending section 20, paragraph 11, of the interstate commerce act so as to provide that any common carrier a party to a through rate or a through bill of lading shall be liable to the lawful holder of the bill of lading for any loss, damage, or injury caused by it or by any of the carriers parties thereto; to authorize and direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to have common carriers issue 1,000-mile mileage books at substantial reductions under the regular passenger fares, and to prohibit common carriers from increasing rates, fares, and charges without the permission of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Quay, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation to effect a reduction of 50 per cent in the appropriations for the Army and Navy; to immediately repeal the so-called emergency protective tariff and to establish free trade with all the world; to stop immigration for five years; to provide employment for all the unemployed or to pay a living wage to such unemployed; to compel war profiteers to surrender to the Government all profits over and above 8 per cent interest on capital invested; to grant a $100 bonus for each month of service to all honorably discharged ex-service men of the World War; for the immediate release of all political prisoners; and to apply the initiative, referendum, and recall to all elected and appointed public officials, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted at the third annual convention of the American Legion, Department of Florida, at Orlando, Fla., May 16 and 17, 1921, favoring the enactment of legislation consolidating the three ex-service bureaus; appropriations for a permanent hospital building program; decentralizing the Bureau of War Risk Insurance; to further extend the benefits of vocational training and providing vocational training with pay for all disabled men with disabilities of 10 per cent or more, and providing privilege of retirement with pay for disabled emergency officers of the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JOHNSON. I present a telegram in the nature of a memorial or resolution from the American Federation of Labor in reference to the investigation in West Virginia, a resolution for which is pending. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DENVER, COLO., June 14, 1921.

HIRAM JOHNSON,
Calvert Manor, Riverdale, Md.:

The forty-first annual convention of the American Federation of Labor assembled in Denver, Colo., Tuesday, June 14, 1921, unanimously adopted the following resolution, and directed that it be telegraphed to you:

"Whereas there is pending in the Senate of the United States a resolution calling for an investigation into the intolerable and un-American conditions prevailing in Mingo County, W. Va., where for more than a year 6,000 mine workers have been resisting a lockout by the coal operators because of their membership in the United Mine Workers of America; and

"Whereas this condition has developed into an industrial war wherein from time to time the armed agents of the coal operators have committed acts against the persons and homes of mine workers which have shocked the sensibilities of our citizenship and disturbed our domestic tranquillity; and

"Whereas it has during this period been necessary on two occasions for soldiers of the United States to effect military occupation of the coal field embraced in Mingo County; and

"Whereas at the present time martial law, as declared by the Commonwealth of West Virginia, is in effect in this region, and which condition has but intensified the present conflict: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor declares itself in sympathy with the striking mine workers of West Virginia in their struggle to maintain the right to belong to their organization and to improve their material well-being; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the American Federation of Labor is hereby instructed to communicate by wire with Members of the United States Senate, transmitting this action and urging their unqualified and immediate support of the pending resolution calling for a senatorial investigation."

FRANK MORRISON,
Secretary American Federation of Labor.

Mr. McLEAN presented resolutions of the pastor and congregation of a union meeting of the Baptist and Methodist Churches of Niantic; the pastor and congregation of the Universalist Church of Stamford; and the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Middletown, all in the State of Connecticut, favoring the calling of an international disarmament conference, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted at the thirty-sixth annual convention, Connecticut Federation of Labor, held June 6 to 9, 1921, at Bridgeport, Conn., favoring the so-called Sterling-Lehlbach bill, providing for the reclassification of Government employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented a resolution adopted at the Thirty-sixth Annual Convention, Connecticut Federation of Labor, June 6 to 9, 1921, at Bridgeport, Conn., favoring the so-called Nolan bill, providing a minimum wage of $3 per day for Federal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of Suffield Grange, No. 27, of Suffield, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of a daylight saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions of sundry citizens of New Canaan, Stamford, and Hartford, all in the State of Connecticut, and of Millbrook, N. Y.; and a resolution adopted at the Thirty-sixth Annual Convention, Connecticut Federation of Labor, held June 6 to 9, 1921, at Bridgeport, Conn., favoring the recognition of the Irish republic, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition of the Connecticut Federation of Labor, of New Haven, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of six submarines by the Lake Torpedo Boat Co., at Bridgeport, Conn., which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented petitions of the Slocum School Alumni, of Waterbury; the Connecticut Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Hartford; the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Danielson; E. C. Thomas, pastor of St. James Church, of Hartford; R. C. Whitehead, pastor of Stratford Congregational Church, of Stratford; Dwight W. Graham, of Waterbury; Charles S. Gray, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Winsted; John Maurice Deyo, pastor of the Congregational Church of Danbury; J. D. Prigmore, associate pastor of the First Church of Christ, of New Haven; and sundry citizens of Orange, Conn., praying that relief be afforded the Armenians, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KEYES presented a resolution adopted by the pastor and congregation of the Methodist Church of Whitefield, N. H., favoring the calling of an international disarmament conference, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KENDRICK presented a petition, numerously signed, of members of the Sheridan County (Wyo.) Farm Bureau, praying for the enactment of legislation creating an agricultural foreign trade financing corporation, with capital stock of $50,000,000, to be advanced by the United States, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution of sundry ex-service men of the Georgia School of Technology, of Atlanta, Ga., favoring the so-called Gallivan bill to prevent the Dempsey-Carpentier prize fight until the ex-service men's bonus bill is enacted, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions of the pastor and congregation of the Wade Branch Church of the Brethren, of Paola, and the pastor and congregation of the Second Methodist Episcopal Church of Wabaunsee, both in the State of Kansas, favoring the calling of an international disarmament conference, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BURSUM presented a resolution adopted at a joint meeting of the bankers and live-stock producers of New Mexico, held at Albuquerque, N. Mex., June 10, 1921, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At a joint meeting at Albuquerque, N. Mex., of the bankers and live-stock producers of this State on the 10th day of June, 1921, the following resolution was introduced and unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the live-stock business of this State is now in the most depressed condition known in its history, and which condition has been brought about by several causes, but largely because of the depressed financial condition throughout the entire country occasioned by the World War, and coupled with drought conditions which have extended over a large part of New Mexico, and which in part of said territory is still continuing; and

"Whereas live-stock producers, whether of cattle or sheep, are unable to market their animals except at a price very much below the cost of production, when, in fact, any market at all is obtainable; and

"Whereas, in our opinion, there is no surplus of meat animals in the United States, but, in fact, there is a great shortage, and that it is to the interest of the entire people of the Nation as well as to the live-stock producers to encourage further production, in order that the demands of the people for this production arising in future years may be met and supplied; and

"Whereas the Northwest grazing States, because of great drought which extended over same during two years and until 1919, are without animals to consume their now great abundance of grass and other feeds, and are wholly unable to restock said ranges because of the fact that there is no agency through which they may make financial arrangements for the purchase of their seasonable supply of animals for the restocking of said ranges; and

"Whereas said Northwest States have heretofore bought their animals in the Southwest, including the State of New Mexico, and have been our very best customers in taking the surplus animals produced from our breeding ranges and developing same on their fattening ranges; and

"Whereas the live-stock buyers of said Northwest States are still anxious and willing to purchase and develop our animals, provided funds for said purpose might be obtained; and

"Whereas the whole live-stock situation is now in such a stagnated condition as that unless immediate aid is procured from some source serious and lasting injury will result thereto, to the end that the Nation's meat supply will be jeopardized and the producers thereof greatly financially injured and in many cases ruined: Therefore be it

"Resolved by this joint meeting of the bankers and live-stock producers so assembled at Albuquerque as aforesaid, That we appeal to our President and his Cabinet at Washington, to the Congress of the United States, and to the officials of our great Federal Reserve System to promptly come to the relief of the live-stock producers by providing ample funds to be extended the said producers through long-time loans at a reasonable rate of interest, to the end that the breeding herds may be preserved to meet the future demands of the people and that animals suitable for the making of beef may be moved on to market channels and on to the northwest grazing grounds, giving relief both to the producers and the developer in said northwest territory, to the end that the industry may be saved and the banks be in part relieved from the terrific burden which they have been carrying and all the country thereby receiving an urgently needed benefit and relief; and be it further

"Resolved, That the same condition set forth above as surrounding the cattle producers affects and applies to the producer of mutton and wool, and that the latter is intended to be included and is included in these resolutions and the same need for relief applies to them as well."

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD resolutions adopted by the conference of post commanders of the American Legion of Oklahoma, with the letter of transmittal.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION OF OKLAHOMA,
OFFICE OF THE DEPARTMENT ADJUTANT, STATE CAPITOL,
Oklahoma City, Okla., June 14, 1921.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: We attach hereto a copy of resolutions adopted by the commanders of posts of the American Legion of Oklahoma at their conference at Shawnee on June 13, with the request that they be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Thanking you for your courtesy in this matter and for the many instances in which you have aided the ex-service men of Oklahoma in the past, I am,

Very respectfully, J. C. CHATFIELD.

Resolutions adopted by the conference of post commanders, the American Legion of Oklahoma, Shawnee, Okla., June 13, 1921.

Whereas telegraphic dispatches from Washington give the information that one John D. Appleby, of Oklahoma City, has been named district prohibition enforcement officer for territory including this State; and

Whereas the department executive committee of the American Legion of Oklahoma approximately two months ago passed resolutions requesting that no recognition be given to said Appleby because of his unpatriotic attitude during the war emergency; and

Whereas the said individual was of military age and was not in the military service; and

Whereas when the American Legion's program for hospital facilities for care of the disabled veterans was before the eighth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, the said John D. Appleby openly and personally directed an attack on the American Legion and its hospital program; and

Whereas through his pernicious activity the initial bills of the American Legion for hospital relief were defeated; and

Whereas the said John D. Appleby is characteristically and temperamentally unfit to hold a position of trust and honor under the United States Government; and

Whereas the post commanders of the American Legion in regular conference assembled at Shawnee, this the 13th day of June, 1921, has voiced its unqualified approval of the action taken by the executive committee: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the true and honest conviction of each and every commander and State American Legion officer attending this conference that said appointment of John D. Appleby should be rescinded, and with this belief this conference therefore does most respectfully request the honorable President of the United States immediately to rescind said appointment; and be it further

Resolved, That the honorable President of the United States, the United States Senators and Representatives from the State of Oklahoma, be furnished with a copy of this resolution; and be it further

Resolved, That this conference urgently requests the American Legion of Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Missouri, and Kansas to join with the department of Oklahoma in making this protest in justice due the ex-service men of these United States.

EARLE M. SIMON,
Chairman, Oklahoma City, Okla.
N. W. CAMPBELL,
Poteau, Okla.
EARL J. LITTEER,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 391) for the relief of Alfred Cluff and certain other settlers at Forestdale, Apache County, Ariz., who were evicted from their homes by reason of a change in the location of the north boundary of the White Mountain or San Carlos Apache Indian Reservation, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 121) thereon.

Mr. SMITH. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 72) for the relief of States in the cotton belt that have given aid to cotton farmers forced from the fields in established nonproduction zones through efforts to eradicate the pink bollworm.

I ask for its immediate consideration. It is an emergency measure and I do not think it will bring about any discussion. It carries no appropriation but allows the Secretary of Agriculture to use in a different manner the appropriation already contained in the agricultural appropriation act.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina if he thinks it will take any time?

Mr. SMITH. I think not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have it go over for a day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made and the joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1010) to amend sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 122) thereon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 32) to change the name of the Grand River in Colorado and Utah to the Colorado River. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] to the joint resolution.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. STERLING. I ask the Senator from Colorado if he anticipates that it will lead to any discussion?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah objects to the present consideration of the joint resolution, and it will go to the calendar.

Mr. NEW, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to which was referred the bill (S. 1881) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended, to establish an Hawaiian homes commission, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 123) thereon.

Mr. LENROOT. I report back adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (S. 1017) extending to persons who were injured in training while members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps the compensation, benefits, and privileges provided in the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, and in the act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended.

This is an adverse report, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration, with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? If not, the question is on the motion to postpone the bill indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 62) for the relief of Charles K. Bond, alias Kimball W. Rollins, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 124) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 76) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant the use of land and camp equipment to the United States Training Corps for Women, and to detail Army officers for service at recreational camps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS.

Mr. BORAH. I introduce a joint resolution abolishing the organization known as the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics and transferring its property and duties to existing governmental agencies, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD. In connection with the printing of the joint resolution in the RECORD, I ask to have printed also two sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as the joint resolution relates to those sections.

Mr. FLETCHER. May we not have the joint resolution read?

Mr. BORAH. Very well; I have no objection.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 77) abolishing the organization known as the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, and transferring its property and duties to existing governmental agencies was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Whereas an act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, of March 3, 1915, known as H. R. 20975, and further known as Public 271, created a body known as "Advisory Committee for Aeronautics"; and

Whereas at this time the necessity for economy demands a consolidation, where possible, of governmental agencies whose authorities are overlapping, and whose duties result in duplication: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the body known as the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is hereby abolished as such.

SEC. 2. That the technical duties that have heretofore been carried on by the body, or that have heretofore by law been charged to the body, be, and they are hereby, transferred to the Department of Commerce, to be carried out by the Bureau of Standards.

SEC. 3. That the technical equipment now in the possession of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics be, and it is hereby, transferred to the Department of Commerce, to be available for the work of the Bureau of Standards.

SEC. 4. That the buildings and real estate now belonging to the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics at present on military or naval reservations be, and they are hereby, transferred to the War Department or Navy Department, as the case may be.

SEC. 5. That such duties of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics as relate to its advisory capacity on the subject of aeronautics be, and they are hereby, transferred to the War Council, as created by the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, as amended by acts subsequent to June 3, 1916, to and including the act of June 4, 1920.

The two sections of the United States Statutes indicated were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

An advisory committee for aeronautics is hereby established, and the President is authorized to appoint not to exceed 12 members, to consist of two members from the War Department, from the office in charge of military aeronautics; two members from the Navy Department, from the office in charge of naval aeronautics; a representative each of the Smithsonian Institution, of the United States Weather Bureau, and of the United States Bureau of Standards; together with not more than five additional persons, who shall be acquainted with the needs of aeronautical science, either civil or military, or skilled in aeronautical engineering or its allied sciences: Provided, That the members of the Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, as such, shall serve without compensation: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Advisory Committee for Aeronautics to supervise and direct the scientific study of the problems of flight, with a view to their practical solution, and to determine the problems which should be experimentally attacked, and to discuss their solution and their application to practical questions. In the event of a laboratory or laboratories, either in whole or in part, being placed under the direction of the committee, the committee may direct and conduct research and experiment in aeronautics in such laboratory or laboratories: And provided further, That rules and regulations for the conduct of the work of the committee shall be formulated by the committee and approved by the President.

That the sum of $5,000 a year, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for five years is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, for experimental work and investigations undertaken by the committee, clerical expenses and supplies, and necessary expenses of members of the committee in going to, returning from, and while attending meetings of the committee: Provided, That an annual report to the Congress shall be submitted through the President, including an itemized statement of expenditures. (Statutes of the United States, 3d sess. of the 63d Cong., 1914–15, Public Acts and Resolutions, pt. 1, p. 980.)

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT, JUNE, 1920.

SEC. 5b. The war council: The Secretary of War, the Assistant Secretary of War, the General of the Army, and the Chief of Staff shall constitute the war council of the War Department, which council shall from time to time meet and consider policies affecting both the military and munitions problems of the War Department. Such questions shall be presented to the Secretary of War in the war council, and his decision with reference to such questions of policy, after consideration of the recommendations thereon by the several members of the war council, shall constitute the policy of the War Department with reference thereto.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate——

Mr. STERLING. I understand the Chair is about to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is my substitute bill for House bill 6320.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood that the Senator rose to present routine morning business.

Mr. STERLING. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. Then I ask unanimous consent that we proceed with House bill 6320, the unfinished business.

Mr. ASHURST. Before unanimous consent is given, I wish to say that I am very anxious to assist the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to dispose of the bill, but since we were deprived of calendar day on Monday by circumstances which I have twice related, I was wondering if we might not have, say, an hour, for the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from Arizona that I do not wish to interfere with morning business. If the Senate desires to consider for an hour unobjected bills on the calendar, I have no objection to devoting an hour to that purpose.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, the calendar is a species of morning business. It has some rights.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not objecting to it. The unfinished business will come before the Senate in the regular routine at 2 o'clock, even if we do not get to it before that hour, and I think it will not take long, because we are certainly very near the end of it now.

Mr. ASHURST. I only ask that we consider the calendar for one hour, and at the conclusion of one hour recur to the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. With the understanding that no bills on the calendar shall be considered to which there is any objection?

Mr. ASHURST. I said unobjected bills.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not understand the Senator to include that in his request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar, considering only those to which there is no objection. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. STERLING. There is a time limit to that, as I understand, and the time limit is one hour. The request is that one hour shall be devoted to the consideration of the calendar and that bills which are not objected to shall be considered. I shall not interpose any objection if that is the understanding.

Mr. SMITH. Do I understand that in accordance with the request of the Senator from Arizona we are to take up bills unobjected to for one hour from the time when we begin the consideration of the calendar?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I believe we can get to the unfinished business within an hour. I think we ought to go through the calendar, and we can get through with it in an hour if we consider only unobjected bills.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator asks unanimous consent that that shall be done?

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that that shall be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar for one hour. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Chair desires to remark that at the end of the hour the Senate will necessarily proceed with the consideration of bills on the calendar. The Secretary will report the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, after the hour has expired will the Senate then not proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will not come before the Senate until 2 o'clock, unless it is otherwise ordered.

Mr. STERLING. A motion may be made, however, to take up the unfinished business.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 656) to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of the Navy was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

GOVERNMENT LANDS IN HAWAII.

The bill (S. 1021) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. I offer the following amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 4, after the word "act," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no exchange hereby authorized shall require the payment of any money by the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, when this measure was under consideration some time ago I questioned the wisdom of it and interrogated the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs as to the particular land which it was desired to exchange under the provisions of the bill. I can not see why we should have one policy with reference to the disposition of abandoned military reservations in Hawaii and a different policy applying to the United States proper. I have not yet had any enlightenment on that question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say to the Senator from Montana that I have not yet received from the department the information which the Senator requested. It may take some little time to get an answer to my request for such information.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 384) to require judges appointed under authority of the United States to devote their entire time to the duties of a judge was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 724) for the relief of Henry J. Davis was announced as next in order.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 725) for the relief of Orion Matthews was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the bill been read, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the consideration of the bill. It has been 50 years since the war in which the beneficiary of this bill participated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 581) to repeal the act prohibiting increased pay under lump-sum appropriations to employees transferred within one year was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 582) to repeal section 5 of the act approved June 22, 1906, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 569) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill relates to the same subject matter as the unfinished business, and I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

The bill (S. 1439) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am quite sure that the bill, if passed, will require the expenditure of a great deal of money. How much I do not know, nor can I ascertain from the report of the committee on the bill. The bill is a very important measure, and perhaps it ought to pass.

Mr. KENYON. The report does not state the amount of money which may be required, because it is impossible to figure it.

Mr. SMOOT. And there is no estimate as to the amount.

Mr. KENYON. There is no estimate as to the amount. I think, however, that the Senator from Utah will find that the report is reasonably clear as to just what the bill is designed to accomplish. It is No. 4 of the program which the American Legion has asked Congress to carry out. I agree with the Senator from Utah that it involves a matter which perhaps ought to be discussed.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I am not myself prepared, and I do not now care to proceed with the discussion of the bill. I wish, however, to bring it up as soon as we can. I believe that it may be advisable that the bill should now go over, although I do not wish to ask that it go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the statement of the Senator from Iowa, I think it is better that the bill should go over.

Mr. KENYON. I give notice that I shall ask that the bill be taken up within a reasonable time.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be glad to assist the Senator from Iowa in its consideration, but I ask that the bill now go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

CON MURPHY.

The bill (S. 1737) for the relief of Con Murphy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $2,000 to Con Murphy, for personal injuries sustained by him while in the performance of his duty as janitor in the custodian service, Federal Building, Cheyenne, Wyo.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1806) to further amend the interstate commerce act, as amended, to provide for seasonal rates for the transportation of coal was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1807) to aid in stabilizing the coal industry was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 425) fixing the salaries of certain United States attorneys and United States marshals was announced as next in order, and the reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my colleague, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], when this bill came up some days ago desired to offer certain amendments to it. He is not in the Chamber at the moment, and I ask, therefore, that the bill go over, temporarily at least, until he returns to the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FISCAL SYSTEM.

The bill (S. 205) relating to the fiscal system of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order, and the reading clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like very much to have this bill passed, and I am satisfied the Senate will pass it; but I hardly think it would be fair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who, I know, is opposed to the bill, to consider it at this time. He would like to be present when it is taken up for consideration, and for that reason I shall have to ask that it may go over, at least temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

The bill (S. 1039) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I am anticipating what I assume will be an objection to this bill, as I know there are Senators who are opposed to it. A similar bill at the last session of Congress passed the Senate, and the bill now on the calendar ought also to pass. I am going to ask unanimous consent to make the bill a special order for Tuesday, June 28, at 2 o'clock. I have talked with a number of Senators about it, and I think there is no objection to that being done. Under Rule X, if there is unfinished business at that time, it would not come on; but there are a number of Senators who wish to be here who are absent from the city, and some will be absent next week, and I think the fair thing is to fix a date, and, with that object in view, to make the bill a special order.

Mr. SMOOT. Would it not be proper to call a quorum before the request is put?

Mr. KENYON. I do not think so. I am simply asking that the bill be made a special order; I could move to make it a special order, and I make that motion, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. That can be done immediately after we get through with the calendar under the present order.

Mr. KENYON. Why can we not do it now?

Mr. SMOOT. We are working under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, under what rule does the Senator move to make a bill a special order? It has to be done by unanimous consent, does it not?

Mr. KENYON. No; but under Rule X it requires a two-thirds vote for the Senate to make a bill a special order. The only privilege that making a bill a special order gives is that it fixes a time for its consideration, and then, if at the end of the day on which it comes up, it is still before the Senate at the time of adjournment it would become the unfinished business. There is not any special virtue attached to a special order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why does not the Senator ask unanimous consent to take it up at 2 o'clock on June 28 as the unfinished business?

Mr. KENYON. That perhaps would require a roll call.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. KENYON. On second thought, I am inclined to think such a request would not require a roll call. In accordance with the suggestion, I ask unanimous consent, then, that Senate bill 1039 may be the unfinished business at 2 o'clock on Tuesday, June 28, to be taken up at that time as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to believe that the Senate is operating under a unanimous-consent agreement and that the motion made by the Senator from Iowa is not in order at this time.

Mr. KENYON. Very well; I will make the motion at the close of the morning hour.

ORDNANCE STOREKEEPER IN THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 834) to authorize the appointment of an ordnance storekeeper in the Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "Army," to strike out "and" and insert "an," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Nathan Hazen, chief clerk, office of the Chief of Ordnance Department, United States

Army, an ordnance storekeeper of the Ordnance Department, United States Army, with the rank and pay and allowances of a captain, mounted, and that he be immediately placed upon the retired list.

The grade of ordnance storekeeper is hereby revived in the Army of the United States for this purpose only.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee a question about this bill. It provides that this man shall be immediately put on the retired list. What is the reason for that? As I understand, a civilian employee is to be put in the Army and immediately put on the retired list, where he will draw a salary for doing nothing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this man has been in the Ordnance Department for 43 or 44 years, I think. He has been chief clerk of the Ordnance Department for a long, long time. During the recent emergency, if my recollection is correct, his services were regarded as so exceedingly valuable that he was given an emergency commission. His age, of course, is far beyond that which would permit him to enlist in the Regular Army and come up and be retired in the usual way. He has now reached an advanced age, has served the Government faithfully for nearly half a century, and, frankly, this is a method of rewarding an old and faithful employee who is not eligible for any other kind of reward. It has been done in two or three other instances of a similar character in years gone by.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if we put this civilian on the retired list, why should we not do the same thing with others and make a retired list of all Government employees?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is just what we have done in the classified service. This man is not eligible for that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Are we going to continue through all the branches of the Government to put civilians on the retired list of the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should hope not.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN B. H. WARING.

The bill (S. 667) for the relief of John B. H. Waring was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from North Carolina will withhold his objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is to restore a man to the service and put him on the retired list, is it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator that this bill corrects a very gross injustice that was done to this man Waring, who was in the Medical Corps.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall be glad to have the Senator explain the bill. I want to understand it before I object.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator withhold his objection, then, for the present?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This man Waring was in the Medical Corps. He was examined two or three times before he went in and by Army officers after he went in and at the time of his going in, and was declared to be a perfectly sound candidate for his position as an officer in the Army. He was serving in the Philippine Islands, and suffered what is called a light stroke, a form of sunstroke; and from that trouble, incident to the service and declared to be so by the physician who examined him, he went through a series of mishaps which finally resulted in his getting out of the Army. This bill has been gone over twice by the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate, has been twice reported favorably, and was once acted upon favorably by the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. What does the War Department say about it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The War Department has made no objection to the bill, so far as I know. It was passed by the Senate in the last Congress, and only failed of action in the House because of the congestion of business.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will withdraw the objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore to John B. H. Waring, late a captain in the Medical Corps, the files of which he was deprived, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint him an officer of the Medical Corps in the Army of the United States as of May 5, 1917, with such rank as he would have attained had he not been discharged, and when so appointed he shall be placed on the retired list of the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENNSYLVANIA-DELAWARE BOUNDARY LINE.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 82) ratifying the reestablishment of the boundary line between the States of Pennsylvania and Delaware, was considered by the Senate, and was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress hereby consents to the reestablishment of the boundary line between the States of Pennsylvania and Delaware, as heretofore agreed upon by said States, and as reestablished and confirmed, fixed, and determined according to the terms of an act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania entitled "An act providing for the acceptance, approval, and confirmation of the report of the commission appointed in pursuance of the act approved the 4th day of May, A. D. 1889, authorizing the examination, survey, and reestablishment of the circle of New Castle as the boundary line between Pennsylvania and Delaware," approved June 22, 1897, and an act of the General Assembly of the State of Delaware entitled "An act providing for the acceptance, approval, and confirmation of the report of the commission appointed in pursuance of the act of the General Assembly of the State of Delaware, approved the 25th day of April, A. D. 1889, authorizing the examination, survey, and reestablishment of the circle of New Castle as the boundary line between Pennsylvania and Delaware," approved March 28, 1921.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This joint resolution has already been considered as in Committee of the Whole, and reported to the Senate. It is now before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is, Shall the joint resolution be read a third time?

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States" was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1375) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) authorizing the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) to take over and dispose of 13,902 tons of sugar imported from the Argentine Republic was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I object to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 904) fixing the term of service of Elijah C. Putnam during the Civil War was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The bill (S. 831) to amend the proviso in paragraph 10 of section 9 of the Federal reserve act amended by the act of June 21, 1917, amending the Federal reserve act, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in paragraph 10 of section 9 of the Federal reserve act amended by the act of June 21, 1917, amending the Federal reserve act be amended as follows:

Strike out all after the word "than" in the sixth line of said proviso and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That which could be borrowed lawfully from such State bank or trust company were it a national banking association," so that said proviso when amended shall read as follows:

"Provided, however, That no Federal reserve bank shall be permitted to discount for any State bank or trust company notes, drafts, or bills of exchange of any one borrower who is liable for borrowed money to such State bank or trust company in an amount greater than that which could be borrowed lawfully from such State bank or trust company were it a national banking association."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Connecticut give some explanation of this bill.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the report explains very clearly the purpose of the bill. It merely places State banks which are members of the Federal reserve system on the same basis that national banks are now placed.

Mr. OVERMAN. It applies to State banks only where they are members?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, has the proposed amendment of the Federal reserve act been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has.

Mr. SMITH. I was engaged otherwise. Before we vote on it I should like to have the proposed amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the proviso of the statute, the bill strikes out all after the word "than," in the sixth line, and inserts the following words: "That which could be borrowed lawfully from such State bank or trust company were it a national banking association," so that the proviso, if amended, shall read as follows:

Provided, however, That no Federal reserve bank shall be permitted to discount for any State bank or trust company notes, drafts, or bills of exchange of any one borrower who is liable for borrowed money to such State bank or trust company in an amount greater than that which could be borrowed lawfully from such State bank or trust company were it a national banking association.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask to have that bill go over. I should like to look into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 387) granting certain public lands to the city of Phoenix, Ariz., for municipal purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over. A similar bill has passed the House and is now pending here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

The bill (S. 1288) to provide for the appointment of one additional judge of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint one additional judge of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York, who shall reside in said district and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present district judges of said district.

Mr WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill which will have the effect of increasing the number of judges in the southern district by two instead of by one. This amendment is offered at the earnest request of the Attorney General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Before the word "additional" it is proposed to strike out "one" and insert "two," and after the word "additional" it is proposed to strike out the word "judge" and insert "judges," so that if amended it will read:

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint two additional judges of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York, who shall reside in said district and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present district judges of said district.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee had up this question as to whether there should be two additional judges or one. After looking into the matter and considering it, the committee unanimously agreed that we would recommend the passage of this bill providing for one additional judge. I think they can get along with one additional judge, and if they can not we can provide for another in the future; but if the judges there will work like some other judges do, I think five judges probably can do the work in that district.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in reply to the last observation of the Senator, let me say that the judges in this district already dispose on an average of four times as many cases apiece as the judges do in many other districts in the country.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are hopelessly behind. One additional judge will be merely a step in the direction of relieving them. We shall have to provide two judges inevitably, and the quicker we do it the quicker we will get this mass of litigation out of the way.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why not make it three, or four, or five, if you have so many cases?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it is hoped, as the Senator knows, to relieve the Federal judges of some of the cases which arise as the result of recent enactments and amendments to the Constitution. If that is done, it may be that this district can get along without more than two additional judges; but on the old-time cases, the standard cases that come before Federal judges, they are hopelessly behind to-day. I had understood that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the chairman of the committee, believed that they should have two judges, and that there would be no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will agree to do whatever the chairman thinks best.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me, the Attorney General recommended two judges, and I am satisfied that they are urgently needed. I may say, further, that I was present at a conference of judges and lawyers yesterday who were discussing the question of relieving the congestion which exists in the Federal courts, and I talked with an attorney from the city of New York, and I am satisfied that they need not only two additional judges, but under present conditions they really need four additional judges. There has been a great increase in the admiralty and bankruptcy business in those courts; and of course Senators all know the increase in business in the courts that has come from the enforcement of national prohibition.

The Department of Justice recommended two additional judges. We reported the bill as it was introduced by the Senator from New York. I think the least they are entitled to is two judges, and the bill ought to be passed in that form to relieve the congestion there.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the chairman has information I did not have. But I do not know where this will end. We are authorizing the appointment of additional judges all over the country. If we make provision for two additional judges for New York, in some other States we will be asked for one or two additional judges, and so on, and no one can tell where it will end. It looks to me as though some movement to take care of the bootleg cases ought to be started. It does not take long to try them. A judge could dispose of 100 of them in a day, as a rule. Still, if the chairman of the committee is satisfied that there shall be two additional judges in the southern district of New York, I do not object.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I think the necessity for these additional judges is not caused to any great degree by the cases arising under the prohibition enforcement act. The business has increased in New York tremendously in the last two years. A study of the statistics which the Senator from New York put in the RECORD the other day will show that to be the case.

As a member of the committee which reported in favor of one judge, I was informed by the Senator from New York of these conditions and circumstances, and I advised him to ask to have the bill recommitted to the committee, so that we could report it, making provision for two additional judges; but when I talked with the chairman of the committee, who was of the same opinion that I was as to the necessity for the increase, he suggested that he would advocate an amendment on the floor to that effect, and that it would not be necessary to recommit the bill.

I sincerely hope the amendment of the Senator from New York may be agreed to. I think very likely we may be driven in the very near future to appoint some sort of a commission, with proper judicial authority, to try the liquor-enforcement cases, and to relieve the district courts from the consideration of that class of cases. But the country is growing very rapidly; the population is growing, and I assume that owing to matters growing out of the war, and the admiralty business in this maritime section of the country, the business of the courts in New York has increased by leaps and bounds.

I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the appointment of two additional judges of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York."

DIVISION OF CONSTRUCTION AND HOUSING, BUREAU OF STANDARDS.

The bill (S. 1890) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to establish in the National Bureau of Standards a division to be known as the division of construction and housing was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that this bill may go over, because it has been substantially taken care of in the deficiency appropriation bill. If the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] were here, I would ask that it go over under Rule IX; but I will not make that request in his absence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The resolution (S. Res. 67) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to hold hearings here or elsewhere and to employ a stenographer to report the same was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCORMICK. I ask that the resolution may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 80) directing the Committee on Education and Labor to investigate the recent acts of violence in the coal fields of West Virginia and adjacent territory and the causes which led to the conditions which now exist in said territory was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 52) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to employees of the United States Department of Agriculture who died in the war with Germany was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN.

The bill (S. 1254) providing for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Michigan was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States shall appoint an additional district judge for the eastern district of Michigan, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall reside in said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same power and jurisdiction and receive the same salary now prescribed by law in respect of the present district judge therein.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1855) to save daylight in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. WADSWORTH. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1838) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes relating to patents was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 63) for the relief of Lester A. Rockwell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PRODUCTION OF MINERALS FOR WAR PURPOSES.

The bill (S. 843) to amend section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act approved March 2, 1919, entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

Add to the first paragraph of section 5 the following proviso: "Provided, That all claimants who, in response to any personal, written, or published request, demand, solicitation, or appeal from any of the Government agencies mentioned in said act, in good faith expended money in producing or preparing to produce any of the ores or minerals named therein and have heretofore filed their claims within the time and in the manner prescribed by said act, shall be reimbursed such net losses as they may have been found to have incurred and are in justice and equity entitled to from the appropriation in said act, and that the unexpended portion of the appropriation carried in said act be continued available for the purpose named above until all claims shall be finally settled or disposed of."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this bill went over the other day at my request. I have an amendment which I intend to propose to it, which I understand is satisfactory to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. If that amendment is agreed to, I shall have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator read the amendment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the word "act," in line 3, page 2, insert "if the proof already filed in support of said claims clearly shows them to be based upon action taken in response to such request, demand, solicitation, or appeal," and after the word "all," in line 8, to insert the word "such."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the bill had better go over. It is an important bill and entitled to more consideration than we can give it under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. ASHURST. Before the bill is passed over, I believe if a short explanation were made by the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] the objection might be withdrawn.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be very glad to withhold the objection until the explanation is made.

Mr. ASHURST. A substantially similar bill passed the Senate in the Sixty-sixth Congress. The Committee on Mines and Mining gave the bill careful scrutiny, heard witnesses, and amended it so as to guard carefully the public interests. The committee accepts the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. But I will not take further time. The junior Senator from California is the author of the bill, and he will explain it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Arizona has stated, this bill was passed by the Senate in the last Congress, but it failed to pass the House on account of lack of time, I assume. It was redrafted and, as the Senator will observe, has been amended so as more carefully to guard the rights of the Government. It was favored by the committee. As stated, it is a meritorious measure. No additional appropriation is asked for, and no additional evidence is to be submitted. All the claims are in and they are now to be passed on pursuant to the bill as amended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator from California please state the object of the bill?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly. By the act of October 5, 1918, when this Nation was in war and in peril, Congress passed an act setting out that there were certain metals which were essential to the successful carrying on of that war, and calling upon the people to set about to search out and produce those essential metals. Among those metals were chrome, manganese, pyrites, and tungsten. Patriotically and energetically men throughout the West sought to aid the Government along the lines indicated. The armistice coming, their operations, of course, ceased.

On March 2, 1919, Congress, I think wisely and justly, passed an act, aptly termed a relief measure, on behalf of those who had thus sought to aid the Government and who found themselves at great loss. Under an interpretation of that act, which the committee thought was erroneous and too narrow, many of the claims thought to be meritorious and just were rejected and disallowed. Hence the bill which was passed in the last Congress, and hence the one which is now before us, which expands somewhat, by way of interpretation, perhaps, the act passed at the last session. Under the act of March 2, 1919, these claims were presented. They aggregated something in the neighborhood of five or six or more million dollars; $9,500,000 was appropriated for this purpose of relief.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I was unable to hear the first part of the Senator's remarks, there was so much conversation going on around me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask the Senator with whom the claims were filed and who has the authority to allow the claims under the act of March 2, 1919?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Secretary of the Interior. It may not be improper for me to indicate that the measure meets the approval of that department of the Government. I repeat to this extent to say that no additional appropriation is needed and if, indeed, all the disallowed claims were allowed there would still be money remaining.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In what respect does the bill broaden the law as it formerly stood? What kind of claims does it let in?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The act of March 2, 1919——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at this point?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. The bill relates to miners and operatives who, in response to the request of the Government furnished needed metals to the Government, are now filing claims to obtain payment therefor. I will use a concrete illustration. The Government published and sent broadcast requests for chrome, manganese, pyrites, and so forth, for manufacturing ordnance. It should be borne in mind that we were during the war importing manganese, so hard were we pressed for that metal. Miners in our mountains, for instance, sent one of their number to town for supplies or for the mail, and while in town procuring such supplies, and so forth, he read a "notice to miners," posted on a wall or in the post office, in the form of an appeal to miners and to their patriotism, stating that the Government required manganese, chrome, and other particular metals.

Under the act of 1919 the particular miner who read that notice and who furnished such metals to the Government may get his claim paid, but as to those miners who did not read such notice, they had no contractual relations with the Government and can not be paid.

This legislation contemplates that those persons who in good faith produced metals of use to the Government and have heretofore filed their claims may be repaid the amount of money they actually expended in extracting such metals; and the bill further provides that the claimants must have responded to some published request, solicitation, or appeal of the Government, and that the Secretary of the Interior must find that in justice and equity the claimants are entitled to be paid.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand, of course, that the claimant has to establish the truth and justice and equity of his claim to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that, but what I wish to know is what there was in the original law or in the act of 1919 which prevented claimants in the class of cases about which the Senator is now speaking from getting their claims allowed?

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from California permit me?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. The construction placed on the original act, if I remember, was that the language thereof provided that only those who had contracts with the Government could obtain relief or repayment. I may not accurately quote the substance of the law, and if I do not, I wish the Senator from California would correct me.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I can give the Senator the exact language.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, in this class of cases there is always danger that some fraud will be perpetrated upon the Government by perjured testimony and things of that kind, but if a man has to establish the justice and equity of his claim in the Department of the Interior, I have no objection. If he can prove it to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, there is no objection, because the present Secretary is an able lawyer and a miner also, and he is capable of doing justice in these cases.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment which I proposed provides a further restriction that if the proof already filed clearly shows the claims to be based upon action taken in response to such request, demand, and so forth.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. For the information of Senators I will state that a couple of years ago, I think it was, I heard great complaint from planters down South who had at the request of the Government planted a certain variety of beans for war purposes. Not seeing one of the Senators from Florida present at the time, I was about to ask my friend from California if those cases had been provided for. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] tells me, however, that those claims have been settled by the Government. Therefore there is a precedent established, and I am heartily in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. May I ask the Senator from California, in view of the fact that the Senator from Washington has proposed an amendment providing that the cases must be decided on the proof already filed, what effect that amendment will have?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not see, then, why there should be any further objection.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I shall not take up the time of the Senate further, and I trust the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will permit the matter to go to a vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Wisconsin insists on his objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, Mr. President; I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his objection to the present consideration of the bill. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington. Without objection, it is agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] that the other day when I sent for a copy of the original act the clerk in the document room sent me a copy of an act which had a different date from that stated in the bill. They stated that the date given in the bill is wrong. Had the Senator noticed that?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; I had not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, that can be corrected in the House if it is incorrect. So I would not hold it up on that account.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIJAH C. PUTNAM.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I understand there was some objection made a while ago to the consideration of Calendar No. 78, a bill (S. 904) fixing a term of service of Elijah C. Putnam during the Civil War. I am quite certain that the situation was not understood. That matter has been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and a unanimous report made by that committee, and I think that should be convincing as to the justice of the bill. I should like to have unanimous consent to return to that bill, so that it may be considered. The bill was passed by the Senate at the last session. I should like to inquire the nature of the objection that has been made to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to returning to Calendar No. 78?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The bill will go over.

ABANDONED FORT BUFORD MILITARY RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 732) to extend the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes, to the lands within the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation in the States of North Dakota and Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, in line 5, to strike out the word "the" after the word "to" and insert the words "all nonmineral," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, extended to all nonmineral lands within the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation in the States of North Dakota and Montana, restored to disposal under the homestead, town site, and desert land laws under the provisions of the act of May 19, 1900 (31 Stat. L., p. 180).

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have been endeavoring to understand this bill, and I rise to ask my colleague [Mr. MYERS] for some explanation of it. It apparently extends the provisions of section 2455 of the Revised Statutes to lands within the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation, but my understanding is that section 2455 of the Revised Statutes is entirely obsolete.

Mr. MYERS. The section of the statute which is noted in the bill is the section which permits sale by the Secretary of the Interior of isolated tracts of land, and it is the intention to make that law apply to the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation. It is the section of the statutes cited by the Secretary of the Interior in his report on the bill, and I do not think there is any mistake about it. If so, it was not discovered in the committee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Section 2455 does refer to isolated tracts, and if it were made applicable to the Fort Buford Military Reservation there would seem to be no objection to it; but the bill continues:

Hereby extended to all nonmineral lands within the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation, in the States of North Dakota and Montana, restored—

The language is not very clear—restored to disposal under the homestead, town site, and desert land laws under the provisions of the act of May 19, 1900.

Under the act of 1900 they were restored to disposal under the homestead, town site, and desert land laws. I suggest to my colleague that he let the matter go over until we have an opportunity to confer about it.

Mr. MYERS. I am willing to do that. The whole object of the bill is to apply the law for the sale of isolated tracts to restored lands of the Fort Buford Military Reservation. Those lands are not now a military reservation, but have been restored to the public domain. They have mostly been entered by homesteaders, but there are a few isolated tracts to which it is desired to make the law apply. However, I am willing to have it go over.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will note the report of the Acting Secretary in the last paragraph in which he says:

These lands have been very largely disposed of under the aforesaid acts.

That has reference to the act of July 5, 1884.

I can see no reason why the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes, should not be extended to the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation lands, and no objection is made to the passage of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the bill goes over.

Mr. SMOOT. May I inquire who objected?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

WYOMING NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (S. 1590) to add certain lands to the Wyoming National Forest was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment to strike out, on page 1, lines 9 to 16, and on page 2, lines 1 to 19, inclusive, and to insert:

East half section 20, west half section 21, west half section 28, east half section 29, east half section 32, west half section 33, township 33 north, range 114 west; sections 7, 18, 19, 30, and 31, township 32 north, range 114 west; sections 6, 7, 18, 19, 30, 31, township 31 north, range 114 west; sections 6, 7, 18, 19, 29, 30, 31, 32, township 30 north, range 114 west; sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, township 29 north, range 114 west; sections 6, 7, 18, 19, 30, 31, township 28 north, range 114 west; sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, township 27 north, range 115 west; all above west of sixth principal meridian, Wyoming.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands in the State of Wyoming are hereby added to the Wyoming National Forest and made a part thereof, subject to all laws affecting national forests, but the addition of these lands shall not affect adversely any valid existing settlement or entry made prior to the passage of this act:

East half section 20, west half section 21, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTINUATION OF CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time during which it was agreed to consider unobjected bills on the calendar has expired.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, when the bill which is known as the maternity bill was reached on the calendar I tried to secure unanimous consent to have it made a special order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] why at this particular moment he wishes to interrupt the consideration of the calendar and to have the unfinished business taken up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the time for the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar expired at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.

Mr. STERLING. One hour was allowed for that purpose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will allow the calendar to be concluded before he makes the motion to proceed with the consideratioin of the unfinished business. We have all the evening before us.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. To do what the Senator from Alabama suggests, we shall have to have a new unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Because by unanimous consent it was agreed to consider unobjected bills on the calendar for one hour, and that time has expired. Of course, during the consideration of the calendar, under Rule VIII, a motion can be made to take up a bill in spite of an objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the President pro tempore who was presiding stated when the agreement was made that the calendar would naturally come up afterwards until 2 o'clock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But not with the agreement that only unobjected bills were to be considered. The calendar would come up subject to a motion under Rule VIII that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill in spite of objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It would come up where we have just left off.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it will take half an hour to complete the consideration of the calendar and we might as well do that now. Therefore, in order to avoid any question, I ask unanimous consent that we may continue the consideration of bills on the calendar until 2 o'clock, unless they shall have been disposed of earlier.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And that only unobjected bills shall be considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That unobjected bills only shall be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I regret to have to object to the request of the Senator from Alabama, but under the conditions I feel that I should object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why should the Senator do so? What are the conditions to which he refers? We can pass the unfinished business before 5 o'clock this evening.

Mr. STERLING. But could we not also return to the calendar after the unfinished business shall have been passed?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; certainly not.

Mr. STERLING. It was by unanimous consent that an hour was given for the consideration of the calendar this morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from South Dakota may pursue his own course in the matter, if he desires to do so, but there is no reason or sense in interfering with the disposition of the calendar now, when at 2 o'clock the unfinished business comes up in any event. There will be ample time after 2 o'clock to dispose of the packer bill before 5 o'clock, as we shall be acting under the 5-minute rule.

Of course, if the Senator from South Dakota has some ulterior motive—that is, if he wants to prevent the consideration of some measure on the calendar—that is another proposition.

Mr. STERLING. No; I do not. I will yield to the request of the Senator from Alabama and withdraw my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]?

Mr. STERLING. It being, of course, understood that only unobjected bills on the calendar are to be considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly. That is my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama, and it is agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with respect to Senate bill 491, which is now before us, having been announced as next in order when the time limit expired, I ask my colleague [Mr. SMOOT] to let it go over, as I have certain amendments to offer which will require considerable discussion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, the bill will go over.

EXPORTATION OF CANADIAN PULP WOOD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 36) authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick as to certain restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces relative to the exportation of pulp wood therefrom to the United States, was announced as next in order, and the Senate as in Committee on the Whole proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, in reference to this joint resolution I desire to say that it was favorably reported from the committee, was passed by the Senate during the last Congress, and it is now again favorably reported by the committee. The joint resolution proposes to appoint a commission to take up with the Canadian Government or the provincial governments of Canada the question of the removal of the embargo on pulp wood. It is a matter in which not only the manufacturers of pulp wood but the newspapers of the United States are greatly interested.

I hope there will be no objection to the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the joint resolution be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas newsprint and other printing papers are commodities of universal use and are indispensable in the educational process of modern civilization, and the paramount importance of a sufficient production of such newsprint and other paper to supply the needs of the people of the United States is a self-evident proposition; and

Whereas practically the whole content of newsprint and other printing paper is composed of mechanical and chemical products of pulp wood, the supply of which in the eastern part of the United States is being rapidly exhausted by the growing demand and the price of which is being advanced to unprecedented levels; and

Whereas the existing scarcity of pulp wood and its threatened total exhaustion in the United States has become a matter of such grave concern to the paper industry, the users and manufacturers of forest products, the Federal Government, and the general public that the Forest Service, the lumber and pulp and paper associations, and the forestry authorities of the country are now formulating a broad and comprehensive national forest conservation and reforestation plan for early adoption; and

Whereas the lieutenant governors of certain of the Provinces of Canada, in council, did issue orders prohibiting the exportation of pulp wood cut from Crown lands, the chief source of supply of pulp wood, unless manufactured into lumber, pulp, or paper, thereby tending to create a monopoly beyond our borders in the manufacture of paper, to the great detriment of the people of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to appoint a commission of five persons and, by appropriate authority, to confer on this commission the power, on behalf of the administration and the Congress, to negotiate with said Dominion Government, or with said provincial governments, in respect to the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council, and as well any other restrictions on the exportation of pulp wood and newsprint and other printing paper composed of mechanical and chemical products of pulp and pulp wood, from the Dominion of Canada to the United States.

SEC. 2. That in the event the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council can not be agreed to by mutual arrangement of the Governments of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada, that said commission shall investigate, consider, and report to the President, on or before December 1, 1921, what action in its opinion should be taken by the Congress that will aid in securing the cancellation of said restrictive orders in council, so that they may not continue to militate against the interests of the people of the United States.

SEC. 3. That for the necessary expenses of said commission the sum of $50,000 be, and it is hereby, appropriated from the moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama desire that the preamble to the joint resolution shall be agreed to or stricken out?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the preamble had better be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the preamble is agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 136) for the relief of Dr. O. H. Titmann, former Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 665) to provide for free tolls for American ships through the Panama Canal was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will go over.

LONGEVITY PAY OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 775) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to certify certain findings of fact, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 3, line 2, before the words "per cent," to strike out "20" and to insert "10," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims shall certify to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury the findings of fact heretofore made for claimants in claims of officers of the United States Army for longevity pay under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in United States v. Morton (112 U. S. Repts., 1) and United States v. Watson (130 U. S. Repts., 80), and the Court of Claims in Stewart v. United States (34 C. Cls. Repts., 553).

And that the accounting officers of the Treasury shall proceed to settle the claims so certified and all other claims for longevity pay and allowances on account of services of officers in the Regular Army arising under section 15 of an act approved July 5, 1838, entitled "An act to increase the present Military Establishment of the United States, and for other purposes," and subsequent acts affecting longevity pay and allowances, in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in all cases in which heretofore, namely, between 1890 and 1908, such claims were disallowed by any accounting officer of the Treasury; and no decision of the comptroller heretofore made against a claimant under said section 15 shall prevent a settlement under the terms of this act of any such disallowed claim. Every such claim shall be payable to the claimant or to his widow or to his legal representative: Provided, That no claim hereunder shall be allowed if made by any person who is an assignee of such claim, nor to a legal representative without proof of the existence of blood relations to whom the fund would be distributed: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any agent or attorney, firm of attorneys, or any person engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under this act to charge or receive more than 10 per cent of any amount appropriated in satisfaction of the claim.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the amendment is agreed to, I desire to say a word to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who reported the bill. I appreciate his reporting the bill, which was introduced in the Senate by me. The bill provides for attorneys' fees to the extent of 20 per cent, but the Senator has reported an amendment cutting it down to 10 per cent. Of course, I do not want to do anything that would interfere with the passage of the bill, but I desire that the Senate may understand it.

The bill relates to the longevity pay of certain officers in the Regular Army. Under the longevity pay bill, which was passed a great many years ago, in computing longevity pay, service at West Point was included by the Treasury officials; but at one time a Comptroller of the Treasury came into office who cut that allowance out. Up to that period all the officers who had obtained longevity pay had it computed so as to include the four years they were at West Point, but during that comptroller's term of office claims for longevity pay to include the West Point period of service were rejected. That comptroller went out of office. Then I think there was an appeal taken to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court decided that as to longevity pay officers were entitled to an allowance for the four years they were at West Point. So, when the matter went back to the next comptroller he followed the decision of the Supreme Court and allowed longevity pay for the four years at West Point.

As the officers whose claims were rejected in the intermediate period had had their cases disposed of, they could not go into the Court of Claims. It requires legislation to enable them to do that and to put them on the same basis as are the other officers.

Most of these officers are old. The bill involves a comparatively small matter. It has passed the Senate once or twice before. The only difficulty has been in getting consideration of the bill in the other House, although it has been favorably reported in the House.

However, I rose to call the Senator's attention to the committee amendment.

I happen to know some of the lawyers who had these claims in charge, as I was the Senator who introduced the bill, and they have talked to me time and time again. This particular claim has been around Congress for 20 years, probably, and the attorneys have been diligent, and it seems to me that if we reduce their fee to 10 per cent of the amount they may recover, as the amounts are small, the claims only including an allowance for longevity pay in the case of each officer to cover the four years spent at West Point or Annapolis, we shall cut down considerably the compensation of these men who have earnestly urged their clients' cause. I have heard no desire expressed on the part of the clients not to pay them the 20 per cent which they agreed to pay them. I think there is an understanding that they shall be paid the 20 per cent, and I have never heard of any officer who is going to get relief under the bill object to it. If they were large claims, running into the thousands of dollars, a 20 per cent fee would be a large one; but, I repeat, the claims involved in this matter are small. If the Senator from Idaho, who kindly reported the bill, insists on the amendment, I have nothing more to say, but I think it should not be agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the amendment was put in by the committee at my suggestion; but, if there is no other member of the committee who feels differently about it, I have no objection, in view of the Senator's statement, to the amendment being rejected and a fee of 20 per cent being allowed. I understand that the claims relate to a limited period of four years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; four years is the governing factor. Most of the claims, I presume, run into the hundreds of dollars, but not into the thousands, and the fee will be small.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Alabama that the claims involved are small; certainly they can not be very large. The only question involved is whether in the matter of computing longevity pay service at West Point by a cadet should be counted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is all.

Mr. NELSON. I had something to do with the matter years ago, when I introduced a bill to cover the case of an individual officer at which time I looked into it, and my impression is that at first for a short time the claims were allowed by the Auditor for the War Department, but subsequently he ceased to allow them and quit paying the claims. In the meantime cases were brought, one in the Court of Claims and two in the Supreme Court of the United States, and both courts held that the claimants were entitled to have their service at West Point included in the computation of their longevity pay.

After those decisions similar claims were allowed; but the auditor's office held as to the claims which had been disallowed that they could not take them up again, and so the few officers affected were left in the cold. The bill is simply designed to cover those cases. The claims are not very many, and certainly can not be for very large amounts. For that reason I can see no objection to allowing a fee of 20 per cent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I understand that the attorneys in question have a contract with those whom they represent for 20 per cent, and that is the reason the bill was drawn in that way. As the claims are small, I do not think it is an excessive fee.

Mr. BORAH. I have no desire to urge the amendment, in view of the statement of the Senator from Alabama.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will again put the question on the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2051) to amend section 3142 of the Revised Statutes, to permit an increase in the number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and in the number of collectors of internal revenue from 64 to 74, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FISHING RIGHTS AT PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII.

The bill (H. R. 2499) to provide for the acquisition by the United States of private rights of fishery in and about Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to examine and appraise the value of the privately owned rights of fishery in Pearl Harbor, island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii, from an imaginary line from Kaak Point to Beckoning Point, both within said harbor, to the seaward, and the privately owned rights of fishery in and about the entrance channel to said harbor, and to enter into negotiations for the purchase of the said rights and, if in his judgment the price for such rights is reasonable and satisfactory, to make contracts for the purchase of same, subject to future ratification and appropriation by Congress; or in the event of the inability of the Secretary of the Navy to make a satisfactory contract for the voluntary purchase of the said rights of fishery, he is hereby authorized and directed through the Attorney General to institute and carry to completion proceedings for the condemnation of said rights of fishery, the acceptance of the award in said proceedings to be subject to the future ratification and appropriation by Congress. Such condemnation proceedings shall be instituted and conducted in, and jurisdiction of said proceedings is hereby given to, the district court of the United States for the district of Hawaii, substantially as provided in "An act to authorize condemnation of land for sites for public buildings, and for other purposes," approved August 1, 1888; and the sum of $5,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, to be immediately and continuously available until expended, to pay the necessary costs thereof and expenses in connection therewith. The Secretary of the Navy is further authorized and directed to report the proceedings hereunder to Congress.

Mr. KING. I should like to have some explanation of that measure.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I think there can be no possible objection to the consideration of that bill. The purpose of it is to extend authority to the Navy Department to exclude from the public dry dock, the naval dry dock, and other public works, the aliens who now have access to that property through the possession by certain natives of fishing rights which were granted to them under the Hawaiian law. The bill proposes to permit the naval authorities to purchase those rights at a fair valuation, and thereby exclude foreigners who now gain access to this public property. The desirability of such action, I think, is very apparent.

Mr. SMOOT. It relates only to the fishing rights in Pearl Harbor?

Mr. NEW. That is all; yes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAWAIIAN GAS AND ELECTRIC FRANCHISES.

The bill (S. 2062) granting a franchise for the purpose of manufacturing and supplying gas and electric current in the districts of Wailuku and Makawao, county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, one explanation will cover the purposes of the next succeeding six bills, beginning with S. 2062 and ending with S. 2067, inclusive. They are bills authorizing the granting of franchises to different electric light and power companies, except in the case of S. 2067, which is a bill extending the franchise of the street railway company of the city of Honolulu.

The bills have all been drawn by the Public Service Commission of Hawaii. They have the approval, of course, of that commission and of all the public authorities, including the outgoing governor, the governor designate, the Hawaiian Legislature, and all the public interests, so far as we know, in the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. OVERMAN. Have we not a Water Power Commission here in Washington where all these things could be taken up and passed upon by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. NEW. I will say that the law provides that these bills are to be finally passed upon by the Congress of the United States. They must be ratified by the United States Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the recommendation come from the Water Power Commission?

Mr. NEW. From the Public Service Commission in the Territory; not from any commission here.

Mr. OVERMAN. But it must come from the Water Power Commission of the United States, which passes upon all these powers, must it not?

Mr. NEW. I do not know that the Water Power Commission of the United States has acted upon the matter, but every public agency over there has approved these bills.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, are any water powers involved?

Mr. NEW. No water powers are involved.

Mr. KENYON Mr President, these bills could hardly be read, or perhaps just about read, during the balance of the morning hour. They seem to be tremendously important bills, some of them granting perpetual franchises to individuals. I am not opposing the bills. I should simply like to have time to look into them. Is there any particular reason why they should be immediately passed, or will a week make any difference?

Mr. NEW. I do not think it will.

Mr. KENYON. Then I am going to object to their consideration to-day.

Mr. NEW. The one which requires immediate attention has already passed.

Mr. KENYON. I do not object to the one about fishing rights.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills referred to will be passed over. The calendar is completed.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I gave notice during the morning hour, when the question was raised as to a motion to take up a bill being in order, that I was going to ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 1039, known as the maternity bill, should be made the unfinished business for Tuesday, June 28. I have some question, in reflecting upon it, whether that could be done, because of the fact that there might be another bill pending that was the unfinished business; but it could be made a special order, I explained the reasons for my action before, and I now move, under Rule X, that Senate bill 1039 be made a special order for Tuesday, June 28, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean by that request that if some other measure which has not been disposed of is before the Senate at that time, this would displace the pending measure?

Mr. KENYON. I make the motion under Rule X. Rule X provides that if there is unfinished business, it does not affect it. It would follow after it.

Mr. OVERMAN. It takes two-thirds to have the order made, as I understand.

Mr. KENYON. It takes two-thirds.

Mr. OVERMAN. We will have to have a quorum.

Mr. KENYON. No; we do not have to have a quorum. It must be two-thirds of those present and voting.

Mr. LODGE. This is only in the nature of a notice?

Mr. KENYON. No; it is a motion to make it a special order.

Mr. LODGE. Only for that day?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; it simply fixes that day. As I said before, a number of Senators are away who are interested in this bill. It has passed the Senate once. Some other Senators are to be away next week, including myself, and if we can fix it for that day it will accommodate everybody.

I ask unanimous consent to make the bill a special order for that time.

Mr. KING. The Senator does not expect that it will be passed that day?

Mr. KENYON. I hardly expect so. I hope, of course, that it will become the unfinished business. If it is not passed that day, I shall move to take it up day by day until it is passed, and I think it will be passed very soon after it is reached.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is the day that the Senator asks?

Mr. KENYON. Tuesday, June 28, at 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I simply wish to know what proposition is before the Senate. I understand that the Senator from Iowa is asking consent to bring up the maternity bill week after next.

Mr. KENYON. To make it a special order.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

THE MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Senator will have to move to take it up, as it is not 2 o'clock. There is no objection.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, if any Senator objected, I should move to take it up; but there is not any objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the Senator simply asked that it be laid before the Senate. He did not ask unanimous consent to have it laid before the Senate, but merely asked that it be laid before the Senate. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to take up the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING obtained the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that three or four Senators who are out of the Chamber at this time asked me to make the point of no quorum when this bill came up. I will ask the Senator from South Dakota to yield in order that I may make that point, so that they will be here to hear whatever the Senator has to say.

Mr. STERLING. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names.

Ashurst	Gerry	Lodge	Simmons
Borah	Glass	McCormick	Smith
Brandegee	Gooding	McCumber	Smoot
Broussard	Harreld	McLean	Spencer
Bursum	Harris	McNary	Stanley
Cameron	Heflin	Myers	Sterling

Caraway	Johnson	New	Trammell
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Underwood
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Wadsworth
Dial	Kendrick	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Kenyon	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	Keyes	Owen	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	King	Phipps	Watson, Ind.
Fernald	Knox	Poindexter	Williams
Fletcher	La Follette.	Sheppard
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Shortridge

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURSUM in the chair). Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, from the beginning of the discussion of the question of regulating the packing interests I have firmly believed that the Federal Trade Commission should be the regulating body. I fail to see any just reason why any other instrumentality should be provided for the regulation and control of the packers than the Federal Trade Commission, and to that end, Mr. President, at the last session of Congress, when the live stock commission bill was under consideration, I offered a substitute substantially the same as the substitute now pending before the Senate. That substitute, I am glad to say, received a very good vote, but it did not prevail. I urge the Federal Trade Commission as the commission to handle this business and this question, both on the score of economy and on the score of efficiency. We already have the commission, with all the equipment and all the facilities necessary for the investigations contemplated under the terms of the act.

If the House bill should prevail and the Secretary of Agriculture be designated as the officer to administer this law, what will it mean? It will mean eventually the building up in the Agricultural Department of a great bureau equipped for the purpose of investigating the packers and bringing proceedings for violations of the law and of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that, Mr. President, will mean a great and additional expense to the Government at this particular time, when we are demanding retrenchment and economy in the public service.

Mr. President, that is one thing. Another is the matter of efficiency. I want to say in passing to Senators that prejudice against the personnel of the Federal Trade Commission should not influence a vote, for it is permanent legislation we are enacting, and the personnel of the Federal Trade Commission will not always remain the same; it can not.

Then I think we have a right to rely upon this, too, as something that will govern the conduct and the investigations of the Federal Trade Commission as at present constituted; they have had vast experience, and they can not but have learned wisdom through that experience.

I call attention briefly, Mr. President, to some of the things they have done. They have made investigations, and from those investigations have come their six reports on practically every phase of the meat-packing industry, which reports have been printed and published. Altogether, including those reports, and including their annual reports, they have published about 60 reports of one kind or another, on the various industries and businesses of the country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. STERLING. I yield just for a moment, because, of course, my time is very much limited.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just want to ask the Senator a question, for information. I saw in the paper this morning that the only difference between the Senator's substitute and the Senate committee bill was that his substitute gave jurisdiction to the Federal Trade Commission, whereas under the Senate committee amendment jurisdiction was given to a commissioner. Is that the only difference between the two?

Mr. STERLING. I will not say that is the only difference, but aside from the provision in my substitute designating the Federal Trade Commission as the body to administer the law, the committee amendment, called the Senate bill, and my substitute are essentially the same.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The only difference, then, which would appeal to a legislator as essential is this question of jurisdiction?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. STERLING. I yield just for a question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask the Senator to yield until I prefer a request for unanimous consent, that the Senator from South Dakota be accorded 20 minutes in which to explain the features of his substitute.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that 20 minutes be given to the Senator from South Dakota in which to explain his substitute.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I doubt if that can be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We can do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. STERLING. Continuing the comparison of my substitute with the Senate committee amendment, I will say that the prohibitions and restrictions provided for in section 12 of the committee amendment are the same as are provided for in my substitute, with the exception of the last prohibition or restriction, designated as (g), which I omitted from my substitute, deeming it a repetition of the propositions involved in the other subdivisions of section 12.

Mr. President, there is just this one further question to which I want to allude: Do we want to clothe the Secretary of Agriculture with this great power, in addition to his other responsibilities and duties as Secretary of that great department of the Government? This is not an agricultural but a trade proposition; and should be under the regulation and control of the Federal Trade Commission.

So, Mr. President, I see no reason why we should not provide that the Federal Trade Commission should be the body to administer the law, and when we come to consider the facilities and equipment of that commission, the record made by it in its various reports, the fact that it has instituted proceedings, which are now or were lately pending against every one of the five great packers, it seems to me that the consideration of any other instrumentality for the administration is an attempt to show how not to do it, rather than how to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I know I venture somewhat when I make the assertion that I am quite sure that the Senator from South Dakota is not the sole author of this substitute, for if he were he never would have put in the paragraphs which are found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the bottom of the first column on page 2681. Let us see for just a moment what they contain.

Mr. NORRIS. What section is that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Section 9, subdivision (c), commencing, "It shall be the duty of the commission"—that is, the Federal Trade Commission. Now look at the second paragraph, defining the duties of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. STERLING. What section is it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Section 9. I only have it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It says it shall be the duty of the Federal Trade Commission to—

> Furnish to operators reports embodying existing knowledge concerning satisfactory and economical appliances and methods of food preservation by cold storage, freezing, cooking, dehydration, or otherwise.

And so forth. What is an "operator" under this bill? An operator is a commission man, a trader, or an owner of a stockyard. Why should the Federal Trade Commission be compelled to furnish to a commission man in the stockyards information concerning the freezing of food products? He has no interest in them whatsoever. He does not deal in them. Neither does a stockyard deal in them. Neither does a trader.

I do not know who draws these bills. Whoever draws them knows nothing about the business of stockyards and the handling of live stock. The thing is absurd upon its face.

Now let us see the next paragraph.

It shall be the duty of the commission to—

> As far as practicable, when requested by any such operator, provide for the inspection by agents of the commission of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs received or distributed by such operator to determine the quality, quantity, or condition thereof, and for the issuance by such agents of certificates showing the results of such inspection—

a matter with which operators have no connection whatsoever. I can not understand how things like this get into the bill. Who drafts them? Surely, the Senator from South Dakota is not the author of that language.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from New York has seen that language before, has he not, in other bills?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Never have I seen that language—that an operator is regarded as a person who must receive information from the Government about the dehydration of food products. An operator or a commission man is nothing but a stockyards company buying and selling on commission in the yards,

Mr. NORRIS. Or a trader.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Or a trader. I imagine that the authors of the proposed amendment—and I do not include the Senator from South Dakota in that, because he could not have done it—must have meant that the Federal Trade Commission should give this information to packers. That is what must have been meant. See, if that is done, what would happen. It would be provided that packers shall have furnished them information, and that packers, upon the request of themselves, under this provision, shall be inspected in their packing plants as to the quality and sanitary condition of the plants.

That very thing is already being done by the meat-inspection service of the Department of Agriculture, and the Federal Government is appropriating $3,000,000 a year to carry it out. The meat-inspection service of the Department of Agriculture is doing that.

If the term "operator" was meant to include a packer, in this proposed substitute, then you run into the proposition that you are duplicating work which the Government to-day is doing.

Mr. FERNALD. Will the Senator from New York yield for a question, in my time?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. FERNALD. Does the Senator know how many inspectors and how many Government agencies now inspect meat from the time it is received at the slaughter house until it is put on the table at a hotel?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; Mr. President, I do not; but I know that the yards themselves are full of inspectors who are examining the animals, as to their condition and their health, before they are slaughtered, and that every concern in the United States which processes meats of any kind which go into interstate commerce has inspectors permanently stationed in the plants, inspecting every atom of meat that goes through.

Mr. FERNALD. There are 17 different Government agencies now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am surprised that there are so few.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from South Dakota a question, and if he wishes to do so he may use the remainder of my time to answer it or in discussing the bill.

The first question is, Does not the law give to the Secretary of Agriculture power to call upon the Federal Trade Commission at any time to make an investigation of any sort that it wants made into these matters?

Mr. STERLING. Does not the law now provide that?

Mr. HARRELD. That is my question.

Mr. STERLING. The law provides that the Federal Trade Commission may investigate any case where unfair competition in trade is charged.

Mr. HARRELD. Of its own volition or on complaint?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; either on its own volition or on complaint.

Mr. HARRELD. If the House bill is passed, throwing this matter into the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, would he not have the assistance and the cooperation of the very commission that the Senator is talking about in carrying out the terms of the bill?

Mr. STERLING. He might and he might not have the assistance of the Federal Trade Commission to carry it out. If it was purely a case of unfair competition, and that is embraced in the prohibition and restrictions provided for here against the packing industry, then the Federal Trade Commission might be called in possibly; but aside from that and unless it was clearly a case of that kind, I do not think the Federal Trade Commission under the provisions of the House text would have anything to do with it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the substitute ought to be amended by striking out paragraph (c) on page 8 down to and including line 13 on page 9. That provides for a very useful lot of information that might be beneficial, and if we had time to work it out and provide that they should make those reports to somebody else I should not have any objection to it; but certainly the Senator from South Dakota does not mean that the Federal Trade Commission shall do what is outlined in that language. I hope he will move to strike it out.

Mr. STERLING. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska submit an amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. I move, on page 8 of the substitute, commencing with line 13, to strike out down to and including line 13 on page 9.

Mr. STERLING. Allow me to suggest to the Senator that he do not make the amendment quite so comprehensive as that. Is there any advantage in taking out subdivision (1) under section (c), which reads as follows:

> Prepare standardized plans and specifications for grounds, buildings, and other facilities.

And so forth?

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that. I do not wish to do anything in the way of proposing an amendment that is objectionable.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, has the Senator from Nebraska the floor?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not taken the floor on this amendment. As soon as it is stated, I wish to make a few remarks. I will modify my amendment by moving to strike out, commencing with line 20, on page 8, down to and including line 13, on page 9.

Mr. STERLING. So far as I can, I consent to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska offers the following amendment, which will be stated:

The READING CLERK. Strike out lines 20 to 25 on page 8 and lines 1 to 13, inclusive, on page 9, reading as follows:

> (2) Furnish to operators reports embodying existing knowledge concerning satisfactory and economical appliances and methods of food preservation by cold storage, freezing, cooking, dehydration, or otherwise, and of all improvements in the art, and to detail persons experienced in such art to consult and advise with operators.
> (3) As far as practicable, when requested by any such operator, provide for the inspection by agents of the commission of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs received or distributed by such operator to determine the quality, quantity, or condition thereof, and for the issuance by such agents of certificates showing the results of such inspection; and in the conduct of such inspections to cooperate with duly authorized local authorities. Such certificates shall be accepted in the courts of the United States and of the States as prima facie evidence of the quality, quantity, or condition at the time and place of inspection of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs covered thereby.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I had noticed the defect in the bill this morning, and underscored the definition of the term "operator" on page 2; but the difficulty alluded to by the Senator from New York still would exist, I think, in paragraph (1) of the provision which is substituted here. As it is proposed to leave it on page 8, it would read:

It shall be the duty of the commission to—
(1) Prepare standardized plans and specifications for grounds, buildings, and other facilities suitable for the business conducted or to be conducted by operators.

And so forth.

But on page 2 where the term "operator" is defined, it is defined in this way:

The term "operator" means any person engaged in the business of conducting or operating a stockyard in which live stock is handled in commerce, and any trader or commission man or other person performing services wholly or partly in commerce with respect to live stock handled in or in connection with a stockyard.

The trouble is that the definition of an operator has vanished from the mind of the Senator who prepared the rest of the bill, and when he gets along in the bill he regards an operator as simply the manager or owner of a stockyard, whereas he is defined to be possibly a trader or commission man, and it results in confusion all the way through the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the first paragraph is left in as now suggested by the Senator from South Dakota, it will be the duty of the Federal Trade Commission to furnish plans and specifications for the offices in which a commission man does his business. A live-stock exchange building shall be designed by the Federal Trade Commission. Any group of men who wish to form a live-stock exchange or a new stockyard and put up a building will have architectural services free of charge.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska, the chairman of the committee, a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. Did I understand the Senator from Nebraska a moment ago to offer as an amendment to the pending bill to strike out of the section to which the Senator from New York has just referred, beginning with line 13 and down to and including line 25, on page 8? Is that the Senator's proposed amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment I offered is to strike out commencing with line 20 on page 8 and ending with line 13 on page 9.

Mr. SMITH. I misunderstood the Senator. I thought that he had proposed an amendment to strike out beginning with line 13 on page 8.

Mr. NORRIS. I did propose at first to amend by striking out beginning with line 13 on page 8, but at the request of the Senator from South Dakota, who I supposed had agreed to the amendment, I modified it.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator a further question? This is a matter that affects the live-stock region, and those who are more or less directly affected by such legislation should as a matter of course prepare the legislation and inform the Senate about it. However, I should like to have some one explain the objection raised by the Senator from New York, and why it would be necessary for the commission to become architects or to prepare plans or to provide the architects to prepare plans. I should like to have an explanation of why that is necessary in the bill. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORRIS. I beg the Senator's pardon; my attention was diverted at the moment.

Mr. SMITH. I will not disturb the Senator from Nebraska. I will ask the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] why it is necessary to provide in the bill at this time that it shall be the duty of the Federal Trade Commission to prepare plans for the buildings where these people shall perform the functions of a stockyard business and a slaughtering business?

Mr. STERLING. I would rather say that the commission would know conditions in regard to sanitation and what would be sanitary buildings, and so forth, for a business of this kind. They would make a study of the question, and would be able to inform the operators as to the best kind of buildings to be used, and how they should be constructed.

I do not know that this is compulsory. That is not my construction of it. They only furnish such information when the operator gives assurance of undertaking the construction and operation of certain buildings and facilities, so it is optional with the operator, after all, whether or not he shall have that instruction, but he can get it if he gives assurance that he will construct buildings of the kind suggested by the commission.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not care to enter into the discussion, because I have not made any very particular study of the conditions involved. I listened to the testimony that was given before the committee when the bill was before it a year ago, as to the fact that the packing houses do perhaps have virtually a monopoly of the meat-packing business. But when it comes down to a detail such as this, that the commission is to be empowered to draw plans and specifications for the architectural construction and also plans by which the stock may be quartered in the yards, and so forth, I rather think that if they perform their duties as otherwise laid down for them in the bill, they will be doing about all they should be expected to do. Certainly I do not think that this adds anything to the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to make a few remarks on the pending amendment that I have offered. I wish to say first, in answer to the Senator from South Carolina, that if I were offering the substitute I would not include anything that is in section (c) unless it was agreeable. I have not any objection whatever myself to having that in the bill. It is not necessary, however. It would probably be less objectionable to Senators if the Senator from South Dakota would leave it out, and my original motion to amend included striking it out. I suppose the theory is that when these men perform their duties under the bill, after several years of service they will become familiar with and expert on the conditions involved, and they will be useful in the planning of stockyards, and so forth, and that therefore they should furnish plans and specifications to any stockyard or to any body of men who were going to construct one, so as to make it modern in every respect.

But there is a good deal in what the Senator from South Carolina said. It is not a part of their duty. If I were the Senator from South Dakota, I would eliminate all of that language. It is not material, and it will do away with some of the objections that are made here. Personally I do not think the first paragraph under section (c) harms anything. As I said, I would not have any objection to it, and I would not have any objection to some of the others, as there might be some good come out of them; but in order to avoid any controversy, since it is not material to his amendment, I would suggest to the Senator from South Dakota to strike it all out.

Mr. STERLING. I think I would agree to that, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to his amendment now and what it includes. I agreed to the striking out of subdivision (1) under section (c). I also agreed or attempted to agree to striking out subdivisions (2) and (3). In regard to subdivision (2) there is no question, but there is a question as to whether the whole of subdivision (3) ought to go out, beginning at the bottom of page 8. That reads as follows:

(3) As far as practicable, when requested by any such operator, provide for the inspection by agents of the commission of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs received or distributed by such operator to determine the quality, quantity, or condition thereof, and for the issuance by such agents of certificates showing the results of such inspection, and in the conduct of such inspections to cooperate with duly authorized local authorities. Such certificates shall be accepted in the courts of the United States and of the States as prima facie evidence of the quality, quantity, or condition at the time and place of inspection of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs covered thereby.

I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that there are certain words that ought to come out of that paragraph. For example, in line 25, at the bottom of page 8, the words "live-stock products or perishable foodstuffs" ought to come out, because they are not an incident of the stockyard business. Those words ought to go out. In line 9——

Mr. NORRIS. What page?

Mr. STERLING. Page 9. The same words ought to come out in line 9, page 9, "live-stock products or perishable foodstuffs."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I will withdraw my amendment to permit the Senator from South Dakota to offer such amendment as he wishes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska withdraws his amendment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, on page 8 of my amendment, I move to strike out paragraphs 1 and 2 of subdivision (c). I also move to strike out the words "live-stock products or perishable foodstuffs" contained in lines 3 and 4, on page 9; and also to strike out the words "live-stock products or perishable foodstuffs," in line 12, on page 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota submits an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 8, it is proposed to strike out from line 14 to line 25, both inclusive; on page 9, in lines 3 and 4, to strike out the words "live-stock products or perishable foodstuffs"; and also to make the same amendment in line 12, on page 9.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, there has been no question before the Senate which has given me more trouble and more anxiety than the question now pending. I have made no secret of that; I make none now. It is a great question. It is a question that has two sides to it, as have all other questions, and I have been in great doubt which was the right side; but, after weighing both sides and hearing the considerations which have been advanced for and against the measure, I have reached a decision, and by that decision I shall stand.

Mr. President, there has never been a time when a monopoly was not a crime and monopolists criminals. The old common law of England made them criminals. There never was a time when forestalling, regrating, and engrossing were not crimes, and laid down as such by the common law of England. The common law of England, as all lawyers know—so far as it applies to our country—is our common law.

Mr. President, the time has come when Uncle Sam has got to say to such combinations of capital as the packers, "I am going to determine whether you are bigger than I." These combinations defy the Government; they oppress and rob the people. In time of war they have done more slaughter in the ranks of our soldiers than enemy bullets have done. They did so in the Spanish-American War, where tainted meat and embalmed beef killed off our soldiers faster than did the bullets of the Spanish guns. They did it in the recent war. There is not an ex-service man who, in telling you of his experiences in Europe, does not inveigh against the kind of food that he got from the can, whether it were meat or soup or something similar—messes that were not fit for a dog.

These combinations are threatening the life of the Republic. They rob the rich, who can stand it; they rob the poor, who can not stand it. They rob the black as well as the white, the city as well as the farm. There is not a trade or a profession upon which these men do not levy an imperial tribute and compel payment. You can not live without a license from these combinations. They stand at the headwaters of life in this Republic and measure out to everyone, at their own price, the wherewith which sustains his life. They are almost in possession of the tree of life in this Republic, and they put the price on the fruit by which we live.

We are told that if we establish this control over the packing plants the next step will be the control of the coal plants. Well, when it comes let it come. If those combinations draw upon themselves the necessity for the Government to act in self-defense and on behalf of the oppressed people, we shall control them; we shall make them obey the law.

What is the use of enforcing the law against the petty thief, the gambler, the violator of the Volstead Act, and letting these high-handed criminals go unscathed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, when a bill similar to the one now pending was before the Senate in the month of January, 1921, I voted against it for three reasons: First, that the exclusively stock-raising contingent in my own State opposed it, while those engaged in cereal raising and the ultimate consumers generally seemed to favor it; secondly, because of my very natural aversion to the Government operating any kind of business; and thirdly, because I believed that the Federal Trade Commission had every power, if properly exercised, that was necessary to bring about any relief that was demanded.

Since that time some of the more paternalistic corners have been clipped off these bills; there have been some changes made in them; but I still feel that in the passage of such legislation we shall be taking a long step—and a little longer one than I should like to take—into the paternalistic field.

The objection that came to me from the western portion of my State was in these words:

> We, the undersigned stockmen, members of the North Dakota Stock Growers' Association of Western North Dakota, respectfully petition that you use your influence in opposition to this bill, as we consider said bill detrimental to the best interests of the live-stock raisers throughout the United States.

They then set forth the paternalistic features of the bill, which they themselves considered rather dangerous, and I certainly share with them their fear of "too much Government in business."

Government control and operation of the railroads for a few months only resulted in bankrupting every railway in the United States, notwithstanding the undreamed-of increase in the cost of transportation. Government interference in the operation of coal mines enormously enhanced the cost of fuel to the people of the United States, and Government building and operation of ships has proven to be one of the most colossal failures, financial and otherwise, that the world has ever witnessed. I know of nothing that the Government has attempted to do that it has not done in a most flagrant, expensive, and ineffective way.

I do not believe in any big business running itself just as it sees fit to run itself; I believe in proper control; I believe in laws directed against the particular thing which is wrong, and then that such laws should be rigidly enforced. I am not one of those who believes that we have reached a stage in which it is necessary to have a bureau to look into every line of business and to assist in its operation to see that no crime is committed. But I have no objection, if deemed necessary, that a bureau be created to keep watch upon and see that the laws are enforced; but I do always balk at the actual management of any business by any governmental agency.

But, Mr. President, I observe that the stock-raising industry generally is in favor of this bill; that the farmers are generally in favor of it. I do not believe that there is much contained in the bill over and above the authority that has heretofore been given to the Federal Trade Commission; I feel that it is duplicating much of the authority of that commission, and, in addition to that, the action of the Senate itself in continuing all the powers of the Federal Trade Commission makes certain this duplication of many of the things that are to be done; but I do not anticipate any great danger that will result from the operation of this bill to the interests of the stock raisers in my State, and I think that I shall vote for it, with the hope that some of the anticipated benefits may be realized. The fact that it receives the earnest support of all the Senators representing the stock-raising industry relieves me from some of the fears which seem to be in the minds of a number of the stock raisers of the western part of my State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to move another amendment. On page 7, lines 19 and 20, I move to strike out the words "live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs." This provision relates to operators, and if those words are stricken out elsewhere in the bill, they should be stricken out here.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I inquire what became of the other amendments offered by the Senator from South Dakota?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They were modifications of the Senator's former amendment?

Mr. STERLING. This is not a modification of the former amendment. It was my understanding that the former amendments had been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; they have not been agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let us have one at a time.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that he has a right, has he not, to modify his own amendment?

Mr. STERLING. I thought that the other amendments to the amendment had been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have not.

Mr. STERLING. Then, I ask that a vote be taken upon those amendments to the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that it is not necessary for him to ask that a vote be taken upon any changes which he wishes to make in the amendment which he has proposed. He has the right under the rules and the practice of the Senate to perfect his amendment and to change it before the vote is taken upon it according to his liking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That right was accorded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is a continuing right until there is a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. The point that I make is that we have to dispose of amendments, so that we may know what is disposed of and what is not, as we go along.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modifications of the amendment will be read.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let us have one at a time.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] moves to modify his amendment, on page 7, lines 19 and 20, after the word "live stock," by striking out the comma and the words "live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs"; on page 8, to strike out from line 14 to line 25, inclusive; on page 9, lines 3 and 4, after the word "stock," to strike out the comma and the words "live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs"; and to make the same modification in line 12, on page 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota will be so modified. The amendment as modified is before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to say just a few words about this amendment.

As the Senator has modified the amendment, I think it is a very great improvement over the House bill; and Senators must remember that when the vote is taken on this substitute it is a vote between the House bill and the substitute offered by the Senator.

The question was asked of the Senator a while ago whether the other bill, in substance, meaning the House bill, for which this is offered as a substitute, retained in it the power of the Federal Trade Commission. I called attention yesterday to the fact that the House bill practically wipes the Federal Trade Commission off the face of the earth.

It goes a good deal further than the language itself would indicate. It takes away from the Federal Trade Commission the power to investigate live stock, live-stock products, or anything that would come within the definition of the House bill, and the authority to regulate is given to the Secretary of Agriculture. This substitute gives to the Federal Trade Commission the supervisory authority of the act itself.

Personally, three years ago, when I started out upon the study of the packer question, I started out on the theory that the Federal Trade Commission was the one commission, without creating a new one, that was properly equipped for the purpose of doing the work provided for by any bill that might undertake to regulate the packing business, without going further, in my judgment, than any of the bills that have been introduced have gone. Now, the substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota does that. I modified my views by contact with other members of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and brought in the bill that was defeated yesterday when we offered it as a substitute for the House bill. If I were drafting this bill, there are some things the Senator does not have in it that I would put in. It seems to me that it does not go quite as far in some respects as it ought to, but, in my judgment, it is a thousand times better than the House bill.

Yesterday, when I offered an amendment applying to the Senate bill by which I retained the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, objection was made that it made an overlapping of authority, and I admitted that it did, although I think I made a sufficient explanation of it, but that was one objection to it. That objection can not be made to this substitute. There is no overlapping of authority anywhere. The authority to administer the law is turned over to the Federal Trade Commission.

In my judgment, the Federal Trade Commission has shown its ability to do work of this kind better than any other bureau or commission that the Government has ever had; and I anticipate that if this amendment shall prevail, and this bill shall be substituted for the House bill, it will be a great improvement. In fact, in my judgment it will make a success of what is bound to be a failure if the House bill stands in its present form.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the general features of this bill, but I do not like to have go unchallenged the statement made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] that the Government operation of the railroads has resulted in wrecking the railroads of this country.

We are in the midst of an investigation of that situation now; and I, as a member of that committee, propose to insist that before this investigation shall have ceased we shall have all the facts that have led up to the present alleged condition of the railroads and shall know beyond a doubt where the responsibility for their condition lies.

It is hardly competent for any man at this time to say what force or combination of forces has resulted in the alleged disastrous condition that the railroads claim themselves to be in. When we shall have thoroughly and honestly investigated this matter and found just where the difficulty is, we shall have the courage to state where it is and what or who is responsible.

The Senator also calls attention to the fact, as he alleges, that our entrance into the shipping business has been disastrous. It was notorious before we made this attempt that we had no merchant marine. There were vast resources of this country that were absolutely throttled because of the fact that we had no facilities for transoceanic transportation; and the amount of money that we are expending now in order to get that business started is evidence of the fact that we are all entirely ignorant of the processes by which a practical and economical system of merchant marine may be run. Every man knows that at the beginning of a business the overhead charges are tremendous, but once the business is going we can recoup; and I for one shall stand as long as I am a Member of this body and fight for the development of an American merchant marine. I expect it to cost money. I expect it to lose money in the initial period of its installation, and for that reason I am willing to spend that money rather than give over the entire transportation of this country to a notorious monopoly that succeeded in driving every American ship from the sea. If it becomes necessary for the Government to give the people relief because they can not get relief on account of the monopolistic tendency that seems to be rampant, I shall be one to vote that the Government shall at least demonstrate that a merchant marine is a feasible and practical thing.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I spoke a moment ago upon the merits of the bill. I wish to direct my few remarks now to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

I shall spend no time in answering the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. The Government operated the railroads. The Government went into the business of shipbuilding and ship operation. The facts will speak for themselves. I do not care where the fault lies. Every American knows what the condition is.

Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] one other amendment, and that is that he strike out every part of his substitute bill with the exception of that which places in the Federal Trade Commission the authority to conduct the operations under this measure. I agree with him that that is where it belongs. I would vote for his amendment if it simply transferred all of the powers which are transferred here, first to a bureau, and then by another amendment to the Secretary of Agriculture, simply to the Federal Trade Commission. We would then avoid the duplications; but after having voted to substitute the House measure I can not vote now to substitute again the Senate proposition because it carries with it the proposition that the authority exercised under the bill shall be under the auspices of the Federal Trade Commission. I think that is where it belongs; and we ought simply to stop there, and let the Senate make the kind of a bill that it wants to make, and let the Federal Trade Commission enforce it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I may say that when the Senator from North Dakota voted for the House bill he had but one other bill to compare with the House bill, and that was the Senate bill. The comparison to-day is between the House bill and the proposed substitute; and I do not think the Senator is under any obligation to support the House bill because he supported it yesterday, when the measure now under consideration was not before the Senate.

I realize the force of the Senator's suggestion that we simply clothe the Federal Trade Commission with the power that we would give the Secretary of Agriculture under the House bill; but, Mr. President, I think there should be some restrictions and some regulations, and substantially those that are provided for in this bill. I believe in them. I believe they are reasonable restrictions, and as we come to read each one of them I think they prohibit the doing of those things which should not be done by the packing industry.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the proposed substitute.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I wish to suggest a couple of further amendments.

On page 5, after the word "of," in line 4, insert a comma. As it reads now, it is:

In the acquisition of buying, selling, or dealing in live stock.

The meaning is:

In the acquisition of, buying, selling, or dealing in live stock.

I ask to have a comma inserted after the word "of."

Then, on the same page, in line 18, strike out the word "packer" and insert the word "person." This is an amendment that was made to one or the other of the two bills yesterday—I think the Senate bill—on motion of the Senator from Wisconsin. The provision is:

(e) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other packer to engage in any course of business.

Of course, the word "person" would include any other packer, whereas the word "packer" would not include any other person with whom a combination might be made in violation of the law. Are these amendments agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has a right to modify his own amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota has just proposed to make the language in one portion of this bill comply with the language agreed upon by the Senate yesterday. I have two such amendments to offer to it.

On page 3, line 18, after the word "or," I move to insert the words "by-products of the live-stock industry." That complies with the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] upon yesterday to the print of the Senate bill after the Senate had refused to reconsider the vote upon the amendment relating to the definition of the term "live-stock products." I assume, of course, that the Senator from South Dakota will not object to perfecting this bill so that it shall comply with the action of the Senate yesterday.

Mr. SMITH. Where would the Senator's amendment come in?

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 3, line 18, after the word "or," insert the words "by-products of the live-stock industry." I am merely retracing the steps taken yesterday, tracing the same path.

Mr. FLETCHER. Would that be followed by a comma, then, or should it read "or distribution of live stock or by-products of the live-stock industry or live-stock products"?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The word "or" should come after "industry," so as to read "or live-stock products."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota will be agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, again, to make the bill comply with the action of the Senate on yesterday upon two votes taken by the Senate, I offer the following amendment: On page 2, line 11, strike out the words "and owned or controlled by a packer" and insert the words "and used for food."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, we do not want to have that amendment adopted without objection. I should like to have a vote on that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from New York suggests to the Senator from South Dakota that he assumes he does not want to do anything different from what we did yesterday with the Senate committee bill; but the Senator from South Dakota, in answer to the Senator from North Dakota, has already said that when we voted yesterday between the House text and the Senate committee amendment it was a different proposition from that which we are voting on now. If the suggestion of the Senator from New York is carried out, then the Senator from South Dakota will have to change his whole amendment and offer the amendment the Senate voted down yesterday. So that he does not want to perfect his amendment, I take it, according to the action of the Senate yesterday.

Although the amendment offered by the Senator from New York is the one which was adopted yesterday by the Senate, I can not help but believe that Senators did not realize the extent to which the amendment went in destroying the usefulness of the law. It takes out of the bill the language, in defining live-stock products, "owned or controlled by a packer," and inserts in lieu thereof, "and used for food." It eliminates from this law hides, oleomargarine, glue——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oleomargarine is used for food.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going on the theory that it is not fit for food; but the Senator may use it. I will take that back. It eliminates clothing, stockings, shoes, and underclothing. It eliminates fertilizer. It eliminates all sorts of medicines, I presume, which were not considered good for food, which come out of the by-products of the packing business. It eliminates millions and millions of business, and turns it loose without any regulation. I call the Senator's attention to the fact now that in this bill the overlapping of the authority of one bureau by another can not be urged, because the Federal Trade Commission handles it all, and you would prevent them from making an investigation under this bill of any of the by-products of the packers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Could they not do it under existing law?

Mr. NORRIS. If that be true, if they could do it under the existing law, then it can not hurt them if it is left in this bill. If that be true, that they can do it anyway, there will be no harm in leaving it here. Of course, the provisions of this bill go somewhat further than the Federal Trade Commission act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Infinitely so.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think infinitely further, but they go further. Suppose the Senator's theory is true, that under some other law they could investigate these packers, while under this law they could only investigate part of the packers; but under the other law, according to the Senator's own statement, they could not go as far, and the result would be that when they would investigate by-products that could not be used for food they would have to stop at a certain point before they got through.

I appeal to Senators; you may be against this bill, you may not want any investigation, you may not want anything done with these packers, or with any business that is allied with them, but you must admit that if you do want it done, you want it done right, and it would be perfectly foolish, it seems to me, to give the Federal Trade Commission, even on the Senator's own statement, authority to investigate part of these products clear through to the end, and authority for other products only part way, or authority for part of the products under one law, going in this direction, and authority to investigate the by-products which are in use for food going in the other direction. So we ought to vote it down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that a letter which I referred to in the debate upon this bill yesterday be printed in full in the RECORD. This letter is signed by the legislative representatives of every important farm and labor organization in the United States. It was addressed to Chairman HAUGEN of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the House of Representatives, and was presented to the committee by the signers, who were authorized to appear before that committee.

There being no objection, the letter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25, 1921.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, as authorized representatives of national organizations of farmers, of consumers, and of labor, have carefully examined the provisions of the Haugen bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate the interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, packing-house products, dairy products, etc., and we urgently protest that this bill in its present form is inadequate and needs important revision before it can command our confidence or support.

While we are in full sympathy with the object of the bill and recognize the earnest efforts that have been put into it by the committee, it as now reported falls seriously short of obtaining its objects for the reasons here set forth:

1. The most crying need of the live-stock producers and of the consumers of meats and other live-stock products is for authoritative current public information, made possible through the medium of uniform accounting systems on the industry, on the state of the markets, on the costs and profits of the packers, and other agencies operating between the producer and the consumer. We believe that unless information of this character is specifically provided for it will be impossible to secure that state of public confidence that is so sorely needed in this industry. This the Haugen bill does not do in its present form.

2. The bill inadvertently, we believe, but yet surely takes the packers out from under the Sherman law and the antitrust acts, while leaving other industries still under the penalties of those laws. The packer legislation considered by the recent and present committees of Congress is in the nature of supervision of the industry. It is frankly directed at some degree of administrative oversight of the business of the large packers, and it primarily relies on the supervision of these organizations rather than on the Sherman law. Nevertheless it would be a sorry outcome of the investigation and of the consent decree to relieve these five great packing companies from the Sherman law. The new legislation, until its operation has been successfully tried out, should not be left to stand alone. The antitrust act should be retained in the background unimpaired. The Haugen bill appears to preserve the antitrust laws, but its phrasing is so defective as to really destroy those laws as far as the packers are concerned.

Certain practices, conspiracies, agreements, etc., are made unlawful for packers by the Haugen bill and other practices are made unlawful by other bills. We believe that these enumerated practices in the different bills should be carefully correlated, the best provisions selected, and all of them tested as to the criterion of proof required, remembering that proof of intent is difficult. This makes it all the more necessary not to abandon the Sherman law until it is found how the courts will function on these new provisions.

3. The Federal Trade Commission performed the signal service to the country, to producers and consumers, and to the packing industry itself in its investigation of the packers; and all of the organizations we represent have again and again indorsed the public service rendered by the commission and expressed their confidence in it. We therefore emphatically object to any curtailment or limitation of the powers of that body.

Whatever agency is provided for administrating the proper legislation, we insist that the Federal Trade Commission and the Federal Trade Commission act be retained unimpaired and ready for service at the call of the President or either House of Congress, should the emergency arise. Like the Sherman law it should stand in the background as a bulwark until the new machinery has been tested and its efficiency and adequacy proven. If the bill is carefully drawn, this does not necessitate any duplication of effort or useless governmental expenditures.

4. The Haugen bill does not measure up to the needs of the times in that it does not provide for any constructive improvement in the system of marketing live stock and meat-food products. Our system of marketing of commodities in general does not stand the test of efficiency and low cost. Whatever the efficiency of the meat packers, there is great need of improvement in lessening the outrageous spread in price between what the farmer receives for his stock and what the products cost at the consumers' table. We therefore urge two forward-looking and constructive steps: (a) Adequate provision in the bill for farmers' cooperative live-stock commission firms operating in the stockyards under governmental supervision; (b) voluntary registration of stockyards, abattoirs, and warehouses, to secure all possible improvement in the marketing, slaughtering, processing, and storage systems by means of nonfinancial aid on the self-help principle.

These are our principal reasons for asking that your committee give further consideration to the bill before pressing for its consideration on the floor of the House or its passage in its present form. We believe that the packers can not reasonably object to the provisions we have above urged, and that those provisions are necessary to make the legislation effective or worth passing.

Respectfully submitted.

Hon. GILBERT N. HAUGEN,
Chairman House Committee on Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, we are considering legislation in the interest of agriculture, of live-stock growers, and of the consumers of this country.

The letter which I have here, signed by representatives of live-stock associations and all the farm associations and all of the labor and consumer organizations of the country, protests against the Haugen bill in the exact form in which it passed the House. That bill is now before the Senate. This letter was dated on May 25, the bill was then pending in the House, had already been reported from the committee, and was passed by the House unamended as reported from the committee. So that every word of criticism in this letter from the representatives of this great body of people in whose interest, very largely, this legislation is supposed to be enacted, is in protest against the pending bill.

I had an opportunity to read only one paragraph from the letter yesterday, and I want to read further from the letter at this time. I read from the letter:

> The most crying need of the live-stock producers and of the consumers of meats and other live-stock products is for authoritative current public information, made possible through the medium of uniform accounting systems, on the industry, on the state of the markets, on the costs and profits of the packers and other agencies operating between the producer and the consumer. We believe that unless information of this character is specifically provided for it will be impossible to secure that state of public confidence that is so sorely needed in this industry. This the Haugen bill does not do in its present form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I notice on page 2657 of the RECORD this morning a statement by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], to which I desire to refer. I did not hear it at the time, or I should have challenged it. The Senator from Utah said:

> I do not know whether it is worth while to call attention to the farming organizations which are in favor of the House bill as against the Senate bill—I would if I had the time—as shown by the testimony given before the House committee.

This is the point I challenge:

> The Secretary of Agriculture was there. He helped frame the bill.

I would like to have the authority of the Senator from Utah for the statement that the Secretary of Agriculture had anything to do with framing the House bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my information was that the Secretary of Agriculture was before the committee, not one day but more than one day; that he discussed the provisions of the bill with that committee and made recommendations; that not only did he meet with the committee but he met with other Members outside for the purpose of discussing amendments, many of the amendments referred to yesterday by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. KENYON. Is the fact that he was called before the House committee and testified before the House committee regarding the bill the basis of the Senator's statement that he helped frame the bill? I make the assertion, to go in the RECORD side by side with the statement of the Senator from Utah, that the Secretary of Agriculture had nothing whatever to do with framing the House bill, though he did attend the hearings, and did testify, of course, as he was asked to do. I do not want that statement to go in the RECORD to the people of this country, especially the farmers of the United States, who have implicit confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. I, too, have implicit confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture. Mr. President, the statement I made yesterday was based on information which came to me from sources I have no reason to doubt. The Senator may be right; my information may be wrong. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. KENYON. The statement comes to me from sources which I know are correct.

Mr. SMOOT. The statement I had every reason to believe was right. I made it upon the information that was given to me. I do not like to refer to Members of the other House, but I got it from Members of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. NORRIS. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have the amendment stated, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2 of the proposed amendment of the Senator from South Dakota, line 11, it is proposed to strike out the words "and owned or controlled by a packer" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "and used for food," so that the paragraph will read:

> The term "live-stock products" means all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived from live stock and used for food.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GOODING (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If I were privileged to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when Mr. NORBECK's name was called). I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. NORBECK] and to state that if he were present he would vote "nay." He has a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who is absent. I am unable to obtain a transfer and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a pair on this bill with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore I must withhold my vote. Were I at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], which I transfer to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], which I transfer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], who is absent. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore I am not able to vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CARAWAY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. GOODING. I find that I can transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to my colleague [Mr. BORAH] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE];

The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Brandegee	Fernald	McCumber	Shortridge
Broussard	Frelinghuysen	McLean	Smoot
Bursum	Harreld	Myers	Sutherland

So Mr. WADSWORTH's amendment to Mr. STERLING's proposed substitute was agreed to.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Amend the House text by adding a new section at the end thereof, as follows:

SEC. —. None of the provisions of this act shall be construed to include or be binding upon a person whose chief business is the raising of live stock or agricultural products.

Mr. PITTMAN. That language was reported out as a part of the Senate committee bill by the Senate committee. It is the same amendment which was offered at the last session to a similar bill and agreed to by the Senate. At that time it was thoroughly debated and understood. I do not think it is necessary to discuss the matter further unless there is some Senator who does not understand the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if we did not adopt that language yesterday as an amendment to the House text?

Mr. PITTMAN. I am not certain whether it was adopted yesterday or not.

Mr. STERLING. I understand the Senator offers the amendment to the House text?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. STERLING. Can it not be offered as an amendment to the substitute bill which is now under consideration? The proposed substitute for the House bill is under consideration and it can be agreed to as an amendment to the substitute now pending.

Mr. PITTMAN. I understand that under the parliamentary rule we have a right to perfect the House text, and it is for that purpose that I offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was somewhat vague in his answers as to the authority upon which he had asserted in the debate yesterday that the Secretary of Agriculture had taken an active part in the framing of the packer bill which came over from the House. Another Member of this body, the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], speaking in the Senate here on June 10, stated as one of his reasons for his supporting the Haugen bill that it was "backed by the Farm Bureau Federation and the grange." He said:

The Haugen or House bill, which it is proposed to substitute by amendment for the Norris bill, while not without objection is the lesser of the two evils, and, backed as it is by the Farm Bureau Federation, the Grange, and the unanimous report of the House committee, it seems to me better to accept the House bill.

Now, I have just presented to the Senate a letter which shows that the Haugen or House bill is not only not backed by the only representative of the National Grange that there is in Washington, Mr. Atkeson, but that he denounces it. The letter signed by Mr. Atkeson, speaking for the National Grange, says:

This bill (the Haugen bill) in its present form is inadequate and needs important revision before it can command our confidence or support.

So much for the grange backing referred to by the Senator from Oregon.

As to the Haugen or House bill having the backing of the Farm Bureau Federation, I read this telegram signed by J. R. Howard, president of the Farm Bureau, dated at Chicago, June 8, addressed to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], at Washington, D. C.:

American Farm Bureau live-stock committee not satisfied with House packer bill. Desires conference Monday night with Senate leader. Can you arrange same?

Mr. President, we seem to struggle with a good deal of difficulty in getting before the Senate any definite information in support of the statement that the Secretary of Agriculture had anything to do with the drafting of the House bill, but there can no longer be any doubt that the authorized representatives of the Farm Bureau and the Grange were never in favor of the bill as it passed the House.

But, Mr. President, there is abundant evidence that the bill was satisfactory to the packers as it passed the House.

Mr. Thomas E. Wilson, one of the packers, testified before the House committee, and I have his testimony before me. He appeared on May 6, 1921, shortly before the Haugen bill was reported to the House. He refers first to the Williams bill—another House bill, which embodied the provisions which the packers desired. Then Mr. Wilson proceeds to say:

That bill, as I read it, is pretty much the Haugen bill with a few amendments, the one important amendment being the elimination of the Interstate Commerce Commission, throwing it all into the Department of Agriculture.

He said further:

There is probably one additional suggestion that I could make as to that bill, or to the Haugen bill, which, I think, in line with the tendency of the minds of the men here as I gathered it yesterday, and that would be to entirely eliminate the Federal Trade Commission from jurisdiction in the matter.

That is what the packers want.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what the House text provides.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is what the House text provides, and that is why the House text is the packer bill, and that is why the packers are supporting it.

He was asked by Mr. VOIGT, a member of the House committee:

You say that the Haugen bill will pretty nearly cover the situation—

That is your exact language. The reply was:

The Haugen bill, with these few changes I have suggested.

That is, with the elimination of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission.

The real trouble with any bill that leaves any authority to the Federal Trade Commission is that the packers are afraid of the Federal Trade Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to take five minutes on the pending amendment and five minutes on the bill itself.

Mr. President, I at no time have claimed that the Secretary of Agriculture helped to draft the bill. In my remarks I did say that he helped to frame the bill, by which I meant he assisted in the amendments to the bill as it was introduced in the other House. There is no question about that at all.

After the speech which was delivered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] last evening, in which he showed to the Senate a bill which was marked by an attorney of the packing company with interlineations and amendments, claiming that that meant that the packers made the bill so that it was satisfactory to them, I asked Mr. Lightfoot to prepare a statement of just what took place. I have that statement now, and I am going to read it to the Senate. Before doing so, however, I desire to say that I have here a letter from Mr. T. C. Atkeson, which is dated March 22, 1921, reading as follows:

MR. NORMAN DRAPER,
Institute of American Meat Packers,
Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The last time you were in the office, if I remember correctly, you stated in the talk we were having that you would try to put on paper or get from some of your people copy of some proposed legislation on the subject of the Government regulation of the packer industry which you people would not oppose if considered and passed by Congress.

I was much interested in this proposition, and have now come to the point where I am considering making some suggestions to Members of Congress on this subject, and would be very glad to have your memorandum or copy of any proposed bill.

If you can oblige me with such a copy, it seems to me that it will be a step in the right direction, as it appears inevitable from the present state of public opinion that the general public will insist upon Congress taking some action in this direction at this coming session.

Yours, sincerely,

T. C. ATKESON,
Washington Representative.

The request made in that letter was complied with; that is all. That is the history of the matter. After Mr. Atkeson had made that request, what would Senators have thought if it had been denied? Here is what happened, Mr. President. This is the statement of Mr. Lightfoot:

"During the last session of Congress the House Committee on Agriculture held hearings lasting 40 days, taking testimony covering 3,000 pages of printed record.

"Toward the conclusion of the hearing two of the packers' attorneys—M. W. Borders, representing Morris & Co., and J. P. Lightfoot, representing Wilson & Co.—were invited by the committee to discuss the law of the pending bills and their effect upon the industry. I closed the argument, which lasted two days. At the conclusion of my address, which thoroughly analyzed the bills and pointed out the destructive features, Mr. VOIGT, of Wisconsin, one of the most active members of the committee, in advocating regulation of the industry made the suggestion that I be invited by the committee to submit suggestions eliminating such objectionable features.

"The committee had before it all the bills which had been previously introduced on the subject, including the Sims, Kendrick, Kenyon, and other bills. Mr. ANDERSON, a member of the committee, who had introduced a companion bill to the Kenyon bill, thereafter rewrote the measure conferring all the administrative jurisdiction upon the Federal Trade Commission."

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator from Utah from what he is reading?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that this is a statement which was prepared at my request as to the steps which were taken in the preparation of the bill after various bills on the subject had been introduced into the other House.

Mr. NORRIS. Whose statement is it, may I inquire of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. I have stated that. The statement is by Mr. Lightfoot.

Mr. NORRIS. Who is Mr. Lightfoot?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows; but I will tell the Senator, if he will just have patience.

Mr. NORRIS. All right, I will have patience.

Mr. SMOOT. He is attorney for Wilson & Co., packers of Chicago. The statement continues:

"Mr. HAUGEN wrote a bill along similar lines, conferring the jurisdiction over the packers to the Secretary of Agriculture and over the stockyards to the Interstate Commerce Commission. His bill was reported out by the committee at the close of the last Congress in the nature of a substitute for the Gronna bill, which had passed the Senate.

"At this session Mr. HAUGEN reintroduced his bill, and Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska introduced the Gronna bill and Mr. WILLIAMS later a modification of the Haugen bill. Another hearing was held by the committee lasting a week, at which there appeared the Secretary of Agriculture, representatives of farm and labor organizations, the Consumers' League, packers, large and small, commission men, stockyards representatives, and others interested in the bills.

"The committee invited all these parties to offer suggestions for the improvement of the bill. Amendments were suggested by representatives of the Department of Agriculture, farm organizations, commission men, stockyard managers, and packers.

"During the course of the discussion the committee invited me to confer with the Secretary of Agriculture and see if any amendments could be worked out, and if so the Secretary and I should report them back to the committee for its consideration.

"A subcommittee of three, consisting of the authors of the three bills pending before the committee, was appointed to draft a bill, the subcommittee held hearings at which representatives of the Department of Agriculture, the farm organizations, packers, and others appeared and offered their suggestions for amendments. I am informed that some were adopted and others rejected. The committee was fully aware that I was conferring with and cooperating as far as possible with others interested in the bill. The subcommittee reported the Haugen bill as amended to the full committee unanimously, the full committee unanimously reported it to the House without further amendment. The House after full discussion lasting several days passed it without a single amendment, and it is now before this body.

"The House was aware that amendments had been offered by all those interests, including the packers. (See House Report No. 77.)

"Why should not the packers be consulted? They are the parties most affected by the legislation. From my reading of the bill the amendments adopted embodying the suggestions of the representative of the Secretary of Agriculture, the farm organizations, and the packers are all fair and reasonable, and improve the bill; yet, notwithstanding, if adopted the bill will be the most far-reaching of any bill ever enacted by Congress for the regulation of private business in times of peace as stated by the committee in its report.

"Has the time come in this country when business men can not be heard to make suggestions as to laws vitally affecting their business? We have witnessed the Federal Trade Commission denying a hearing and conducting an ex parte investigation upon which these measures are predicated. It is such tendencies that cause business men to tremble before such legislation and look with anxiety to the future.

"It should not be a matter of consequence to the Senate that an attorney of one of the packers conferred with some of the representatives of the farm organizations or made suggestions for amendments. That is neither novel nor extraordinary, especially when such conferences had been practically suggested by a committee of Congress.

"The House passed the bill with a full knowledge of the fact and conscious of the scope of its bill. The Senate is amply able to pass upon the bill and weigh its merits or demerits. It rather impresses me as an indication of extremity when such a criticism is made in an attempt to sway the judgment of the Senate. Let us consider for a moment what amendments were suggested by the attorney for one of the packers and their effect.

"The Haugen bill as introduced conferred the administrative jurisdiction over the packers to the Secretary of Agriculture, and over the stockyards, commission men, traders, and packer buyers to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The amendment suggested by the attorney was to amend the bill so as to give the Secretary of Agriculture jurisdiction over the whole subject, and not provide for a divided authority over two divisions of a business so intimately connected.

"What is wrong about that suggestion?

"Several bills have heretofore been introduced in the Senate by those interested in this legislation which did that precise thing. I am informed that a representative of the Department of Agriculture appeared before the subcommittee of the House in connection with the Haugen bill and found no fault with that suggestion. A representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation approved of it—in fact, a committee of the Farm Bureau Federation, which met in Washington in April of this year and before the House committee began its hearing on the present bill, adopted the following resolution:

"We recommend that there should be regulatory legislation concerning the meat-packing industry to insure live-stock production against unfair practices. We further believe that such regulatory powers should be vested in the Department of Agriculture. We reaffirm our previous resolution for fair and just measures in the interest of both the industry and the producers. (See p. 484, hearings before Committee on Agriculture, May, 1921.)

"This resolution was inserted in the hearings by a high official of the Farm Bureau and was passed by a representative committee of the bureau assembled in Washington to outline a legislative program in the interest of the farmers."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire five minutes on the bill now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has exhausted his 10 minutes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think the Senator can speak on the bill now.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Wisconsin can not object, because he took 10 minutes himself yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has already spoken for 10 minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, of course, I yield the floor; but, inasmuch as this is a statement in reference to a matter which has gone into the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the statement may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The remainder of the statement is as follows:

"Mr. Atkeson, the representative of the National Grange, who furnished the bill with the interlineations referred to here, testifying before the House committee at its recent hearing, said:

"If I were writing this bill I would substitute for 'Interstate Commerce Commission' 'Secretary of Agriculture' clear through. The result of my own cogitation over the matter is in line with the statement made by Mr. ANDERSON yesterday. * * * Mr. Chairman, I was considering the bill purely from the standpoint of its being administered by the Secretary of Agriculture. I amused myself some time ago in preparing a packer bill, but I did not have the nerve to ask any Congressman to introduce it, because I did not think that Congress would pass the bill if I did, but it provided that the railroads should own the stockyards. That is our disposition of the stockyards problem. That means, of course, that they would be brought under the Interstate Commerce Commission for administration. But as I have studied Mr. HAUGEN'S bill, if the railroads are not to own the stockyards, and it does not so provide, it then seemed to me that if this law is to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture, that the Secretary of Agriculture should be given administrative authority over the stockyards, including the commission men and all other things that pass through the stockyards. This is not meant as a criticism at all. Maybe I am mistaken about it. If I were suggesting any changes in this bill, it would simply be that change, that the 'Secretary of Agriculture' be substituted for the 'Interstate Commerce Commission' throughout the bill, beginning with section 302. (See pages 77 and 78, House hearings, May, 1921.)

"The suggestions made to Mr. Atkeson by me were in response to his request for our views.

"The House committee agreed to the change and the bill was passed by the House, so it would seem that the suggestion of the attorney was in accordance with public opinion on that subject.

"The next amendment suggested by me to Mr. Atkeson was to amend the definition of the term 'live-stock products.'

"The definition as it originally appeared in the bill read as follows: 'The term "live-stock products" means all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived in whole or in part from live stock.'

"This definition, taken in connection with the definition of 'packer,' as provided in section 201 of the bill, would unquestionably have made a 'packer' out of many industries not engaged in the slaughter of animals, such as tanneries, fertilizer plants, woolen mills, automobile manufacturers, and many others using by-products of the packing industry and subject them to regulation under the bill. That definition was in identical language in the Gronna bill as it passed the Senate last session, and a lawyer for one of the packers was the first to call attention to it.

"It seems that the distinguished Committee on Agriculture of the Senate also concurs in the wisdom of the amendment, as it attempted to meet the criticism made by the packer attorney by changing the definition of the terms in the amendment now pending to the House bill, for by an amendment it is now made to read:

"The term 'live-stock products' means all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived from live stock and owned or controlled by a packer; the words 'and owned or controlled by a packer' is a very recent amendment offered by the Senate committee and is intended to safeguard the very point made by the packer attorney, whether it accomplished that purpose or not. It was also not criticised by the Secretary of Agriculture and was approved by the Farm Bureau.

"The next amendment suggested to Mr. Atkeson was to section 207 of the Haugen bill, which provided that the Secretary under certain circumstances should prescribe the manner and form in which the accounts, records, and memoranda of the packer should be kept, and thereafter any packer who keeps any other or different accounts, records, and memoranda than those prescribed by the Secretary shall be guilty of a penitentiary offense.

"There was no objection to keeping all the accounts or records that the Secretary might prescribe in the manner and form prescribed, which he has the power to make 'uniform' if he so desires, but in case the Secretary failed or refused to prescribe every form and account deemed essential in the operation of the business it was very objectionable to be charged with a felony if the Secretary found some account or record or memoranda he had not prescribed. It will be noted that the Farm Bureau also recommended this change in the law, and it was adopted by the committee; moreover, the section as amended corresponds in its scope with the same provision of the Senate amendment and is in consonance with it. It was also approved by the representative of the Secretary of Agriculture and seems to be fair, just, and reasonable. The power to prescribe uniform accounts and books is discretionary under the Senate bill, as under the House bill.

"Another amendment suggested was to section 205 (f). The bill as drawn made the finding of facts of the Secretary conclusive in any appeal from an order to 'cease and desist' if supported by evidence. The suggestion was made to change it to read by 'the weight of the evidence.'

"The representative of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Farm Bureau seem to favor it as fair. And the Senate at the last session adopted a like amendment to the Gronna bill from the floor, offered by Senator Smith of Georgia, who supported the bill.

"The Senate Committee on Agriculture evidently believed that this was a wise provision, as they have preserved it in the present amendment to the House bill. (See line 25, sec. 21, p. 44, of H. R. 6320, now under consideration.)

"I will not discuss this question further, but all the recommendations made are sound and fair. They do not weaken in any respect the bill, but are in accord with sound principle and fair and reasonable supervision and regulation, and, so far as analyzed, are in accord with many of the provisions of the Senate bill.

"In connection with the statement of Senator LA FOLLETTE that I suggested that the Secretary of Agriculture be given the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission over the packing industry was in line with the announced policy of this administration to coordinate overlapping powers of different departments. It was also in accord with the sentiment of the Senate at the last session, because they amended the Gronna bill from the floor in that respect. The present Committee on Agriculture reported its own bill with the same provision in it transferring the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, and the Senate committee also in reporting its amendment as a substitute for the House bill contained a similar provision. So that my suggestion was in line with the sentiment which has existed in the Senate on that question. The banks and railroads are both especially exempted from the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, because they have agencies established completely supervising them. The same situation should be provided for the packing industry, which is quite as large as either, and this legislation is intended to establish as complete supervision as is provided for the banks and railroads. There is nothing but a sentimental reason why the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission should be preserved, and the industry should not be subjected to conflicting authority, which will inevitably cause confusion and uncertainty in administering the law."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the speech of Mr. Lightfoot, the attorney for Wilson & Co., going into the RECORD complete. We have just listened to a 10-minute speech from Mr. Lightfoot, attorney for Wilson & Co., one of the big packers. It is a violation of our unanimous-consent agreement for a Senator to speak 10 minutes, and when I have spoken 5 minutes I have to quit; but we have accorded Mr. Lightfoot, the attorney for the packers, the privilege of talking 10 minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is wrong. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, five minutes are allowed on the bill and five minutes on each amendment, and I have not spoken five minutes on the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator knows, and so does every other Senator, if he will think for a minute, that the pending question now is on an amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada. A Senator can not talk on the bill when that amendment is pending as a matter of parliamentary law, though, of course, he can talk about anything when he really has the floor. Others have done so; I am not complaining about that, for, of course, I could not, being a Member of the Senate, expect the same privilege to be extended to me that has just been extended to the attorney for the packers. I do not know any way that I can make a speech in the Senate without coming here and making it. I congratulate the packers that they have a means of making speeches here that is not open to anybody else.

This attorney, Lightfoot, who has just made this eloquent speech, and did not get through, the remainder of it being printed in the RECORD, comes from the same packer, Wilson & Co., whose testimony, given by Mr. Wilson, president of the company, was read here a few moments ago in reference to the same question that Lightfoot, the attorney, is talking about, and that is the hearings before the House and the House bill. Wilson testified—and, I repeat, his testimony was read not 15 minutes ago—that the Haugen bill was satisfactory to him with two exceptions. He wanted the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission taken away and he wanted the authority of the Federal Trade Commission eliminated, and both of those changes were made in the bill. There is nothing left of the House bill that is objectionable to him; he is satisfied; and therefore, so far as he is concerned and others like him, if they are to have any legislation at all they are getting what they want. I congratulate them, Mr. President, that they are able to get what they want. They may be all right and the other people may be all wrong——

Mr. McCORMICK. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. Did not the Senator say when he first addressed the Senate on the subject that the two bills were very much alike?

Mr. NORRIS. They are; in a great many respects they are exactly the same; and if they were alike, if the Senate bill were just like the House bill I should expect the Senator from Illinois to be voting for it instead of voting against it. The fact that he refuses to vote for any substitute for the House bill is pretty good evidence to me that he himself does not believe that they are alike in all respects, and they are not.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Illinois took some pains to examine the two bills to determine the difference, which is more than the Senator from Nebraska did before they were reported to the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be. Of course, I could not be expected to do what the Senator from Illinois can do. If I did examine them I could not explain the difference like he can. He thinks now, for argument's sake, that they are not very different; but I notice that when he did examine them, and got through, he came out just where Wilson of the packers came out, at the same place. He is there now.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I propose to add to the pending amendment the following:

Whose farm products in the aggregate do not exceed in value $50,000 per annum.

Upon that amendment I want to be heard.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may that be stated again? I did not hear it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This does not come out of my time, does it, Mr. President? I was just putting a limitation upon the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the proposed amendment of the Senator from Nevada, the following words:

Whose products in the aggregate do not exceed in value $50,000 per annum.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am very much gratified that we have, through the medium of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], this elaborate statement from Mr. Lightfoot, the attorney for the packers, as to the making of the packer bill which passed the House. To Senators familiar with the proceedings in committees it will appear like an old story.

First, the selection of a committee of three; and I was told by a member of the House committee the other day on this floor that that committee was pretty carefully selected. This committee takes the Haugen bill and writes into it seven important suggestions made by the attorney for the packers—radical suggestions, suggestions that completely changed the character of the bill as it was first introduced—and I hold in my hands here now the Haugen bill with interlineations in the handwriting of that attorney in the bill, which he turned over to Mr. Atkeson, with the changes that the packers desired to have made in the bill. Then the subcommittee was appointed. They adopted these suggestions. The measure was passed on to the full committee and, without a single change, reported by the committee to the House and passed by the House just as reported. Is not that rather remarkable?

The ways seem to be specially greased for swift action. Without a change, this bill goes from a subcommittee of three through the entire committee of the House, and then it goes through the House of Representatives without any further change whatever.

It is a most extraordinary record. I think the revelations made by the packers, through the Senator from Utah, are a valuable contribution to the legislative methods that are employed by big interests in securing what they want. They usually know what they want, and this is the system by which they secure it.

So that you have this bill with its remarkable history. Are you willing to accept the ipse dixit of the packers? You have this bill with their brand on it. You know that it came from their hands; that it contains the modifications that they wanted put into it; that it passed through the hands of a subcommittee and then was put through the full committee without any alteration and passed through the House of Representatives without an amendment. It is now before the Senate. It has been substituted for the Senate bill substantially as it passed the House. A few amendments were made to it by the Senate yesterday that improve it slightly; but the radical things that the packers wanted put in and that they secured before the bill came to the Senate, as I have stated, put upon it the packer stamp, so that it will go to the country as packer legislation if it is finally passed by the Senate in its present form.

The Senate has the opportunity to choose between that and the bill offered by the Senator from South Dakota, which I trust will be adopted in its stead.

I withdraw the amendment that I proposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, my objection to the bill offered as a substitute by the Senator from South Dakota is found in section 10. I refer to the provision which authorizes the commission to fix the charges of the operators on its own initiative.

Mr. President, I believe in investigation and in publicity, but I do not believe in price-fixing. With all that has been said in favor of this bill, I still think there is one best way to punish the monopolist, and the more time we spend in experimenting in the wrong way, the longer we shall be before we find out how to punish him in the right way.

To punish a monopolist you must catch him, and then subject him to the penalties provided for his offense, but when in the process of capture you adopt regulations that interfere with the free operation of the natural law of supply and demand, you may punish the monopolist, but you will also destroy that particular business. Such has been the result to the railroad business of this country. To-day we are inviting and beseeching the railroads to do things which a few years ago were prohibited by law. I do not know but that it is too late to remedy the harm that has been done. I am not in favor of abolishing the Interstate Commerce Commission. Every well-regulated cemetery must be kept up, and my opinion is that the Interstate Commerce Commission is the best instrumentality that can be devised to take care of the transportation burying-ground; but, Mr. President, I know that democracies are expensive. In history, they have cost more than they have been worth. Certainly not one of them has lived to a ripe old age. The trouble is that governments of and for and by the people must keep the people contented, and when in order to secure that contentment you are driven to experiments in unsound economic principles, you begin to write the last page in the history of that country.

Mr. President, I know that this legislation is only an opening wedge. It does not go very far. It merely fixes the prices to be charged by the operators; but if it does anything of any consequence, it must lead to general price fixing, and next year the consumers of meat will come to Congress and want to know why your packer legislation is not of some benefit to them, and it will be as popular then as it is now to introduce legislation fixing the price which the packers shall charge, and then you must carry it to the consumer. There is no other legitimate end to this kind of legislation.

I congratulate my colleagues on the floor of this Chamber who have convinced themselves that the popular side of this bill is the right side. I can not agree with them.

Mr. President, when you begin to administer this sort of anodyne to a legitimate business, no man who is capable of conducting that business will remain in it. There is not a man who has a dollar's interest in the railroads to-day who would not get out if he could at a substantial loss; and when you follow up this legislation to its legitimate conclusion and apply it to the packers and retailers, it will not be five years before adjoining the transportation burying ground will be the burying ground of the meat industry of this country. Then will come the coal industry, then the butcher and the baker and the candlestick maker, until instead of a country where a free man can do business under the economic liberties and natural rights to which he is entitled you have a series of industrial graveyards, and then what? It will be popular then to say: "We must have a country where there are no poor and no rich," and to do that you must abolish private property; and then we shall be right where Mr. Lenin and Mr. Trotski have brought Russia, and I do not think the American people want that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the substitute is voted on I desire to tender an amendment to the House bill. I think perhaps a provision in substance like this was inadvertently omitted from it. It is section 13 of the Senate bill and section 7 of the substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota. I can not understand why it should have been left out of the House bill. I suggest that it be inserted after section 302 of the House bill, on page 12.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 12, after section 302, or following line 23, it is proposed to insert:

After two years from the date when this act becomes effective no packer engaged in commerce shall own or control or have any interest in, directly or indirectly, by community of stock ownership or otherwise, any stockyard unless the Secretary shall determine that such ownership or control or interest is not in violation of the purposes of this act, or that such packer has been unable, despite due diligence, to dispose of such ownership or control of or interest in such stockyard, in which case the Secretary may, by order, extend the period during which such ownership, control, or interest may continue.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, a question was addressed to the Senator from Wyoming yesterday as to the reason why the packers should be prohibited from owning at least a controlling interest in the stockyards. We need not really go very seriously into that question now, because that was one of the questions at issue in the suit brought against the packers, and the decree provides that the interests which they have in the stockyards should be disposed of. I read a few lines from the decree:

That within 90 days after the entry of this decree such of the defendants as have interests in public stockyard market companies, stockyard terminal railroads, or market newspapers shall file in this court, for the court's approval, a plan or plans for divesting themselves of all ownership or interest in (1) public stockyard market companies; (2) stockyard terminal railroads; (3) market newspapers—

And so forth.

The amendment simply gives expression to this decree, which the court determined was essential to prevent the objectionable control.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just for a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection to the adoption of the amendment, but I think I am right in saying that the decree applied only to the five packers. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana applies to all packers.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly, if it is wrong for these five packers to control at one and the same time the selling agency and the purchasing agency, it is wrong for anybody else to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], who is necessarily absent, and I am unable to secure a transfer. If he were present, he would vote "nay"; and if I were allowed to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. GOODING (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If I were privileged to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. LADD's name was called). I am authorized to state that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] is necessarily absent, and that if he were present and not paired he would vote "yea." He is paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

Mr. STERLING (when Mr. NORBECK's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. NORBECK]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He has a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and transfer, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair, and being unable to get a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair and transfer as on the preceding vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). The announcement made by me upon yesterday concerning my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and my right to vote in consequence of the transfer, applied to all votes upon this bill and substitutes and amendments thereto. I make that announcement now so as not to have to repeat it and take up the time of the Senate hereafter. On this question I vote "yea."

The roll was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], and I ask that this announcement may stand for the day. He has a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

I also desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Ashurst	Cummins	Harris	Jones, Wash.
Borah	Dial	Heflin	Kendrick
Capper	Gerry	Johnson	Kenyon
Caraway	Glass	Jones, N. Mex.	La Follette
Lenroot	Owen	Sterling	Walsh, Mont.
Nelson	Pittman	Swanson	Watson, Ga.
Norris	Sheppard	Trammell	Williams
Overman	Spencer	Walsh, Mass.

NAYS—33.

Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	Myers	Sutherland
Broussard	Harreld	New	Underwood
Bursum	Keyes	Nicholson	Wadsworth
Cameron	Knox	Oddie	Warren
Curtis	Lodge	Phipps	Watson, Ind.
Dillingham	McCormick	Poindexter	Weller
Edge	McCumber	Shortridge
Ernst	McLean	Smoot
Fernald	McNary	Stanley

NOT VOTING—32.

Ball	Hale	Moses	Robinson
Calder	Harrison	Newberry	Shields
Colt	Hitchcock	Norbeck	Simmons
Culberson	Kellogg	Page	Smith
Elkins	King	Penrose	Stanfield
Fletcher	Ladd	Pomerene	Townsend
France	McKellar	Ransdell	Willis
Gooding	McKinley	Reed	Wolcott

So Mr. STERLING's amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer to the House bill in Committee of the Whole. The amendment which I am about to offer is an amendment adopted by the Senate at the last session to the Senate bill just prior to its passage. It affects the term "live stock." The definition of "live stock" as contained in the House bill, as I read it, on page 2, line 4, is as follows:

> The term "live stock" means cattle, sheep, swine, horses, mules, or goats, whether live or dead.

I move to strike out the words "horses, mules, or goats" and to insert the word "and," after the word "sheep," on line 4, so that it would read:

> The term "live stock" means cattle, sheep, and swine, whether live or dead.

I suggest that amendment for this reason: I do not think the Senate intends that the purchase and sale of horses in auction stables all over the United States shall be regulated. Such dealing in horses has nothing whatsoever to do with the packing business. It has nothing to do with the food business whatsoever. As I read the House bill, were the word "horses" left in, every institution or stable or establishment of any kind at which men who make a business of buying and selling horses congregated to do their business would be regulated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The same is true with regard to mules. The mule buying and selling business is utterly separate from the packing business, has nothing to do with it whatsoever, is an entirely separate business. It is done in different places.

There are mule barns in the Southwest and in the Central West, some of which I have visited, far removed from the stockyards, far removed from the packing industry or the general live-stock industry as we know it. Therefore I move to strike out the word "mules."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I interrupt the Senator to inquire where the language is found?

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 2 of the House text, line 5. As for goats, I think they are so unimportant that they might well be left out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the situation is not exactly as the Senator from New York has represented. About two years ago the Congress modified existing laws with relation to the inspection of meats by including mules and horses the flesh of which goes into interstate commerce, so that they are now slaughtered and their products are dealt with in exactly the same way as neat cattle. The legislation was enacted by Congress on the representation, in accordance with the fact, that a large number of horses on the western plains were practically valueless for draft purposes or for locomotion and that a profitable business could be established in the meat products of these animals if inspection were allowed under the law.

Those facts being represented to the Congress, there were then included, so that it seems to me that instead of striking out those words we ought to have some modification which would exempt as a matter of course all markets of these animals except those markets in which they are sold for the purpose of converting them into food products.

I think that the Senator from New York will appreciate that his amendment is rather comprehensive. It would be exceedingly profitable to be informed of the markets there are for meat products of that character and the extent to which the business goes, so that if found profitable it might be extended.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield for me to make a statement in his time? I think I can speak but once in my own time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I recollect, as the Senator has stated, the amendment of the law which extends the Federal meat inspection act to horse meat. I did not realize it went as far as mule meat. Perhaps it does, although it would surprise me. The thing is now covered by law, it seems to me, in an entirely satisfactory way. The sanitary condition of horse meat, especially in foreign commerce, is now vouched for by the Federal Government under the meat inspection act. The inspectors inspect that meat, so I think there is nothing needed in the bill to cover the situation which exists.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Will the Senator from New York point to some provision in the bill in which the term "live stock" is used in such sense that it would require regulation in a market in which these animals were sold merely for draft purposes or for locomotion? For instance, at the top of page 3 I observe reference is made to the slaughter of live stock within the State and the shipment outside of the State of products resulting from such slaughter. The language is usually employed here in connection with the use of the products for food purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On page 11, in Title III, of the House text, under the heading "Stockyards," it is provided:

> The term "stockyard owner" means any person engaged in the business of conducting or operating a stockyard.
>
> The term "stockyard services" means services or facilities furnished at a stockyard in connection with the receiving, marketing, feeding, watering, holding, delivering, shipment, weighing, or handling, in commerce, of live stock.

That brings the horse sales stable, the auction stable, the mule sales stable under the jurisdiction of the commission.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I quite agree with the Senator. We have a very extensive horse market in the State of Montana, which I am sure no one intended to bring within the purview of the pending bill. At the same time, I insist that the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York is still too comprehensive.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to section 406 of the House text, and before doing so I wish to inquire if there has been any amendment agreed to relating to that section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No amendment has been made to that section.

Mr. HARRELD. Then I offer the following amendment.

On page 28, at the end of line 12, I move to amend by adding the following:

> And except when the Secretary of Agriculture, in the exercise of his duties hereunder, shall request of the said Federal Trade Commission that it make investigation and report in any case.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the language of this section, which I propose to amend at the top of page 28, which says:

> On and after the enactment of this act, and so long as it remains in effect, the Federal Trade Commission shall have no power or jurisdiction so far as relating to any matter which by this act is made subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary, except in cases in which, before the enactment of this act, complaint has been served under section 5 of the act entitled—

And so forth.

That clause as it stands absolutely takes away the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission. It strikes me that these two bodies ought to cooperate; that they ought to be allowed to cooperate in carrying out the purposes of the bill. The Federal Trade Commission is equipped to make these investigations and can make them at times very acceptably, I presume, to the Secretary of Agriculture.

It seems to me we would avoid duplication of work by having the proposed amendment made to this section so they can cooperate and will cooperate in carrying out the purposes of the act. I offer the amendment for that reason.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. The amendment has been printed and we are all familiar with it and unless some one desires it I shall not ask that it be read, because I can state in just a word what it is. I have no desire to delay the Senate further than to get a roll-call vote on the amendment, and then, so far as I am concerned, I am through.

The amendment that I wish to offer is a substitute. It is the Senate committee bill which the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry reported to the Senate, with all the amendments that were adopted in Committee of the Whole, excepting the amendment relating to the definition of live-stock products. That I have left just as the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry reported it. In other words, this will bring about another vote on the substitution of the Senate committee bill with the one modification that I have made. I send it to the desk and offer it as an amendment.

Mr. NORRIS's amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That this act may be cited as the "Federal live stock commissioner act."

TITLE I.—DEFINITIONS.

SEC. 2. When used in this act, unless the context indicates otherwise—

The term "person" includes a partnership, a corporation, or an association of two or more individuals, and the members of a partnership or the directors, officers, receiver, or other person charged with the duty of the management and operation of the business of a corporation, partnership, or association.

The term "commissioner" means the Federal live stock commissioner created by this act.

The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

The term "commerce" means commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or in any Territory or possession of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, or between any such Territory or possession and any State or foreign nation, or between the District of Columbia and any State, Territory, possession, or foreign nation.

The term "live stock" means live or dead cattle, sheep, and swine.

The term "live-stock products" means all products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived from live stock and owned or controlled by a packer.

The term "stockyard" means any place, establishment, or facility maintained and conducted at or in connection with a public market and consisting of pens or other inclosures, and their appurtenances, in which live cattle, sheep, and swine are received, held, and sold for shipment or slaughter in commerce.

The term "packer" means any person engaged in the business of slaughtering live stock or preparing live-stock products for sale in commerce, or of marketing live-stock products in commerce as a subsidiary of or an adjunct to any such slaughtering or preparing business.

The term "operator" means any person engaged in the business of conducting or operating a stockyard in which live stock is handled in commerce, and any trader or commission man or other person performing services wholly or partly in commerce with respect to live stock handled in or in connection with a stockyard.

The term "registrant" means any person to whom a certificate of registration has been duly issued under the provisions of section 25 and whose certificate remains in full force and effect.

The term "corporation" includes any public, quasi-public, or other corporation or cooperative association, and any agency controlled or operated by any State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States or any political subdivision thereof.

TITLE II.—POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE COMMISSIONER.

SEC. 3. There shall be in the Department of Agriculture a Federal live stock commissioner, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary of $7,500 a year, payable monthly.

The commissioner, under the direction of the Secretary, shall administer and enforce the provisions of this act and the rules, regulations, and orders issued hereunder.

The commissioner shall not be directly or indirectly interested in the business of any packer or operator. The commissioner may be removed by the President or by concurrent resolution of Congress for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office.

SEC. 4. The commissioner is authorized to appoint such officers, employees, and agents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and to make such expenditures for rent, furniture, office equipment, printing, binding, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, stationery, motor-propelled vehicles or trucks used for official purposes, traveling expenses, and per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4 for officers, agents, and other employees, and for other contingent and miscellaneous expenses, as may be necessary efficiently to execute the purposes of this act and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time. All such appointments of officers, employees, and agents shall be made from lists of eligibles supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil service law.

The principal office of the commissioner shall be in the District of Columbia, but he may exercise all his powers at any other place. The commissioner may prosecute any inquiry necessary in connection with his duties in any part of the United States. The powers and duties conferred or imposed upon the commissioner by this act may be exercised by him through such agency or agencies as he may designate, subject to the approval of the Secretary.

SEC. 5. Nothing in this act shall affect or take away any of the power or jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

SEC. 6. The commissioner, upon his own initiative or in cooperation with existing governmental agencies, shall investigate and ascertain the demand for, the supply, consumption costs, and prices of, and all other facts relating to the ownership, production, transportation, manufacture, storage, handling, or distribution of live stock, by-products of the live-stock industry, or live-stock products, including operations of and the ownership of stockyards. He shall likewise compile and furnish to producers, consumers, or distributors by means of regular and special reports, or by such other methods as he deems most effective, information respecting the condition of the live-stock market and the supply, demand, prices, and other conditions affecting the market.

SEC. 7. The commissioner shall have the power to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, records, and correspondence relating to any matter under investigation. The commissioner or any examiner designated by him may sign subpœnas, may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence.

Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such books, papers, records, and correspondence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpœna the commissioner may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of such books, papers, records, and correspondence.

Such court may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, issue an order requiring such person to appear before the commissioner, or to produce books, papers, records, and correspondence if so ordered, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

SEC. 8. The commissioner may order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation under this act at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such depositions may be taken before any person designated by the commissioner having power to administer oaths. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition, or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed by the deponent. Any person may be compelled to appear and depose, and to produce books, papers, records, and correspondence in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce such evidence before the commissioner, as hereinbefore provided.

Witnesses summoned before the commissioner, or any examiner, as herein authorized, shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States, and witnesses whose depositions are taken and the person taking the same shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like depositions or services in the courts of the United States.

No person shall be excused from attending and testifying, or from producing books, papers, records, or correspondence before the commissioner in obedience to the subpœna of the commissioner on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence required of him may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence before the commissioner in obedience to a subpœna issued by him: Provided, That no natural person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution for perjury committed in so testifying.

SEC. 9. Any agent or employee of the commissioner who, without his authority, unless directed by a court of competent jurisdiction, makes public any information obtained by the commissioner shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 10. The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government or of any State or political subdivision thereof or with any person.

SEC. 11. The several departments and agencies of the Government, when directed by the President, shall furnish to the commissioner, upon his request, all records, papers, and information in their possession relating to any person subject to any of the provisions of this act and shall from time to time detail to the commissioner such officers and employees as the President may direct.

TITLE III.—DUTIES OF PACKERS AND OPERATORS.

SEC. 12. It shall be unlawful for any packer to—

(a) Engage in any unfair or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce, or in any deceptive practice or device to cheat or defraud in commerce; or

(b) Sell or otherwise transfer to or for any other packer, or buy or otherwise receive from or for any other packer, any live stock or live-stock products for the purpose of apportioning the supply between any such packers or unreasonably affecting the price of or creating a monopoly in the acquisition of buying, selling, or dealing in live stock or live-stock products in commerce; or

(c) Engage or participate in any manner, either directly or indirectly, in the business of purchasing, manufacturing, storing, or selling foodstuffs other than live-stock products, where the effect of such participation in such business may be substantially to lessen competition in or to restrain commerce or to tend to create a monopoly in commerce; or

(d) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other packer to apportion territory for carrying on business, or to apportion purchases or sales of any live stock or live-stock products, or to control prices thereof in commerce; or

(e) Conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to engage in any course of business or to do any act for the purpose of preventing any person from carrying on a competitive or similar business in commerce; or

(f) Otherwise act or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to do or abet the doing of any act, contrary to the provisions of this act, or refuse, neglect, or fail to act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to refuse, neglect, or fail to act in accordance with the provisions of this act; or

(g) Otherwise act or refuse, neglect, or fail to act, or conspire, combine, agree, or arrange with any other person to do or aid or abet the doing of any act, or to refuse, neglect, or fail to act contrary to the provisions of this act and the rules, regulations, and orders made hereunder.

SEC. 13. After two years from the date when this act becomes effective no packer engaged in commerce shall own or control or have any interest in, directly or indirectly, by community of stock ownership or otherwise, any stockyard, unless the commissioner shall determine that such ownership or control or interest is not in violation of the purposes of this act or that such packer has been unable, despite due diligence, to dispose of such ownership or control of or interest in such stockyard, in which case the commissioner may, by order, extend the period during which such ownership, control, or interest may continue.

SEC. 14. No operator shall engage in any unfair or unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce, or in any deceptive practice or device to cheat or defraud in commerce, or charge, collect, receive, or demand any unreasonable charge or rate for any service in commerce performed in connection with the business of such operator.

The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may after hearing, upon complaint or upon his own initiative, determine and fix, and by rule, regulation, or order prescribe fair and reasonable practices, charges, and rates to be observed by operators, and fair and reasonable terms and conditions upon which the services of operators in commerce shall be rendered or performed.

SEC. 15. It shall be the duty of every packer and operator to comply with the provisions of this act, and the rules, regulations, and orders which the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may from time to time prescribe in conformity with this act.

SEC. 16. Every operator and packer engaged in commerce shall keep such records and statements of account, and make such reports or returns, verified under oath or otherwise, as the commissioner shall require, as will fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in its business, and the true ownership of such business by stockholding or otherise, in such form and at such times as the commissioner shall by order require. The commissioner may, in his discretion, prescribe uniform systems of accounts and records and require the installation and use thereof by packers or operators. For the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, or of verifying any such reports or returns, any officer or agent of the Government designated by the commissioner may, during the usual hours of business, enter and inspect any place used by any packer or operator in its business, and examine any books, papers, records, or correspondence relating to such business.

SEC. 17. For the efficient execution of the provisions of this act and in order to provide information for the use of Congress it shall be the duty of any packer or operator, or any officer, agent, or employee of such packer or operator, when requested by an officer or agent of the Government designated in accordance with the provisions of this act, to answer correctly to the best of his knowledge, under oath or otherwise, as may be required, all questions touching his knowledge of any matter authorized to be investigated under this act, or to produce any books, papers, records, or correspondence in his possession or under his control relating to such matter. Any information secured under this act, except secret processes or formulas, shall be available for the use of either House of Congress at its request, and the commissioner may cause such information to be published from time to time when deemed necessary.

SEC. 18. Any person who willfully—

(a) Fails or refuses to make full and true entries, or makes any false entry in the accounts or records required to be kept by a packer or operator; or

(b) Alters, mutilates, conceals, or destroys any such account or record; or

(c) Makes any false or fraudulent statement in a return or report required under this act; or

(d) Hinders, obstructs, or resists any duly authorized officer or agent of the Government in the performance of his duties under this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 19. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any agent, officer, or other person acting for or employed by any individual, partnership, association, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, partnership, association, or corporation as well as that of the person.

TITLE IV.—PROCEDURE FOR VIOLATIONS.

SEC. 20. Whenever the commissioner believes that any packer or operator is violating any provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, he shall cause notice in writing to be served upon such packer or operator, specifying the alleged violations, and requiring such packer or operator to attend and testify at a hearing before him at a time and place designated therein; and at such time and place the commissioner shall afford to such packer or operator a reasonable opportunity to be heard in person or by counsel and through witnesses under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe. If, after such hearing, the commissioner finds that such packer or operator has violated any provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, he shall make a report in writing in which he shall state his findings as to the facts, and shall issue and cause to be served on such packer or operator an order requiring such packer or operator to cease and desist from continuing such violations. The testimony taken at the hearing before the commissioner shall be reduced to writing and filed in the records of the Department of Agriculture. Until a transcript of the record in such hearing shall have been filed in a circuit court of appeals of the United States, as hereinafter provided, the commissioner may at any time, upon such notice and in such manner as he shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any report or any order made or issued by him.

SEC. 21. An order requiring a packer or operator to cease and desist from violating any provision of this act, or any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, shall be final and conclusive unless within 30 days after service the packer or operator appeals to the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which it has its principal place of business by filing with the clerk of such court a written petition praying that the commissioner's order be set aside or modified in the manner stated in the petition, together with a bond in such sum as the court may determine, conditioned that such packer or operator will pay the costs of the proceedings if the court so directs. The clerk of the court in which such a petition is filed shall immediately cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the commissioner, and he shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in the court a full and accurate transcript of the record in such proceedings, including the notice to the packer or operator, a copy of the charges, the evidence, and the report and order. The testimony and evidence taken or submitted before the commissioner, duly certified and filed as aforesaid as a part of the record, shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case. The proceedings in such cases in the circuit court of appeals shall be made a preferred cause and shall be expedited in every way. Such court may affirm or set aside the order of the commissioner or may direct him to modify his order. No such order of the commissioner shall be modified or set aside by the circuit court of appeals unless it is shown by the packer or operator that the order is unsupported by the weight of the evidence or was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded to such packer or operator for a hearing, or infringes the Constitution of the United States, or is beyond the jurisdiction of the commissioner.

If the court determines that the just and proper disposition of such an appeal requires the taking of additional evidence, the court shall order such additional evidence to be taken before the commissioner in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper. The commissioner may modify his findings as to the facts, or make new findings by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and he shall file such modified or new findings and his recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of his original order with the return of such additional evidence. If the circuit court of appeals affirms or modifies the order of the commissioner, its decree shall operate as an injunction to enjoin the packer or operator, and its officers, agents, and employees from further violating the provisions of the order or modified order.

SEC. 22. The United States circuit court of appeals shall have exclusive jurisdiction to review such orders of the commissioner, and may affirm, modify, or set aside any such order of the commissioner; but the decree of such court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari, if such writ is duly applied for within 60 days after entry of the judgment or decree complained of, as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code.

SEC. 23. Any packer or operator, or any of his or its officers, directors, agents, or employees, who fails, neglects, or refuses to obey any order of the commissioner issued under the provisions of section 20, or such order as modified, after such order, or such order as modified, has been sustained by the courts, as provided herein, or in case such order, or such order as modified, has been sustained by the circuit court of appeals, and no writ of certiorari has been applied for within 60 days thereafter, after the expiration of such period, or after the expiration of the time allowed for filing a petition in the circuit court of appeals to set aside such order, in case no such petition has been filed within such time, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months or more than five years, or by a fine of not less than $500 or more than $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 24. The commissioner shall report any violation of this act or of any rule, regulation, or order made hereunder to the Attorney General of the United States, who shall cause appropriate proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted in the proper courts of the United States without delay.

TITLE V.—VOLUNTARY REGISTRATION OF PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS.

SEC. 25. (a) The commissioner may, upon application by any individual, partnership, corporation, or municipality, issue to such applicant a certificate of registration to engage in or carry on, under this section the business, whether in interstate or foreign commerce, or both, of conducting or operating stockyards, or slaughtering live stock, or processing, preserving, or storing live-stock products or perishable foodstuffs, provided that—

(1) The location, character, and extent of ground, buildings, and other facilities provided or to be provided by the applicant are found suitable and adequate for the proper conduct of the business sought to be registered; and

(2) The financial resources, credit, and standing of the applicant are sufficient to assure the safe conduct of the business; and

(3) The applicant agrees as a condition to the granting of the certificate of registration to comply with and abide by the provisions of this section and the rules, regulations, and orders made hereunder. The certificate shall not be assignable, except with the approval of the commissioner, and shall be valid for such period as may be prescribed in rules and regulations made by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary.

(b) It shall be the duty of every registrant:

(1) To provide and maintain or secure, when necessary and practicable, adequate railroad connections with its place of business;

(2) To furnish the services and facilities of its business on fair and reasonable terms and without unjust discrimination to persons applying for such service and facilities: Provided, That it shall set aside such portion of the facilities of its business, as determined by the commissioner, as may reasonably be necessary to accommodate small shippers and local patrons;

(3) To impose only such charges and rates as are reasonable for the service or facility afforded;

(4) To exercise such care of the live stock, live-stock products, perishable foodstuffs handled by it as may be necessary to prevent undue loss in conection therewith;

(5) To maintain sanitary conditions in the conduct of its business;

(6) To refrain from unfairly discriminatory or deceptive practices or devices in the conduct of its business;

(7) To keep complete and accurate accounts and records of its business and to submit reports when called for and in such form as may be prescribed by the commissioner; and

(8) Otherwise to conduct its business in such manner as may be prescribed in rules, regulations, and orders issued under this section by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, to carry out the purposes hereof.

(c) Reports of registrants, when filed with the commissioner, shall be open to public inspection. The commissioner may from time to time cause inspections to be made of the places of business and operations of registrants to determine their compliance with the provisions of this section and the rules, regulations, and orders issued hereunder.

(d) It shall be the duty of the commissioner to:

(1) Furnish to registrants reports embodying existing knowledge concerning satisfactory and economical appliances and methods of food preservation by cold storage, freezing, cooking, dehydration, or otherwise, and of all improvements in the art, and to detail persons experienced in such art to consult and advise with registrants;

(2) Cooperate with registrants in procuring for them adequate services by common carriers, by rail or otherwise, including provision for special cars needed in the proper transportation of live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs;

(3) Furnish to registrants all available information as to supplies of foodstuffs handled by such registrants and the location and movement and transportation costs of such foodstuffs; and

(4) As far as practicable, when requested by any such registrant, provide for the inspection by agents of the commissioner of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs received or distributed by such registrant to determine the quality, quantity, or condition thereof, and for the issuance by such agents of certificates showing the results of such inspection; and in the conduct of such inspections to cooperate with duly authorized local authorities. Such certificates shall be accepted in the courts of the United States and of the States as prima facie evidence of the quality, quantity, or condition at the time and place of inspection of the live stock, live-stock products, or perishable foodstuffs covered thereby.

(e) No registrant shall take title to any products handled by such registrant. The commissioner shall administer and enforce the provisions of this section and of all rules, regulations, and orders which he may issue hereunder.

(f) Any certificate of registration issued under this section may be suspended or revoked by the commissioner for any violation of this section or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, under such procedure as the commissioner may prescribe. Every person who shall forge, alter, counterfeit, or, without proper authority, use any certificate of registration issued under this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

TABLE VI.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

SEC. 26. Nothing contained in this act, except as otherwise provided herein, shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the enforcement of, or the procedure under, the provisions of the antitrust acts, the acts to regulate commerce, the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914; the act entitled "An act to promote export trade, and for other purposes," approved April 10, 1918; or sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of the act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved February 27, 1894, as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,'" approved February 12, 1913; or with any investigation, proceeding, or prosecution begun and pending at the time this act becomes effective; nor shall anything contained in this act be construed to alter, modify, or repeal such acts or any part or parts thereof, except as specifically provided in this act.

SEC. 27. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances be held invalid the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provisions to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 28. This act shall become effective, except as otherwise provided herein, on and after its passage.

SEC. 29. The sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available immediately and until expended, for carrying out the provisions of this act, including the compensation of attorneys, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees, and expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, furniture, office equipment, and other supplies and equipment as the commissioner may find necessary.

SEC. 30. None of the provisions of this act shall be construed to include or be binding upon a person whose chief business is the raising of live stock or agricultural products.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KENYON. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made on the last vote as to my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], who if present would vote "nay," I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. GOODING (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. NORBECK's name was called). I have been requested to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). As I stated before, I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I am unable to obtain a transfer and in his absence I am compelled to withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I did before as to my pair and still being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair and transfer as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. I understand that he would vote the same way that I would on this question. Therefore I am privileged to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE];

The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—31.

So Mr. NORRIS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, when the bill was before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, I offered an amendment to the House text, which is known as the publicity section of the Senate bill. I now offer that amendment in the Senate. The amendment is to insert a new section, to be known as section 401½.

Mr. MCCORMICK. If we could have order, perhaps we could learn from the Senator from Iowa if he refers to section 6 of the Senate bill?

Mr. KENYON. Section 6 of the Senate bill was adopted as an amendment to the House text, I will say to the Senator from Illinois; that helps some; but section 16 should also be adopted in order to make the publicity and uniform accounting proposition complete.

I do not believe the Senate gave much thought to the matter when they voted on the amendment. I again offer the amendment in the Senate and ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 25, after line 20, it is proposed to add a new section to the bill, to be known as section 401½, as follows:

SEC. 401½. Every operator and packer engaged in commerce shall keep such records and statements of account, and make such reports or returns, verified under oath or otherwise, as the Secretary shall require, as will fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in its business, and the true ownership of such business by stockholding or otherwise, in such form and at such times as the Secretary shall by order require. The Secretary may, in his discretion, prescribe uniform systems of accounts and records and require the installation and use thereof by packers or operators. For the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued hereunder, or of verifying any such reports or returns, any officer or agent of the Government designated by the Secretary may, during the usual hours of business, enter and inspect any place used by any packer or operator in its business, and examine any books, papers, records, or correspondence relating to such business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore as to my pair and its transfer, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore as to my pair and inability to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GOODING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as previously as to my pair with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], I withhold my vote. If I were privileged to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. NORBECK's name was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] if he were present would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD], who is unavoidably absent, would, if present, likewise vote "yea." The Senator from North Dakota is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair as upon the previous vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement which I previously made as to my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement which I made upon the last vote as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—41.

Ashurst	Harreld	McNary	Swanson
Borah	Harris	Nelson	Trammell
Bursum	Heflin	Norris	Wadsworth

So Mr. KENYON's amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, on yesterday an amendment was adopted to the House bill under subsection (b) on page 11, which was designed to make certain that commission men were included within the provisions of the bill. I now intend to offer that same amendment in two places to make the remainder of the bill conform to the amendment to which I refer. I offer the amendment, on page 22, section 311, line 7, between the words "the" and "receiving," to insert "buying or selling on a commission basis," so that it will read:

SEC. 311. Whenever in any investigation under the provisions of this title, or in any investigation instituted by petition of the stockyard owner or market agency concerned, which petition is hereby authorized to be filed, the Secretary after full hearings finds that any rate, charge, regulation, or practice of any stockyard owner or market agency, for or in connection with the buying or selling on a commission basis receiving, marketing, feeding, holding,

And so forth.

I offer that amendment in order to make it certain that the commission man is not excluded. I think that probably no Senator will object to the amendment, in view of the adoption of the other amendment to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. On page 23, line 2, between the words "marketing" and "feeding," I propose the same identical amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Now, Mr. President, under subdivision (c) of section 405, on pages 26 and 27, as it appears in the House bill, there would be an opportunity left for the courts to hold that these subjects were taken entirely out from under the Sherman Act. I understand the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] on yesterday offered an amendment, which was adopted, covering that question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did offer such an amendment, and my understanding is that, without objection, it was adopted.

Mr. KENYON. Then I have no further amendments to offer.

Mr. McCORMICK. The amendment of the Senator from Montana, to which the Senator from Iowa has referred, was adopted as an additional section of the bill, as I remember.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. SMOOT and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROUSSARD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on the previous roll call and withhold my vote.

Mr. GOODING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when Mr. NORBECK's name was called). I again announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. NORBECK], and wish to state that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and my inability to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before in reference to my pair and my inability to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as made on the last vote with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce again the unavoidable absence of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] and his pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] on official business. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. STANFIELD] on account of official business.

Mr. SMITH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. He is paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS]. If the Senator from Tennessee were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GOODING. I find that I can transfer my pair to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I do so, and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 21, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amended title reported by the committee will be disagreed to, the substitute bill reported by the committee having been rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the amendments made to the House bill just before its final passage by the Senate make it a much better bill. The adoption of section 6 of the Senate bill as an amendment to the packer bill, the adoption of the publicity section of the Senate bill, section 16, the adoption of the provisions of the Senate bill for uniform accounting as proposed in the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and the adoption of the provision which makes the Sherman antitrust law applicable to the packers radically improve the bill.

I am very glad, Mr. President, that the Senate in the last moments of its consideration of the House bill felt constrained to make these important changes in it, even at the eleventh hour.

With these changes made in the bill, I voted for it.

CONDITIONS IN IRELAND.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to give notice that on next Monday, as soon as I can obtain recognition after the morning business is disposed of, I shall address the Senate upon the subject of the resolution which I have heretofore introduced relating to Ireland.

SEASONAL COAL RATES.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1806) to further amend the interstate commerce act, as amended, to provide for seasonal rates for the transportation of coal.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1806) to further amend the interstate commerce act, as amended, to provide for seasonal rates for the transportation of coal.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn until noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 20, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 17, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, Thou art ever the same toward us; Thy mercy and years never fail; Thy dominion is from everlasting to everlasting, and herein lies our surety for all the future. Enable us to build into ourselves the simple and yet the divine realities of life. Sustain us in the exercise of those fine fidelities of noble practice, and may the very best that is in us always prevail. We ask it in the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE TO ATTEND FUNERAL OF LATE REPRESENTATIVE MASON.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee to attend the funeral of the late Representative WILLIAM E. MASON: Mr. MANN, Mr. RODENBERG, Mr. RUCKER, Mr. SABATH, Mr. BRITTEN, Mr. SMITH, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. KING, Mr. CONNALLY of Texas, Mr. PURNELL, Mr. YATES, Mr. LUHRING, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Mr. LAMPERT, Mr. GORMAN, Mr. KUNZ, Mr. MICHAELSON, and Mr. STROUL.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER. I shall probably be absent the first three days of next week, and I designate the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to act as Speaker during my absence.

REQUEST FOR CONFERENCE—PEACE RESOLUTION.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution No. 16, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to take the peace resolution from the Speaker's table, insist on the amendment of the House, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. PORTER, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. FLOOD.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill, H. R. 5010.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman discussed this with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have been talking with him about it for the last half hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas calls up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 6, 11, 15, 16, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 32, 34, 37, 42, 44, 53, 56, and 57.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On Nos. 1 and 2: Appropriates $110,000, instead of $168,000 as proposed by the Senate and $75,000 as proposed by the House, for contingencies of the Army, and authorizes the use of $80,000 of that sum, instead of $118,000 as proposed by the Senate and $40,000 as proposed by the House, for civilian employees connected with the sale of war supplies and the adjustment of war contracts and claims.

On No. 4: Strikes out the language, inserted by the Senate, authorizing the transfer from the War Department to the Treasury Department of the buildings and equipment and grounds at Fort Meade, S. Dak.

On No. 5: Appropriates $225,000, instead of $200,000 as proposed by the House and $300,000 as proposed by the Senate, for military intelligence.

On No. 6: Restores the limitations, proposed by the House and stricken out by the Senate, on the appropriation for the Signal Service of the Army.

On Nos. 7 and 8: Authorizes the detail of three reserve officers in the Judge Advocate General's Department, instead of five as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 11: Provides, as proposed by the House, that the Secretary of War shall be "directed" to grant applications for the discharge of enlisted men under certain conditions instead of "authorizing" him to grant such discharges, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 14: Appropriates $4,600,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,500,000, as proposed by the House, for longevity pay of enlisted men.

On No. 15: Strikes out the increase of $100,000, proposed by the Senate, in the amount for the pay of nurses.

On No. 16: Strikes out the increase of $1,000,000, proposed by the Senate, in the amount for commutation of quarters and heat and light for officers and enlisted men.

On No. 17: Increases from $250,000 to $325,000, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation for increase of pay of officers on foreign service.

On No. 18: Increases from $1,000,000 to $1,750,000, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation for increase of pay of enlisted men on foreign service.

On No. 19: Strikes out the proviso, inserted by the Senate, authorizing the Secretary of War to determine what officers are required to be mounted within the meaning of the law authorizing the furnishing of mounts and horse equipment and the payment of additional pay to officers who furnish additional mounts at their own expense.

On No. 20: Makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill.

On No. 21: Strikes out the paragraph, inserted by the Senate, making retroactive to October 6, 1917, the act of December 17, 1919, providing for the payment of six months' pay to beneficiaries of officers or enlisted men of the Regular Army who died from wounds and disease not the result of their own misconduct.

On No. 22: Strikes out the increase of $1,000,000, proposed by the Senate, in the appropriation for subsistence of the Army.

On Nos. 23 and 24: Restores the limitations, proposed by the House and stricken out by the Senate, on the appropriation for regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps.

On No. 25: Restores the paragraph directing the sale of surplus horses and mules, modified so as to confine the sale to the number being held at remount stations and posts and not in actual use, instead of making mandatory the sale of not less than 10,000 animals.

On Nos. 26, 27, and 28: Strikes out the language, proposed by the Senate, making $100,000 of the appropriation for incidental expenses immediately available for the apprehension of draft evaders.

On Nos. 29, 30, and 31, relating to the appropriation for incidental expenses: Reduces from $2,500,000 to $2,450,000, as proposed by the Senate, the amount which may be expended for hire of laborers; reduces from $2,900,000 to $2,825,000, as proposed by the Senate, the amount which may be expended for civilian employees other than laborers; and increases from $75,000 to $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, the amount which may be expended for telegrams, cablegrams, and postage.

On No. 32: Strikes out the appropriation of $1,000, inserted by the Senate, for monuments and tablets in Cuba and China.

On No. 33: Makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill.

On No. 34: Restores the limitation proposed by the House and stricken out by the Senate on the appropriation for transportation of the Army and its supplies.

On No. 35: Restores the language, stricken out by the Senate, prohibiting the expenditure of any part of the appropriation for transportation of the Army for the purchase of draft or pack animals or animal-drawn vehicles, modified so as to authorize the use of not to exceed $10,000 for that purpose.

On No. 37: Strikes out the paragraph, inserted by the Senate, making $700,000 of the appropriation for transportation of the Army immediately available for the shipment of sodium nitrate from present storage points to the Savannah Proving Ground, Illinois.

On No. 39: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the paragraph authorizing the transfer of six motor trucks from the War Department to the Interior Department.

On No. 40: Restores the language, striken out by the Senate, prohibiting the expenditure of any of the appropriations for water and sewers at military posts for new construction work, modified so as to permit the use of not to exceed $10,000 for that purpose.

On No. 42: Restores the language, stricken out by the Senate, prohibiting the use of the appropriation for barracks and quarters for the rent of offices for military attachés.

On No. 43: Inserts the language, proposed by the Senate, making the appropriation for military post exchanges available for the maintenance and conduct of hostess houses.

On No. 44: Strikes out the increase of $300,000, proposed by the Senate, in the appropriation for vocational training.

On No. 47: Increases from $35,000 to $45,000, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation for maintenance of the Engineer School.

On No. 48: Reduces from $150,000 to $145,000, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation for engineer equipment of troops.

On No. 49: Reduces from $225,000 to $220,000, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation for engineer operations in the field.

On No. 50: Appropriates $100,000, instead of $150,000 as proposed by the House and $60,000 as proposed by the Senate, for pay and allowances of officers of the National Guard detailed with the Army.

On No. 51: Appropriates $110,000, instead of $150,000 as proposed by the Senate and $60,000 as proposed by the House, for expenses of sergeant instructors for the National Guard.

On No. 53: Strikes out the appropriation of $200,000, proposed by the Senate, for the commencing of the power project at Great Falls.

On No. 56: Provides, as proposed by the House, that the money appropriated in the bill shall not be available to pay any civilian employees an hourly wage or salary larger than that paid by private individuals for corresponding work in that locality.

On No. 57: Strikes out the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, providing for the exchange of Territorial lands in the Territory of Hawaii.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On No. 3: Relating to the sale abroad of surplus military supplies and equipment.

On No. 9: Authorizing the transfer of funds from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to the War Department for the payment of doctors and nurses to care for war-risk patients in Army hospitals.

On No. 10: Increasing the appropriation for pay of enlisted men from $72,678,659 to $81,000,000.

On Nos. 12 and 13: Providing for the repeal of the enlistment allowance.

On No. 36: Relating to the transfer of motor trucks and automobiles to the Department of Agriculture.

On No. 38: Relating to the payment of transportation of employees and materials in connection with the seacoast fortifications.

On No. 41: Creating a fund to be known as "General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps."

On Nos. 45 and 46: Relating to the payment of tuition fees of not to exceed 50 student officers at civilian technical institutions in addition to the number authorized by law.

On No. 52: Appropriating $200,000 to commence the work of providing additional water supply for the District of Columbia.

On No. 54: Authorizing the cancellation of the claim of $18,583.44 for United States property issued to the National Guard of Texas which was lost or destroyed by storm and flood at Corpus Christi, Tex., in 1919.

On No. 55: Authorizing the payment of $50 to an attorney at Berne, Switzerland, for services rendered the United States.

D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
C. BASCOM SLEMP,
T. U. SISSON,
T. W. HARRISON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman what his disposition is toward a little debate on some of these items?

Mr. ANTHONY. I would be disposed to be very lenient in that regard. What items does the gentleman have in mind?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have in mind particularly the pay of the Army, on which I would like a little time. I have not had any opportunity to confer with the minority conferees.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman on that.

Mr. Speaker, your conferees who have had under consideration the Army appropriation bill have reached practically a complete agreement with the conferees of the other body, with the exception of one item, that of pay of the enlisted men of the Army, and the amount in disagreement between the bodies in that item is $8,300,000 and some odd. The amount of the bill as it passed the House was $320,000,000. The amount of this bill as it passed the Senate was $334,000,000. The Senate receded from an aggregate of $2,884,000, and the House receded from an aggregate of $2,100,000.

It is interesting to take into consideration that the amount carried by the bill which was passed in March last and which failed of approval by the President at that time carried $346,000,000, so that this bill as it now stands carries $23,000,000 less than the bill which received the pocket veto. It is also interesting to note that the Army for the current year will cost us a total of $448,000,000; that is, there have been deficiencies aggregating nearly $60,000,000 in addition to the $392,000,000 appropriated by Congress for the current year. So that this bill as it now stands will make a saving for the next fiscal year over what the Army will cost us for the current fiscal year of $125,000,000. [Applause.] And I say with some degree of pride on the part of the members of the committee who have had this bill in preparation that it makes what, in my opinion, will be the largest aggregate saving of any of the appropriation bills that will be considered by the House. I want to say for the information of the House that probably to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP], who brought in the fortification bill, belongs the credit for having made the largest percentage of saving in the amount of money appropriated for the next fiscal year over what the bill carried for the current year. [Applause.]

I want to congratulate the House on the fact that the Senate has met the views of this body on what should be the size of the Regular Army. They have agreed to 150,000 men. [Applause.] So that proposition is really not before the House. What we do have to consider, however, and to which we should give most careful consideration, is the condition which confronts us that in order to reach the size of an Army upon which both the Senate and the House have agreed. The situation is that on July 1, when this bill goes into effect, we will find 220,000 enlisted men.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. GARNER. It has been evident for the past 30 or 40 days that the Army was going to be reduced from 220,000 to 170,000 or 150,000. Can the gentleman tell us why it is that the present War Department declines to relieve men and have been declining to do so for the past 30 days?

Mr. ANTHONY. For the same reason, I will say to the gentleman, that the former Secretary of War and the former administration declined to relieve men. They take the position that the resolution passed by this body fixing the size of the Army at 175,000 men gives the enlisted man whose term of enlistment expires the right to reenlist. And they have been reenlisting those men.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. They have ceased to enlist new recruits, however.

Mr. GARNER. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield.

Mr. GARNER. I recall an incident where, from that well of the House down there, Mr. Baker was criticized very severely for not carrying out the purposes of the Congress, and I agreed to that criticism. I take it that the same criticism applies to the present Secretary of War, Mr. Weeks, for the way he is administering the office of Secretary of War in regard to the discharge of these men.

Mr. ANTHONY. No matter what have been the delinquencies of the War Department, Mr. Speaker, we are confronted to-day with the fact of having 220,000 men to take care of in the Army on the 1st day of July next. It will be obviously impossible for the War Department to make a radical reduction on July 1 of the 70,000 men necessary to bring the Army down to 150,000, which both the Senate and the House have agreed upon. The only question is how soon that can be brought about.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. In a second. The Senate and the War Department contend that it will not be safe to do this until May 1, 1922, when, under the ordinary processes of the expiration of enlistments, they can reach 150,000 men, and the Senate has appropriated $81,000,000, which will be the amount required to carry the Army until that date. The House conferees have taken the position that we should bring the Army down to 150,000 in a much shorter time than that. The Senate declined to come near the House in its offer of a compromise on those figures, and has stood firmly for their figure of $81,000,000.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], of the House conferees, in connection with the officers of the Finance Division of the War Department, has very carefully figured out that if we shall discharge 23,000 men a month for three months, from July 1—that is, up to October 1—with the Army brought down to 150,000 men on October 1, the amount of seventy-seven million and some odd hundreds of thousands of dollars will enable the department to pay the Army for the entire year, reducing it to 150,000 by October 1, and maintaining it at 150,000 for the full period of the fiscal year.

The committee feels that that is the shortest possible time in which this can be accomplished. The Senate conferees do not agree with us. They say it can not be done. We had the Secretary of War, Mr. Weeks, before us, and discussed the matter fully. He is much opposed to reducing the size of the Army in such a short period of time, and believes it can not be done. But the conferees on the part of the House believe it can, and when the matter is reached to-day, when we take up the amendments in their order, it is the purpose of the conferees on the part of the House to offer a motion to recede and concur with an amendment which will increase the amount previously appropriated by the House, namely, $72,000,000, to seventy-seven million and some odd thousands, which will carry out the program I have just spoken of, that of a reduction of 23,000 men each month for the next three months, bringing down the Army to the basis desired of 150,000 men on October 1.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I wanted to ask the gentleman was this: It has been obvious for some time that the Congress would not authorize an Army exceeding in size 175,000 men, and probably would not authorize one exceeding 150,000 men. What has the War Department done during that time to reduce the Army down to the maximum even of what the Senate has required, of 175,000 men?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that our information is that from the 1st day of January to date only 2,000 men have asked for their discharge. It is obvious that a larger number would have asked for their discharge if they had thought their applications would be favorably considered. The Secretary of War tells us, however, that only 2,000 have asked for their discharge. Here is the situation that confronts the War Department and confronts us: Back in January the War Department told us that there normally would be a reduction in the Army of 7,000 men a month at the expiration of enlistments, and that we could look for a natural shrinkage by that amount; but, due to the economic conditions in the country, these men, instead of asking for their discharges, are applying for reenlistment and the War Department is reenlisting them under the terms provided by the two Houses.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the War Department reenlisting them?
Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.
Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.
Mr. KAHN. I think the gentleman will bear me out in the statement that the provision as it now stands will not go below 150,000 men.
Mr. ANTHONY. You mean the amount of $77,000,000?
Mr. KAHN. The gentleman proposes to increase the appropriation so that we shall not go below 150,000 men.
Mr. ANTHONY. That was the proposition.
Mr. KAHN. I was going to ask the gentleman if the amount in the bill which the House put in in its provision would take care of 150,000 men?
Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that if the bill had received the approval of the President last month the amount appropriated by the House would have paid 150,000 during the next fiscal year, but it would have required a reduction in the size of the Army between March 1 and July 1 to 150,000 men.
Mr. KAHN. May I ask the gentleman how he proposes to discharge 23,000 men a month? By breaking the contract with the enlisted men?
Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, there is no contract, the committee believes, that will be broken. There will have to be arbitrary discharges, I will say to the gentleman.
Mr. KAHN. A man signs a contract with the Government to enlist for a certain time. If the man violates the contract by deserting, he is arrested and put into jail.
Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman refers to the contract of enlistment, of which I have a copy here, he will see that it is a jug-handled contract, and the War Department has the option of discharging a man before the expiration of the term.
Mr. KAHN. The War Department has not that right under the language. It only refers to cases where men are discharged for some sufficient reason, or dishonorably.
Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that I have taken up that phase of the matter with the Secretary of War. He has consulted the Judge Advocate's department, and under the language of this bill that is before us the Judge Advocate General believes that the Secretary of War will have unquestioned power to discharge men.
Mr. HULL. Right there, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. HULL. Then the gentleman's contention is that Congress has the right to break a contract by retroactive legislation?
Mr. ANTHONY. There is no contract, I will say to the gentleman.
Mr. HULL. There is no contract?
Mr. ANTHONY. No.
Mr. HULL. When the men have a contract of enlistment?
Mr. ANTHONY. And if there is a contract, we empower the Secretary of War to discharge the men.
Mr. HULL. Another question. The gentleman complains of the War Department having reenlisted these men. Could the War Department prevent reenlisting under the resolution that was passed by this Congress?
Mr. ANTHONY. I think it could have done so. I voted for that resolution, and I would not have voted for it if I had thought that it carried the right to the enlisted men to reenlist forever, and that is the way it has been construed by the War Department.
Mr. HULL. The resolution as originally introduced by myself did not provide for that, and your attention was called on the floor of the House to the fact that when you put in the amendment you provided for reenlistment, and you provided for paying a bonus for it.
Mr. ANTHONY. I agree with the gentleman that the resolution the gentleman from Iowa introduced early in December would have been a much wiser piece of legislation than the one that Congress finally adopted.
Mr. HULL. The Congress provided for reenlistment, and now says that the Army ought not to have taken into consideration our own resolution.
Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.
Mr. MONDELL. I think we ought to clear up that matter while it is under consideration.
By no possible construction could the resolution that has been referred to give the enlisted man any right to reenlist. What the Congress had in mind was that there were certain men whose terms of service would expire, who were so valuable to the Army that it might be well to authorize the Secretary of War to allow them to reenlist.
Mr. KAHN. It gave the War Department in their discretion the right to reenlist experienced drill sergeants, and other noncommissioner officers who desired to try for commissions, but it gave no right to the enlisted men to reenlist.
Mr. MONDELL. The resolution authorized the Secretary in his discretion to reenlist such men as he saw fit to reenlist, but nothing in the resolution gave the enlisted man any right to a reenlistment, as the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has just reminded us. It was necessary, in order to have experienced drill sergeants and skilled men, and to hold the men in the service who might desire to make an effort to secure commissions, to allow certain reenlistments. That is always wise, and in order to make it possible to allow those reenlistments the resolution was enlarged; but it did not give the enlisted man the right to reenlistment. It did not justify the War Department in reenlisting every man who asked to be reenlisted.
Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.
Mr. HULL. I can not agree with the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming, and I call the attention of the House to this fact, that not only did that resolution permit a man's reenlistment but that you paid a bonus to him to reenlist, and that your attention was called at that time to the fact that you ought to strike out the bonus; but the Appropriations Committee of the House, controlling the legislation at that time, refused to permit the striking out of the bonus.
Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield to me?
Mr. ANTHONY. I yield first to the gentleman from Texas.
Mr. GARNER. I understood the gentleman to say that since the 1st of April there had been only about 2,000 applications for discharge.
Mr. ANTHONY. Since the 1st of January.
Mr. GARNER. Can the gentleman tell us what number of those 2,000 were discharged?
Mr. ANTHONY. Fifteen hundred, I am informed.
Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman know why the other 500 were retained?
Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman knows as well as I do that the policy of the department has been to be very reluctant to discharge men.
Mr. GARNER. Let us get that clear before the House. That is my criticism of the department. I am well acquainted with the present Secretary of War. I have great respect for him. I think he is a man of capacity, but I do say that he, like the former Secretary of War, and as far as I know all former Secretaries of War, has been overcome and overpersuaded by the General Staff or some other influence in the War Department, who want not only to keep all they have but to get some more, and while Congress has expressed itself as desiring to cut down the Army, they have not responded in good faith to that expressed will of Congress.
Mr. ANTHONY. Of course the gentleman knows that that situation will be cured by the language carried in the present bill.
Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.
Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman spoke of deficiencies to the extent of $60,000,000 in the past fiscal year. Is the Senate amendment, which prevents any deficiency, retained in this bill?
Mr. ANTHONY. The Borah amendment is retained in this bill, and it is the judgment of nearly everyone who has examined it that it will be impossible for the War Department to incur further deficiencies or any deficiencies during the next fiscal year. If that is accomplished, it will be the first time in the 14 years I have been connected with Army appropriation measures that they will not have had large deficiencies.
Mr. REAVIS. So the Members of the House, if they approve the action of the conferees—which I assume they will do—increasing this sum $5,000,000 may have at least a reasonable assurance that the appropriation carried in this bill will be all the money to be expended for the Army for the next fiscal year.
Mr. ANTHONY. As one of my colleagues expressed himself, the War Department is hog tied by this provision.
Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.
Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Can the gentleman inform the House how many men have been reenlisted since the 1st of January?
Mr. ANTHONY. I have not that information. The discharges have been very few; in fact, nearly all enlistments that have expired have been allowed to reenlist.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. While the discharges have been few the reenlistments have been many?

Mr. ANTHONY. As the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SLEMP] says, the Army has recruited 236 men and they have dropped 220.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. There is a good deal of talk about a bonus for reenlistment. The fact is that we have had the bonus provisions for years, only they were a little different than the present law provides for. Now they get a cash bonus. In former years enlisted men got a clothing allowance and other allowances, and whatever they were able to save out of those allowances were paid to the men at the time when the enlistment expired. Then, I believe, they were allowed to give them other inducements for reenlistment. That is the only way that we were able to maintain our Army; because when work is plentiful throughout the country it is exceedingly hard to get men to reenlist. These extra inducements were held out to the private soldier to join the Army. So that it is not a new thing by any means, but it has been in force for many years in this country.

Mr. ANTHONY. And the House might like to know that the bill, as it passed the House, contained a clause which prevents the payment of a bonus during the next fiscal year. The bill as it now stands repeals the law which authorizes the payment of a bonus.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman refers to the fact that only 2,000 applications for discharge had come in since the 1st of January. As a matter of fact, the reason for that is that only those who filed applications thought they had a legal ground for discharge.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that is true.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think there would be many thousands of men who would make application if they thought they could get out?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think a much larger number.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Has the gentleman any idea how many?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; but the Secretary of War thought that it would not be as large a number as the committee thought.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is natural.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. What would happen if the House should stand pat on $72,000,000? In view of the fact that the department has not responded very willingly to the policy of Congress, is it not a fact that if the House should stand for $72,000,000 they would have to discharge the men for lack of appropriation?

Mr. ANTHONY. They would, and they would have to discharge them in one day if they wanted to maintain the Army at 150,000 during the next year. If they concluded to take a reasonable length of time to reduce the Army, they would have an Army of 120,000 at the end of the year.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Why would they have to discharge them in one day?

Mr. ANTHONY. Because $72,000,000 will pay an average of 150,000 men for one year only.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. TINCHER. Can the gentlemen tell me whether there has been any reduction of the civilian employees in the Army?

Mr. ANTHONY. There has been quite a large reduction. Secretary Weeks informed the conference committee that when we reach July 1 he will have discharged 15,000 civilian employees during the 14 weeks he has been in office.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Iowa indicates that in making this reduction the Secretary of War would have to push the men out of the Army, violating contracts, and so forth. I want to tell the gentleman from Kansas why there has only been 2,000 applications for discharge. The men and their parents write us and want to know whether they can be discharged. We write them and send them the rules of the department that it must be a case of extreme dependence before it will be considered, and in many instances the men realize there is no chance and therefore make no applications. But even where applications have been filed, in cases of extreme dependence, the War Department has shut its eyes, gritted its teeth, and turned the application down and held the men against their will. The War Department will not have any trouble in getting rid of 70,000 if they will let the men know that they will be turned out on their application.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood the chairman of the committee to state that was the desire, either of the Secretary of War or the Senate conferees, I have forgotten which, but probably both, that the appropriations shall be enlarged so that they can by May 1, 1922, reduce the Army to a miximum of 150,000 men.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Upon what basis does the Secretary of War state that it can be reduced by May 1, 1922—by arbitrary dismissal?

Mr. ANTHONY. By the natural process of the expiration of enlistment.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to bring out the fact before the House that the Secretary of War stated that these men had a right to reenlist; that it was a part of their contract, as I understood the Secretary of War; that under the contract a soldier had the right to reenlist and the War Department, observing that right, reenlisted them on application.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Do the House conferees concur in the opinion of the Senate conferees that with an appropriation of $81,000,000 for pay of enlisted men the natural reduction from expiration of enlistment will bring the Army down to 150,000 by the 1st of May, 1922? In other words, do you agree with them in their conclusion?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that is correct; that is the work of the officers of the finance department, which is very accurate.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So if we are to reduce the Army by natural expiration of enlistments and not by forced resignations and forced discharges, then we should appropriate $81,000,000?

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is correct, and if we want to resort to arbitrary discharge, any amount less than that will force it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that under existing law it is not possible for a soldier to be discharged on his own application? Is not that the law?

Mr. ANTHONY. Unquestionably the War Department has always interpreted the law in that way heretofore.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not the policy of Congress to provide by law the manner in which a soldier of our Government may be discharged, and is it not true that in the reorganization act we did modify the law and provide that where a soldier had enlisted, and after his enlistment a death occurred in his family, which required his presence at home, he might be discharged?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a further fact that it is the sworn duty of the officers in the War Department when a soldier makes application for discharge to see to it that he is simply discharged according to law?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. And is it not true that that is just about what the Secretary of War has been doing? I do not agree with the statement of some of the gentlemen here this morning that the Secretary of War ought to be criticized for simply upholding the law enacted by Congress. Is not that the situation?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not ascribe all of these delinquencies to the Secretary of War, and I can not agree with all that the gentleman says. I think that the policy of the War Department for the last year has been to throw cold water on every application for a discharge.

Mr. McKENZIE. The bill that is now before us provides a way whereby an enlisted man in the service may be discharged, and discharged legally, and I know that the gentleman from Kansas would never approve of a policy that would permit an enlisted man to walk out simply on his saying "I just want to go out," and the filing of his application.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. In attempting to get a young man discharged a week or two ago, his discharge was refused on the ground that the dependency was in existence when he enlisted, but the War Department in writing me about it stated that in the present bill there was a provision which, if carried out, if it be continued in the bill, would enable them to discharge soldiers although the dependency arose subsequently. Is that provision still in the bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is nothing about dependency in this bill. The gentleman is referring to a provision in the reorganization act, which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] referred to.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am referring now to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to by the War Department in a communication to me, that cases such as mine could be very readily handled if the provision in the bill when it left the House were continued. We have some provision here about a discharge on application.

Mr. ANTHONY. Absolutely. This bill will allow the Secretary to discharge the Army down to 150,000 men.

Mr. STEVENSON. And therefore discharges will not be dependent upon the dependency arising subsequent to the enlistment?

Mr. ANTHONY. No.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Can the gentleman give us the policy of the department with reference to discharging men who desire to be relieved from the service?

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee knows of no policy of the War Department. Secretary Weeks states that they have not yet worked out a method and plan under which they will bring about these reductions. He stated that probably what they would do would be to refer to the commanding officer of every organization of the Army, scattered as it is in all the countries of the world, for a specific report as to what men of each separate organization they could best get along without, so that probably the men who are of the least value to the Army will be discharged first, and then the men who want to get out on their own application will come next.

Mr. DOWELL. That might indicate that those who desire to get out will not be relieved under such a policy.

Mr. ANTHONY. They will be relieved until the Army gets down to 150,000 men.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a suggestion there?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. A great many men who enlist want to get out a short while after they enlist. They find that the Army is not what they thought it was going to be. It costs the Government from $60 to $70 whenever a man is enlisted, and the Army officers have been disinclined to grant discharges until the man shall have worked out for the Government that amount of money.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, under the present ruling of the department, they are not permitted, they state, to release any applicants unless the application comes within the strict provisions of the statute. What I am getting at is this: After this bill is passed, will the War Department still maintain the ruling with reference to the discharge of those who make application and the discharge of those who desire to be released from the service?

Mr. ANTHONY. We do not prescribe the order in which the men shall be discharged. We leave that to the option of the Secretary, trusting the War Department will use wise discretion and judgment.

Mr. DOWELL. I hope it will.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope so.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Does my colleague know whether or not there has been a reduction of the administrative expenses of the War Department since the 4th of March last?

Mr. ANTHONY. I know this, that when the Committee on Appropriations of the House held its hearings on this bill they were very complete. We went deeply into the questions of waste and extravagance in the different bureaus of the department as they came before us. We know that disclosures were made by the Quartermaster General as to lack of economy in the expenditures of the funds which we appropriate. Secretary Baker called him to an accounting.

In calling this officer to accountability as I say he demanded of him what recommendations he would make so as to obviate these large expenditures, and the Quartermaster General came back with certain specific recommendations, and I will say this of Secretary Baker that just a few days before he went out of office he adopted 19 of Gen. Rodgers's recommendations and put them into effect and from an early date in February when those orders went into effect up to July 1 next the sum of $61,000,000 will be saved for those months as compared with the corresponding months of last year.

Mr. MONDELL. It was very self-sacrificing on the part of Secretary Baker to put those reductions in operation as he went out.

Mr. ANTHONY. When the Quartermaster General called his bluff he did not have anything else to do.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will permit, I do not want the House to be unfair with the War Department. I criticize the War Department as severely as anyone, but I want to read to the gentleman from Kansas a resolution that this House passed on reenlistments, and I want to ask him if he thinks under that resolution the War Department could reduce the men and comply with this resolution that Congress itself passed?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. When?

Mr. HULL. Last February, and the President vetoed it and we passed it over his veto. We put this proviso in it:

That nothing contained herein shall be held to prohibit the reenlistment of those enlisted men who have had one or more enlistments and who desire to enlist in the Regular Army.

Now could the War Department under that resolution refuse a reenlistment?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly. There is nothing there prohibiting them. They had the option of doing it.

Mr. HULL. If they applied?

Mr. ANTHONY. They could have refused them.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for just a second?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman from Wyoming, and then I propose to yield time to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to emphasize the matter while we have it before us and make it clear to all gentlemen that Congress legislated wisely in this matter and legislated understandingly. First, we provided that the Secretary of War should cease enlisting until the number of enlisted men should be reduced to 175,000. Then we provided that nothing contained in this provision of reduction should prohibit the reenlistment of men who desired to reenlist. In other words, if the Secretary in his discretion believed that it was f . the good of the service for a man to reenlist he could be allowed to reenlist, but there is nothing in the resolution which gave a man any right to reenlistment whatever.

Mr. ANTHONY. How much time does the gentleman from Mississippi want?

Mr. SISSON. I would like about 10 minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, there is really but one question now before the House. The conferees agree to all the items except the pay of the Army, which, by the way, means the size of the Army and the average during the year. The House and the Senate agreed on 150,000 men, therefore the only question now is when will you get the 150,000 men. The Senate insists that it will take $81,000,000 to do that. That will provide for an Army during the entire year of 170,000 men; that is, a few more than 170,000 men, on the average. The House insists that the Army should be reduced more rapidly than the Senate would have it reduced. In my judgment, the House should not agree to any amendment to its provision of $72,000.000, if for no other reason because we are in the better and more advantageous position in conference to retain our figures at $72,000,000 than to go to the $77,000,000 with the Senate having specifically in conference rejected the $77,000,000 proposition. It simply means that the House and the Senate make an effort to get together. The Senate rejects it and will require you to raise the limit above the $77,000.000 because the House, having made the proposition of $77,000,000, the Senate will say, "Now, the House gave that and we are not now yielding, because we want $81,000,000." Now, in my judgment there is a miserable excuse given on the part of the Army officers, and I fear it is a miserable excuse, about the difficulty and the leeway required in reducing the Army. Now, we reduced in a few months an Army of 4,000,000 men. Now, what I am endeavoring to call to the attention of the House is this: That if we accept the Senate proposition we must not overlook the fact that $1,960,000 has been added to certain items in the bill which may be used for pay of the Army. I do not know, nor do I think the Secretary of War or any member of the General Staff or any chief clerk could tell, what is needed in some of these items. For instance, longevity pay of enlisted men. The House fixed the amount at $3,500,000. The Senate and the House agreed—I do not think the House ought to have receded, but they did—making it $4,600,000, or an increase of $1,100,000. Now, if the money should not be used for longevity pay, under the provisions of the Army bill $1,100,000 can be used for pay of enlisted men, for pay of the Army. Then below that you have another item of an increase from $250,000 to $325,000, $75,000 increase, pay of officers in the foreign service. There is $75,000 which may be used for pay of the Army. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, pay of enlisted men, an increase. In other words, the Clerk told me a moment ago that the amount of increases of that character here was $1,960,000—practically $2,000,000. Therefore if any of these amounts should be used, and they probably will not, in my judgment, you have got $2,000,000 there for pay of the Army. Now, with that leeway it seems to me if the House will stand pat and make good with the country and say we are going to do what we said we would do, we want an Army of 150,000 men and the Senate wants an Army of 150,000 men, let us insist on our disagreement with the Senate. [Applause.]

Now, my attention is called to the fact to which I was referring when I was interrupted a moment ago, because of not being heard—and I beg the pardon of the House for not talking louder, this is the first time in the House I have been accused of not talking loud enough—that we did reduce the overseas Army; that when all these camps and cantonments were full of men, they melted back into the body politic in about three months. I want to tell you that I have great respect for the Army officer's viewpoint, because if he did not take that viewpoint he ought not to be an officer. But they are resorting to everything on earth to keep the Army from being reduced. Therefore, they are saying that it will disorganize things. I do not believe it. I think in 60 days you can reduce the Army to 150,000 men, and the boys will go home and be melted into the body politic of the country without any harm being done to anybody. I do not share their view of the disorganization which they predict. But the thing that is amusing to me is to hear lawyers get up on the floor of this House and assume the position that the War Department assumes, that you are violating a contract by discharging these men. Why, my dear friends, every private soldier knows that the contract which he signs, the enlistment contract, provides that he is enlisted for three years unless he is sooner discharged by the War Department. The War Department, and it is the law for the protection of the Government, reserves the right to discharge a man with or without reason, if the Government does not need him. Congress has the right if it sees fit and proper to repeal specifically any law at any time. When we fail to make an appropriation it amounts to repealing the law so far as enlistment is concerned. And yet you find men on the floor saying that we are violating a contract if we discharge men or fail to allow them to reenlist.

You hear it, notwithstanding the fact that it simply gives the War Department the right to enlist the men they want, contended on the floor, and seriously contended, that they, the men themselves, have the right to enlist whether the War Department wants them or not. Such a construction as that is not even good nonsense. [Laughter.] And yet those are the miserable excuses that the militarists use in order to burden us with a great standing Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, there are many things I would like to say, but I want to call the attention of the Members to one thing. I do hope that Secretary Weeks will persist in his well-doing and reduce the civilian employees. Mr. Baker reduced them about 40,000, I might say, by way of parenthesis, but we still have 50,000 in the establishment of the Army now. That number looks to me too large.

I saw something yesterday that I wished this whole Congress could see, namely, some marines down here at work on their own training field, a 40-acre field, which they wanted to get a contract to have it put into a training field. The lowest contract to do the grading was something over $100,000. What happened? They did not have the money. What did Gen. Butler, the marine officers, and the marines do? They said, "We will do it ourselves." And on last Wednesday they commenced to move the dirt. And I state to you that I saw service rendered there that money could not buy [applause], under the command of Gen. Smedley Butler. And in the midst of those marines, who had on common overalls, I saw Gen. Butler, covered with dust, amid the trucks filled with earth, with all the machinery necessary to do the grading and surrounded by 3,000 marines at work, not one of them getting a single penny of extra pay and saving the Government at least $100,000. And I told Gen. Butler, "I wish Congress could see this."

You will find it as it was described to me by a young man who came out of the Army. He said, "Oh, I asked to be changed to the marines. I love this work. I am learning something here." He had his overalls on. He said, "In the Army when we were doing nothing we sat around shooting craps and telling dirty stories, but here we are finding something useful to do."

It was the spirit that was in it that impressed me. If you had that spirit on the railroads, you could run the railroads with 50 per cent of the men now running them. And you would get 100 per cent more efficiency, and the railroads would be run right. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I would like two minutes more.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. SISSON. If we did that in all the vocations of life, in our manufacturing, say, you would have a new order of things. Why, if we had the same efficiency in the army of the Lord, you would convert the whole world to the Christian religion in 12 months. If you had that sort of spirit in all our military men, you could end the World War.

The Marine Corps of the Army does not want any civilian employees. They do the work themselves. [Applause.] Now, I think great credit is due to these officers and marines. Gen. Butler was out there with the men, with dust all over him, and with other officers surrounding him, and they were saving Uncle Sam at least $100,000, and are doing the work in a week. I say all honor to the marines. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, as there are 13 amendments in disagreement, which have to be considered separately by the House at this time, I will move the previous question on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was not present when the gentleman from Kansas first presented the report. I notice on page 17 of the bill the eleventh amendment is to strike out the word "directed" and insert the word "authorized," simply authorizing the Secretary to discharge. May I ask the gentleman why that was done?

Mr. ANTHONY. That was done by the Senate. The conferees did not agree to that.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, how many disagreements did the gentleman say there were?

Mr. ANTHONY. Disagreement on 13 amendments.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will opportunity be had to amend any of those items?

Mr. ANTHONY. The adoption of the conference report will not cut off opportunity to amend as to those items.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 3, page 2 of the bill, line 21, after the word "claims," insert: "Provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to sell to any foreign state or government upon such terms as he may deem expedient any material, supplies, or equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment as, or may hereafter be, found to be surplus, which are not needed for military purposes and for which there is no adequate domestic market: Provided further."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield in just a minute.

For the information of the House, I will state that this amendment was included in the bill as reported from the committee, but went out on a point of order made on the floor of the House. A separate bill has been reported favorably carrying this language from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That is the point I wish to come to. The Committee on Military Affairs thought it was entirely too broad to allow the Secretary of War to sell all equipment that it pleased to any foreign country, whether we were at peace or not. They found upon a careful hearing that it was intended only to apply to food that was spoiling, and a provision was drawn to read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized in his discretion to sell to any foreign State or Government with which the United States is at peace, upon such terms as he may deem advisable, any foodstuffs now on hand and found to be surplus, and not needed for military purposes, and which are likely to spoil.

I am going to move to recede and concur with that amendment. We found that that was all that was required by the War Department. We therefore agreed to amend it; and I hope the chairman of the committee will agree to this motion rather than to recede and concur generally.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, our committee, which has investigated the matter, found that there were many millions of dollars' worth of surplus material for which there was no market in this country, which the Secretary of War feels he can dispose of to advantage if he is allowed to make sales outside of this country. I think it is a matter of good business policy to give this power to the department.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Is not that a matter of military policy that ought to be determined by the Congress?

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee has considered the matter as a business policy.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I offer the motion as an amendment.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I merely want to ask the gentleman for an explanation. This is practically the same amendment that I tried to offer when this bill was pending in the House. It is an amendment which was agreeable to the gentleman from Kansas, but which, unfortunately, could not come in because the section which it was sought to amend was ruled out on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Now, the only difference, I would like to point out to the Members of this House, between what is here now and what the Committee on Military Affairs desires is that under the present clause this gives any future Secretary of War or the present Secretary of War the power to sell any materials that are not required in the future. The provision in the bill cited by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] limits it to the power to sell surplus articles which are now on hand. If the words "now on hand" are not put in, then the War Department is authorized under its present Secretary or any future Secretary to sell any materials that may be found to be surplus in the future, and Congress is abandoning all power over it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield.

Mr. KAHN. When this bill was before the Committee on Military Affairs it simply applied to foodstuffs, and the War Department was only asking for the sale of surplus foodstuffs for which there was no market in this country and which could be sold abroad to some advantage to our Government.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman knows that when the War Department declares anything surplus they have mighty little use for it.

Mr. KAHN. Let me call this back to the gentleman's attention in that connection: They put that up to the Committee on Military Affairs on the assumption that they had something like 81,000,000 pounds, as I recall, of surplus beef, and then before they could have a hearing on their bill they sold all the surplus beef right in this country, for which they said there was no market, and the bill as it was finally reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was simply intended to allow them to sell a lot of dehydrated vegetables.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; that they could have sold, possibly, to a foreign Government to better advantage.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman from Kansas says that the War Department probably did not have any surplus material to sell, but that they might need it for themselves.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I said that when the War Department does declare any article surplus, the gentleman can rest assured that the War Department can easily get along without it, and that it is not necessary, for the War Department is very reluctant to declare anything surplus.

Mr. FISH. I will point out to the gentleman from Kansas that the War Department did sell three or four million pairs of shoes at 20 per cent of their value, and that they have just recently ordered or made a contract for 250,000 pairs of shoes at $3 or $4 a pair. I think it is time that we should stop that sort of thing, and if this amendment will stop the War Department from doing it I am in favor of it. That is my only concern in the matter.

Mr. ANTHONY. This has no effect on any policy of that kind. It is not contemplated to sell to any foreign Government any shoes or any supplies at all that the Army can use.

Mr. FISH. They have already done it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think they have sold any.

Mr. REAVIS. They have sold some under the bulk-sales agreement in France.

Mr. ANTHONY. Under the bulk-sales agreement probably in France.

Mr. REAVIS. I do not know that it is apropos of the subject matter under discussion, but with reference to the frozen beef that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has in mind, the War Department did try repeatedly to sell that. They advertised in perfect good faith under Secretary Baker.

Mr. KAHN. That was canned beef.

Mr. REAVIS. They were finally compelled to sell that beef practically for nothing, and at the same time the Navy Department was buying the same kind of beef at 28 cents a pound.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The beef that they wanted to sell or that they contemplated selling was canned beef.

Mr. REAVIS. There were millions of pounds of frozen beef that they made every effort to sell in good faith, and finally sold it at a very nominal figure, and at the same time the Navy was purchasing beef from the packers at a tremendous price. The Navy Department would not buy the beef that the War Department had for sale.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether he does not think that this amendment which he now seeks to have approved by the House is too broad?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; we think it is carefully safeguarded. Let me ask the gentleman what would he do with surplus stores for which there is no adequate domestic market?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will answer that in this way: You do not limit this equipment to what we now have. You give general powers to the Secretary in the future to exercise his discretion about it. It says "for which there is no adequate domestic market." Who is to determine whether there is an adequate domestic market? The Secretary of War makes up his mind and determines it. In the last two or three years in our investigations by our recent committee I have seen so many abuses arising from that sort of legislation that I have become convinced that we ought to safeguard every one of these provisions so that these things can not happen again which have been happening. [Applause.] It will not do to grant these broad and general powers any more. They must be limited and restricted to concrete cases and concrete instances. That is the only safe thing we can do. It seems to me that the amendment on which the Committee on Military Affairs has labored, and which seems to be safeguarded, ought to be adopted in lieu of the other provision.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman makes a very worthy and altogether proper allusion to the amendment which the Committee on Military Affairs has prepared, which affords me the opportunity to say that jurisdiction concerning such matters as this, under the rules of the House belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs and is not a part of the province of the Committee on Appropriations, which simply brings us along to another milestone on the highway of busted rules, that is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CHALMERS. I want to say that I have very little faith in the War Department as a selling agency, and that you can not change the personnel of that agency by changing the Secretary. When we had this bill up before I pointed out a particular case where a truck was sold near Baltimore for $150 and moved the next day to Baltimore and sold for $1,500. Now, the difficulty is with the men who determine that this property is surplus property. It is always some one away down the line. It is not the Secretary of War.

Mr. REAVIS. He never hears of it.

Mr. CHALMERS. It is some one down the line. The difficulty is that they can declare property surplus and make a profit on it. So I think, with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] that this is too broad a general power conferred both for the present and for the future, and that we should limit it.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] that in this amendment of the Senate it refers to any matériel, supplies, or equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment, and this is to be sold to any foreign power. It is an awfully dangerous thing. Matériel means everything, except arms, pertaining to the transportation, supplies, and equipment of the soldier. It would allow any foreign nation that was at war to be supplied at the discretion of the Secretary of War with military matériel which was never intended should be done. The War Department came before us and said that what they wanted to do was to sell food which would spoil, and we agreed that that should be done, and we so amended the resolution. I can not see the justice or the right in an appropriation bill giving power to sell any matériel belonging to the United States to foreign countries and thus preferring one foreign country over another in getting hold of matériel they could use. Military matériel is not intended to be given to foreign countries. I ask the gentleman again if he will not consent to an amendment to recede from the Senate amendment with an amendment as desired by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ANTHONY. We thought we could get a few million dollars into the Treasury which are badly needed for a lot of stuff that is probably junk and has been declared surplus by the War Department.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. But you are giving that matériel to foreign countries.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would just as soon sell to a foreign country as anybody else.

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PARRISH. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how the Secretary of War is going to determine whether there is or is not an adequate market. Can he do it by advertising in quantities, large quantities or small quantities? It seems to me that there is a great deal of power and discretion left to the Secretary of War which might be abused.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the present sales method in the department is testing out every possible market in the country, and if there is a market they will be quite sure of finding it.

Mr. PARRISH. By advertising?

Mr. ANTHONY. Our investigations show that they were spending too much money in advertising, but with the general falling markets of the last year it has been exceedingly difficult to move anything.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that I believe the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] ought to be adopted, because I think the proposition as it now stands is too wide. [Applause.] We have not forgotten, especially those of us who were present, that at the close of the war the packers came down from Chicago and went to the Secretary of War and protested against the sale in this country of any of the meat that was not needed, but that it should all be sold in foreign countries, and how the automobile dealers protested that any surplus should not be sold here.

Mr. ANTHONY. What we are trying to do is to enlarge the power of the Secretary of War, and the gentleman by refusing the amendment is trying to narrow it. We want to get the stuff out from the possession of the War Department and on the market.

Mr. McKENZIE. Oh, any of these men in the sales department will go to the Secretary of War and say that there is no adequate market.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am willing to trust John Weeks——

Mr. McKENZIE. I am willing to trust John Weeks, but I do not trust the men in the sales department.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Kansas refers to the fact that we need money in the Treasury, and that is why he is going to sell the material abroad. I would like to ask him how much money the foreign Governments have paid us for any material that they have bought?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is my information that much of this material will go to South America, and if that is true, South America's credit is pretty good at this time.

Mr. KAHN. Foreign Governments have been dealing with us, and they have given us promissory notes and not cash.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will tell you, we have got a good Yankee at the head of the War Department who can be depended upon to drive a good business bargain.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. May I ask the gentleman if this provision will allow the War Department to dispose of property now lying down at Norfolk in the open, which can only be used by the foreign Governments?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know to what property the gentleman refers.

Mr. RAKER. To railroad cars, trucks, wheels, and everything of that kind. I suppose there is half a million dollars' worth of property lying there in the open.

Mr. ANTHONY. And we have no adequate market for it in this country.

Mr. RAKER. It is going to waste, and we ought to sell the property.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the rules of the House were being observed in this matter, and if a legislative policy like this was still being considered and determined by the Committee on Military Affairs, where it belongs, the gentleman could get the information he has asked for.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to state for the benefit of the gentleman from Vermont that the rules of the House are being observed in bringing the item back to the House for separate consideration and a vote.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is a rule that enables the House to commit suicide in another way, if the first poison does not take. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I doubt the wisdom of this amendment carried in the bill put in by the Senate, the adoption of which is urged by the chairman of the committee. A few days ago the Director of the Vocational Education Bureau was before the Committee on Agriculture and the matter of supplies for that bureau came up. He stated that his bureau had made careful examination of supplies of all kinds and surplus of supplies on hand and owned by the War Department, and it was found that vast quantities of supplies, goods, and wares of various kinds that the bureau is now sadly in need of are among the stores of the War Department and have been declared surplus. Application had been made to the War Department to have some of these much-needed things turned over to the bureau, but the War Department refused, saying that it was going to advertise them for sale. Our committee asked the director to give an estimate of the value of those things which he could use, and if they were refused to him by the War Department that it would be absolutely necessary for him later to buy. He said the value had been estimated by the bureau at many hundreds of thousands of dollars—I think he said $2,000,000—of property that the Vocational Bureau could use and needs. The result is that on account of red tape between the War Department and the Vocational Bureau the department was unable, at least refused, to turn over the supplies.

We all know the experience of our War Department in the matter of advertising war supplies for sale, and we know something of the results that have been reached as far as receipts of sales is concerned, to say nothing of disgrace and scandal connected with such transactions. We all know the property will go for a song. Millions of dollars will be lost to the Government, while the Bureau of Vocational Education will be deprived of the opportunity of getting, and getting at once, supplies that it is in urgent need of. The amendment here approved by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] will permit the War Department to sell all of this stuff, preferably to foreign countries, regardless of prices offered for it. I think the provision is very unwise.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield any longer to the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. ANTHONY. But the gentleman is not yielding to me. I have been very liberal in yielding to the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Oh, I thank the gentleman. Perhaps there ought to be more here to see how gracious the gentleman from Kansas is, so I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-one Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this call 307 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to ask the gentleman a question or two in respect to this amendment. The amendment provides:

That the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to sell to any foreign State or Government, upon such terms as he may deem expedient, any material, supplies, or equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment as or may hereafter be found to be surplus, which are not needed for military purposes, and for which there is no adequate domestic market.

Now, has the expression "Military Establishment" been construed? Does it not include both the War Department and the Navy Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think not. I think as used in this connection it refers to the War Department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But our Military Establishment does certainly include the Navy Department. The War Department is not the only element of our Military Establishment.

Mr. ANTHONY. In all legislation with which I am familiar that term refers to the Army when we use the term "military."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then it ought to be so definitely expressed, and instead of "Military Establishment," it should be "War Department."

Mr. ANTHONY. In all of our legislation in organizing the Army we used the term "Military Establishment" in referring to the Army.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What part of the Government service is the Navy Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. That which pertains to the Navy and the Marine Corps.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But is not that a part of our Military Establishment?

Mr. ANTHONY. In a larger sense the gentleman is correct.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then would not this amendment give the Secretary of War power to sell material belonging to the Navy Department?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think not, as it has been construed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This would give the Secretary of War power to sell "any material," which would, of course, include war material—rifles, guns, and powder——

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; that which has been declared surplus by the War Department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It would include guns, rifles, powder, shells, of which they have more than they need.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In other words, this would permit the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to sell some of our surplus rifles, powder, shot, and shells, for example, to the Government of Germany or to the Government of Poland?

Mr. ANTHONY. None of the material of the kind the gentleman speaks of has been declared surplus.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; but this amendment expressly includes all war material and equipment that may hereafter be declared surplus, and what shall be declared surplus, and when, is all left to the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ANTHONY. Our trouble is to get them to declare material surplus.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That does not meet the point. The gentleman says that none of the rifles, of which we have a great many more hundreds of thousands than to-day we have any need for, have been declared surplus; but this amendment includes not only such rifles, powder, shot, shells, military material or equipment as have already been declared surplus, but also all that may at any time hereafter be found to be surplus. In other words, at any time in the future, if this should become a law, the Secretary of War could find any of those things that we have on hand to be surplus. We have several million rifles, as I understand it, and a great quantity of powder, more of each than we will need for an Army of 150,000. There is no prospect of war. Very much of that material would immediately, of course, become surplus in the sound judgment of anyone.

Now, it is permissible for private citizens to sell war material to a foreign Government even though that Government be at war; but when a Government sells war material to a foreign Government at war, then, as I have said, the neutral Government selling such material becomes itself at once, in international law, a party to the war. This amendment puts no restrictions whatever upon the Secretary. Everything is left absolutely to him to sell to any foreign Government—to Poland or England or Germany or to Mexico. To me this is a power that ought not to be granted to any man even though, as the gentleman from Kansas remarked a few moments ago, the Secretary of War is a Yankee and a man of sound business judgment. I know him well and would not impute anything which could in anywise be considered as a reflection upon his acknowledged ability or patriotism, but in my judgment no such authority ought to be lodged in any man.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the House ought to know what it is doing, and I want to remind the gentleman that there is now on the statute books a law which gives the War Department much wider authority for the sale of these surplus articles than we are trying to give here.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then why has the gentleman incorporated this provision if there is already wider authority?

Mr. ANTHONY. We are trying to limit this authority to those cases where an adequate market can not be found in this country.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there any adequate market for a million rifles in this country? That is not what I have been discussing.

Mr. ANTHONY. He could not sell them if the War Department does not want to sell them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He could in his discretion sell those rifles to any continental European power.

Mr. ANTHONY. But they have not been declared surplus.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But they may at any time hereafter be declared surplus.

Mr. ANTHONY. Well, the War Department would be crazy to declare them surplus.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And yet the gentleman proposes to give the power——

Mr. ANTHONY. We are limiting the power, I will tell the gentleman. If the gentleman will permit me to read the current law, which was reported in the current appropriation bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, many gentlemen of which to-day are complaining against this provision which tries to limit the power which those gentlemen gave the Secretary of War:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized in his discretion to sell to any State or foreign Government with which the United States is at peace at the time of the passage of this act, upon such terms as he may deem expedient, any Army supplies or equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment, except foodstuffs, as or may be hereafter found to be surplus, which are not needed for military purposes and for which there is no adequate domestic market.

The word "hereafter" makes it permanent law. Now, we are trying to limit the authority in this case to where the adequate market can not be found here, and some gentlemen are protesting against the proposition and by defeating this amendment you are throwing it wide open and leaving that act in force.

UMI

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He has power now to declare a surplus.

Mr. ANTHONY. But if the House defeats the amendment on this bill it simply continues this wide-open authority.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. May I have two or three minutes?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, with all respect to the distinguished gentleman from Kansas, the objection to this amendment seems to me too plain to need argument. The question is not what Secretary Weeks would do nor what we should expect any other Secretary of War of good judgment to do. The question is not what a Secretary ought to do but what a Secretary can do if this amendment becomes law. Suppose Secretary of War Weeks should pass away and somebody else take his place. What would the next Secretary of War do? He, too, would have power in his discretion not only to declare a surplus, for example, of 500,000 or more rifles and 100,000 pounds of gunpowder and quantities of any other war material and equipment, but this amendment would also authorize him to sell all this war material and equipment to any foreign Government. Mark that language.

Our Government—not private individuals, but our Government—is to sell war material, supplies, and equipment to "any foreign government."

The gentleman from Kansas directs attention to the words "for which there is no adequate domestic market." But those words in the original act, to which he refers, apply, of course, only to foodstuffs and other articles of like character. They certainly can not mean a domestic market for cannon and rifles and shot and shell.

Mr. Speaker, should this Government, through one of its departmental officials authorized by law, sell war materials to a government at war, it would itself, in international law, become a party to the war.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We propose to reduce the Army to only 150,000 men. Gentlemen can not deny that this amendment would give any Secretary of War the power to-morrow to declare a surplus of 500,000 rifles and to sell these rifles to any other Government. He is in plain, unqualified terms to be given that authority. Gentlemen simply rely upon his good judgment. But, as lawmakers for the Nation, we have no right in a matter of such tremendous possibilities as this to rely wholly on the discretion of an executive officer.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is aware that the Army reorganization bill provides for the National Guard, the maximum of which shall be 800 men in every congressional district. Now, then, when that National Guard comes into being, and I am told that they are gradually enlisting, you will have use for every rifle that is available.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am very glad the gentleman from California made that statement, because it completely refutes his argument for a bigger Army. If we are to have an Army of 400,000——

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It absolutely does. The gentleman's statement that we will have a National Guard of upward of 400,000 men, with all the arms they need, does utterly refute all this attempt to show the necessity for a Regular Army of 175,000. I am very glad he interposed the objection.

Mr. KAHN. I will answer the gentleman in my time.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman says that under the authority contained by this proposed amendment, the Secretary of War will be authorized to sell material of war to a nation that is then at war with some other nation?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Or getting ready for war.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And this country would then become a party to that war?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the purchaser were at war, that would be the result.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is international law?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does not the gentleman apprehend that any Secretary of War who by such an act would make us a party to such war could be impeached?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at all. For this amendment would authorize him to sell to "any foreign Government." There is no restriction whatever. And if the Congress should give him such authority to sell he could not be impeached for doing a lawful act.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. He might sell to our enemies. What would the gentleman say to that, then?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] to recede and concur.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to emphasize what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] said a while ago in regard to a hearing before the Committee on Agriculture. Mr. Lambkin, who is the Director of the Vocational Educational Board, came before the Agricultural Committee on another matter and testified to a thing that is absolutely a revelation to me, and I think the House ought to know it. He says that there is to-day surplus property, declared surplus in the War Department, $2,000,000 worth of stuff, that the Vocational Educational Board is in dire need of; stuff that the War Department is going to sell on the market; that he has been to the Secretary of War; that he has been to the Military Committees of the House and the Senate, calling their attention to this fact, and yet the War Department is going to sell the property. And Mr. Lambkin says that when this $2,000,000 worth of stuff is sold on the open market it will not bring 20 cents on the dollar; and he says further that the National Vocational Board is so much in need of that identical kind of property that he is going to be compelled to go out and buy $2,000,000 worth of this stuff in the open market at 100 cents on the dollar.

Mr. ALMON. Did he indicate the nature and character of it?

Mr. KINCHELOE. He did not. He said it was the exact stuff the board wanted. I can not understand why Congress can not function so as to control the War Department of this Government. It seems to me that when a man becomes Secretary of War, whether he is a Democrat or Republican, in some hypnotic way somebody down there ties him up so that he soon becomes the worst autocrat in the country. Here are these boys with empty pant legs and empty sleeves by reason of the sacrifices they made in defense of the country, now in training in the vocational educational schools throughout the land, who are in dire need of this stuff, $2,000,000 worth, and yet the War Department sits autocratically and declares the stuff surplus and is going to sell it at a price that will not bring 20 cents on the dollar, which will be $400,000, while they have to go out in the open market and pay 100 cents on the dollar for the identical stuff, making an extra burden on the taxpayers of this country for those items alone of $1,600,000. For what? In order to bring the necessary supplies to these poor, helpless boys that are in these vocational educational training places, boys that have been diseased and maimed and wounded because they offered to sacrifice their lives to the country.

And here Congress sits, and somehow, some way, ceases to function, and lets the Secretary of War, at a loss of 80 cents on the dollar, sell this stuff in the open market. That is the situation, as Mr. Lambkin says. I say it is not only a great injustice to, and a lack of appreciation for, these brave boys but a crime against the taxpayers of this country, and I want the Secretary of War to know it.

Mr. J. M. NELSON. Is it the purpose of the War Department to hold it for sale in order to get that sum of money?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Absolutely not. Mr. Lambkin testified that it was already declared surplus. Then I asked him how much it would bring in the market, and he said that it would not bring over 20 cents on the dollar. And then he said, in reply to a question either by myself or some one else:

> We need every dollar's worth of it, and we have got to go out in the market and buy it at 100 cents on the dollar unless we can get this.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In this connection I want to state that after this bill passed the House before and was amended so as to make it optional with the War Department as to whether they should sell to the public, or deliver to the Agricultural Department certain equipment to be distributed among the States for road construction, an official in the department told me that they would not get a particle of it, because they would not deliver any of it to them.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; that is bad enough; but here are these poor boys in dire need of the stuff, and they need it now. Mr. Lambkin says he has been to the Secretary of War and to the various committees and wants them to do something about it, and I think it is a crime to the country and to these boys that the Secretary of War does not turn it over, because he could get the authority of Congress any day he would ask for it, and he knows it.

UMI

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kansas allow my motion to be reported?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will state that so far as I am concerned, and so far as the other members of the committee are concerned, we have no disposition to try to crowd anything over the wishes of the House. If I were satisfied that it was the desire of the House to limit the sale of these food products to foreign countries, which I understand is the purport of the gentleman's motion, I would be glad to see the change made.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow it to be reported by the Clerk, so that it can come before the House? It was not reported before because I did not get the floor.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is not wise ordinarily to place permanent legislation upon an appropriation bill, and it should not be done unless there is unquestioned necessity, unless it is a matter the wisdom of which is beyond question, and unless it is in the nature of an emergency. The provision on this bill is permanent legislation.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will yield, I will state that there is already permanent legislation. Practically the same language is carried on the appropriation bill by the use of the word "hereafter." It is already permanent legislation.

Mr. MONDELL. If that is so, then so much worse for the current appropriation bill, whatever it is. It is very, very doubtful whether it is wise to authorize the Secretary of War for all time, in his discretion, to sell to foreign governments, on such terms as he may deem expedient, any or all material or supplies or equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment found to be surplus. It is an extraordinary authority, questionable under any circumstances. If we are to do it at all, it should only be done after a very careful consideration, and on a bill debated as legislative bills are and should be.

Now, my understanding is that what is sought to be accomplished is the sale of certain foodstuffs. Is not that true? Does anyone deny that?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. They desire to have the power to sell any surplus material.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I can understand what the War Department may desire the power to do. The War Department would like to have the power to do almost anything and almost everything. [Applause.] It is quite another question as to whether we should give them authority to do it. I do not say that this might not be approved by the House as a legislative matter, if brought in in the usual way and discussed as a legislative matter. But there is no necessity for doing it now. This is not the way to legislate. [Applause.] It is very doubtful whether this ought to be done.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. The War Department came before the Committee on Military Affairs and offered such a bill, but it was limited altogether to surplus foodstuffs.

Mr. MONDELL. If we take care of the present emergencies, the present situation, the present requirements, we shall do all that it is our duty to do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that I may have one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas has control of the time.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman an additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for one additional minute.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it would be the part of wisdom for the gentleman from Kansas, with whom we generally agree, who is generally right, and whom I always desire to follow, in this case to accept the judgment of the Committee on Military Affairs, which after all is the committee that ought to decide these questions. It is within their domain and within their jurisdiction. It is their affair. They ought to have the right to say how we shall legislate on a subject of this kind, and their amendment does all that it is necessary to do. It may not do all that the War Department wants to have done, but it does all that it is necessary to do in the public interest. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, this is no new question at all; it is no new provision in the law. At the last session of Congress, the Sixty-sixth Congress enacted into law, at the instance of the Committee on Military Affairs, almost identically the same statute. That is now on the statute books, and the only difference between the proposition now before the House and the law that is now in force is that it embraces foodstuffs.

Here is the statute passed by the Sixty-sixth Congress, at the instance of the Committee on Military Affairs, and it is now the statute law:

Provided further, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell to any State or foreign government with which the United States is at peace at the time of the passage of this act, upon such terms as he may deem expedient, any materiel, supplies, or equipment pertaining to the Military Establishment, except foodstuffs, as, or may hereafter be found to be surplus, which are not needed for military purposes and for which there is no adequate domestic market.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman give me a minute?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, to recede and concur.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to let the gentleman from New Jersey have an opportunity to present his amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield, to let the gentleman from New Jersey have an opportunity to present his amendment, so that the amendment may be reported for the information of the House?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. To be reported as a motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield for that purpose?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; not to lose the floor, however.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas will lose the floor if he yields for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, before the Chair rules, I think the Chair will find that while the gentleman loses the floor, he still retains the right to move the previous question at any time.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not want to take that right away from the gentleman from Kansas. I only want my motion to be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated that the gentleman from Kansas will lose the floor if he yields to the gentleman from New Jersey to offer an amendment. The gentleman from Kansas has three minutes. He will lose those three minutes if he yields the floor.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I ask him just to allow me to offer the motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, if it could be arranged with the gentleman from New Jersey to offer his amendment under a restriction, that might be done, but if he is yielded to to offer his amendment he acquires the floor for an hour.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not wish it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from New Jersey may be permitted to offer his amendment, and have the House vote upon it without my losing the floor, without debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey may be offered and voted upon without debate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey moves to recede from the Senate amendment numbered 3 and concur with an amendment as follows: Strike out said Senate amendment and insert the following:

"Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell to any foreign State or Government with which the United States is at peace, upon such terms as he may deem expedient, any foodstuffs now on hand and found to be surplus which are not needed for military purposes, or which are likely to spoil, and for which there is no adequate domestic market."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 9: Page 16, in line 6, after the words "reserve corps," insert: "Provided further, That pay and allowances of such additional officers of the Medical Reserve Corps as are required to supplement the like officers of the Regular Army in the care of beneficiaries of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance treated in Army hospitals may be paid from the funds allotted to the War Department by that bureau under existing law."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANTHONY moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "officers," where it occurs in lines 2 and 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the words "and nurses."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, there is room in the Regular Army hospitals for about 4,000 patients of the War Risk Bureau. It is proposed that these men shall have the privilege of treatment in these Regular Army hospitals. This language will give the Surgeon General the authority to put on active duty medical officers who are members of the Army Reserve, and nurses who are members of the reserve, or civilian nurses, and to pay for them out of moneys which have been appropriated by Congress and allotted to the War Department by that bureau under existing law.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does not the gentleman understand that if the Army is reduced to 150,000 we will have a very large surplus of medical officers in the Regular Establishment?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. And is it not true that those officers could be assigned to this character of duty?

Mr. ANTHONY. There will be about 150 medical officers in excess of the number authorized by law.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes. Is the gentleman certain that this provision here will not impose needless expense on the Government by the calling in of reserve medical men when there are plenty of regular medical officers to do the work?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; the regulars would not be utilized by the Bureau of War Risk. The purpose of the language is this: It permits the Surgeon General to designate his own men to take care of these war-risk patients and to designate his own nurses, instead of having another bureau send their own employees into the Regular Army hospitals, which would result in conflict, as some employees would be under the control of the War Department and some under the Bureau of War Risk.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am asking for information.

Mr. ANTHONY. I know that.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does it not, however, open the door for putting on the pay roll of the Government reserve medical officers when at the same time we will probably have a surplus of 150 or 200 medical officers holding permanent commissions in the Regular Army?

Mr. ANTHONY. They desire these reserve officers for immediate use. The War Department takes the position that by the time the Army was reduced to 150,000 these surplus medical officers having been assigned to duty all over the world, it would take months to pull them in here to the hospitals.

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand that, but I want to know from the gentleman from Kansas if he is not satisfied in his own mind that while we are calling in reserve medical officers to go into these hospitals there are Regular Army officers holding commissions in the Regular Army who are off somewhere on vacation or held as surplus?

Mr. ANTHONY. I agree with the gentleman. I think that a large number of medical officers could be found to do this work if there were any way of compelling the War Department to withdraw them from the duties to which they are now assigned and to assign them to these duties; but the committee has no power to direct the specific assignment of particular officers.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the gentleman one other question in connection with this matter. If we did not appropriate the money they would have to withdraw them?

Mr. ANTHONY. The money is already appropriated.

Mr. McKENZIE. I notice in this Senate amendment it is provided that five reserve officers may be called into the Judge Advocate General's Department.

Mr. ANTHONY. Three. We compromised on three.

Mr. McKENZIE. Three. If I remember anything with great distinctness I remember the fact that when we were pressing the reorganization bill we felt that we were giving to the Judge Advocate General's Department more in proportion, perhaps, than to any other department in the Military Establishment. I can not understand now why it is necessary, especially when this bill before us provides for a number of civilian lawyers to handle the business of the War Department, that it is necessary to call in reserve officers.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will recall, the House committee refused to give authority to the Secretary of War to retain five officers in the Judge Advocate General's Corps. The Senate insisted that there was a necessity for giving them such permission. We finally agreed to retain three on duty. The reason given was that in the settlement of all the outstanding claims of the Army in France there was not included in that settlement any provision for taking care of the admiralty claims. The French Government agreed to take care of all claims against our Army pertaining to military operations in France, but for some reason they left open a loophole for the French Government to say that they were under no obligations to take care of the admiralty claims that resulted largely from collisions between our ships and other ships in French ports.

These claims amount to over half a million; the gentleman from California says $900,000. They still remain to be adjusted. The officers of the old emergency army now in the reserve corps of the Judge Advocate's department are working on these claims, and the 1st of July will find them still unadjusted. We thought by allowing three men to work on the claims it would be a good business proposition.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will state that the Committee on Military Affairs has recently reported a bill authorizing the settlement of these admiralty claims. Of course, when we reported the bill we had men there capable of handling it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The War Department has the authority to settle them, but the question is whether you permit the same officers to work on them after July 1 that are now at work on them.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Like a lawmaker of ancient days who tailed up every speech of his by the same sentiment, I want to say that Carthage must be destroyed. The Appropriations Committee must keep to its jurisdiction and let matters of legislative policy alone. I want to say that this was a question of military policy which once lay in the jurisdiction of the committee that gave up its whole congressional experience for the determination of such questions—whether reserve officers should work with the Regular Establishment; and if so, where and under what conditions? Carthage must be destroyed, and the rule must be lived up to or abandoned.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I would like to ask if the gentleman does not think that the language of lines 9, 10, and 11 ought to be transposed to make it read accurately—"may be paid from the funds allotted to the War Department by the bureau under existing law"? Should it not read "may be paid by that bureau from funds allotted to the War Department under existing law"?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; the money is already appropriated by Congress, and the War Risk Bureau is empowered to transfer these funds to various other departments of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 10: Page 16, line 20, strike out the figures "$72,678,659" and insert "$81,000,000."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANTHONY moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert the sum of "$77,741,370."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if it might not be a good thing to have an agreement as to time?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have an hour to yield. Is there any demand for more time?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee rose.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire time on this amendment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I desire 10 minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee 10 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KAHN. Would it be proper to now offer a preferential motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is entitled to offer such a motion.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following preferential motion, that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment and agree to the same.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I make the point of order that that is not a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KAHN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 10 and agree to the same.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I make the point of order that that is not a preferential motion to the one offered by the gentleman from Kansas. Under the uniform practice of the House a motion to recede and concur with an amendment will take precedence over a motion to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the rulings are to the effect that the stage of disagreement having been reached, as would appear to be the case here in this instance, a motion to recede and concur takes precedence over a motion to recede and concur with an amendment. The Chair, following that precedent, will overrule the gentleman's point of order. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to both of the motions. I think the House ought to understand the situation in which we find ourselves on this question. A few weeks ago, by a vote of 193 to 158, as I remember it, this House went upon record not only in favor of an Army not to exceed 150,000 men for the next fiscal year, but confined the appropriation to the amount necessary to support such an Army. Gentlemen who have the impression that the action of the Senate in agreeing to 150,000 men, without more, makes an Army of 150,000 men for the next fiscal year are laboring under a delusion that the people of this country will not labor under very long when they learn what the result will be.

It is stated here that it is not proposed to have this Army reduced to 150,000, if the War Department can have its way, earlier than the 1st of May next year, and the appropriation is included in this bill to continue an Army exceeding 150,000 men up until that time, and after that time it will not be below 150,000. So those who are proposing to support the Senate action and reverse the decision of the House made just a few weeks ago need not deceive themselves with the idea that they are voting for an Army of 150,000. I do not know how big an Army you are voting for. You start in with an Army, I believe gentlemen say, of some 220,000 now. It will not have to be decreased under this bill until the very last day of the next fiscal year. If the War Department chooses to exercise its authority to hold men in and not enforce the intent of Congress, as expressed in the provisions of the law, they can go on keeping an Army up to the limit provided in the $81,000,000 in which the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] wants to concur, or the $77,000,000 which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] wants the House to adopt.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Does the gentleman have in mind the very effective means by which the Secretary of War is going to reduce the Army? He is going to communicate with the commanding officers, so the chairman of the subcommittee tells us, and ask them how many men they are willing to let go. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes. Mr. Speaker, what I am about to say is said without the slightest reflection upon the Secretary of War. I had the honor of service with the gentleman in the House of Representatives, and I watched his career as a Senator. He is an able man; but we know that the Secretary of War and the General Staff are not in sympathy with the position which this House has taken and which, in my judgment, is reflective of the sentiment of the country. The country is not interested in this matter of the reduction simply in order to make the difference between 150,000 and 175,000 because of any fear of the Army itself. They are not afraid that the country is going to the demnition bow wows, or that their liberties are endangered because you may have an Army of 168,000 men. They would be afraid of too large a standing Army, but they are not afraid of an Army of 175,000; but the people of this country are in favor of this reduction in order to get rid of a part of the burden of taxation. [Applause.] No man can safely predict that during the lifetime of this generation the annual budget of this country, moving along the lines of present expenditure, with the natural evolutions and developments, and without opening up a single new avenue, will amount to less than $4,500,000,000 to $5,000,000,000 unless somehow, some way, we can find a method of reducing the appropriations tremendously for the Army and the Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I have just made a compilation of the figures involved in the appropriations made and those to be made for 1922, and they show the aggregate to be $3,700,000,000, including deficiencies.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does that include interest?

Mr. MADDEN. That includes interest, sinking fund, allotments, pensions, and everything else that is involved in Government expenditures.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I predict here and now that the gentleman will never realize that bright dream. The people of this country are tired of the burden of taxation. Here is an opportunity to at least relieve it to the extent of $9,000,000 by doing that which the House did before. We knew then all that we know now. There is not a single element that enters into this condition that confronts us now that was not before us when we voted before, unless it be the passage of the peace resolution the other day, and that, if it has any effect, ought to strengthen the position the House took at that time. I do not know whether gentlemen are ready to reverse themselves or not. The vote is very fresh. The facts were all before us then, just as they are now. If I am any judge of public sentiment, then the public sentiment of this country has been growing tremendously in the direction which the House then took, and was tending in that direction even at the time it took it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was it not the understanding, stated by the gentleman from South Carolina who opposed the amendment as to the amount of the appropriation for the pay of the Army, that it was predicated on the idea of having an Army of 150,000 men?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It was predicated upon the idea of having an Army not in excess of 150,000 men, and it was predicated upon going to 150,000 men just as quickly as possible, not leaving the possibility open of letting there be an Army of 185,000 or 175,000 men up to within two months of the close of the next fiscal year.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. We have 220,000 men in the Army now. Would the gentleman be in favor of discharging the entire 70,000 men on the 1st of July or the 30th of June next?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So far as I am concerned personally, yes. [Applause.] And I do not think the country would suffer in the slightest. What need have we for an Army under present conditions, will some gentleman tell me, of any 220,000 men? What danger now confronts us that necessitates this Army? What is it? If we are to have war, this is a mere handful.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Kansas give me three or four minutes?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield the gentleman four minutes additional.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As I said in discussing this matter before, Congress is going to be in session practically all this year, and will meet again in December and will be in session long months. It will be here ready to meet any emergency that may arise. If the call of patriotism comes, this Congress has demonstrated again and again that it can lay aside party divisions and wipe out the imaginary line that runs through the center aisle and stand shoulder to shoulder and meet all the requirements of the country overnight. [Applause.] We will do it again. The division here a few weeks ago was not along party lines; no partisan words were uttered in its discussion so far as I know, except here and there some one may have taken a fling at the former Secretary of War or a criticism of the present Secretary of War, but it was not then and is not now a party question. Republicans ought to be as much interested in relieving the people of this country of the heavy burdens of taxation as are the Democrats, and vice versa.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman's advice, as I understand it, is to vote against both the motion of the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from California.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Correct; and stand upon what the House stood for on May 10 by a vote of 193 to 138. [Applause.] I yield back the remainder of the time.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I have seen repeatedly in this House conditions similar to the one we are confronted with at this time. When the national defense act came up before this House in 1916 and some of us tried to put preparedness provisions into the proposed law, Members arose, just as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] did, and asked, "Whom are you going to fight; whom are you getting ready for? There is no need to do this; there is no need to prepare." And yet within eight months we were in the World War. That war, by reason of our unpreparedness, in 19 months cost the taxpayers of this country in treasure alone $24,000,000,000. That does not take into consideration the lives of the men who were killed and who died from disease; it does not take into consideration the men who gave their limbs and their blood for their country; it does not take into consideration the hundreds of thousands of men who who have had their health impaired and who will be invalids during their whole life.

I have often said that if Congress had appropriated the enormous sum of $50,000,000 a year for preparedness, it would have taken this country 480 years to expend $24,000,000,000 which we had to expend in 19 months of war. It seems to me that in days of peace it is far better to keep our country measurably prepared by expending seven, eight, or even ten millions of dollars for preparedness than have to expend billions of dollars in war because we are unprepared. Now, I do not agree with the gentleman from Tennessee that things are as salubrious as he would have us believe. I do not want to discuss these matters, but the gentlemen of this House who keep informed as to problems that confront the American people to-day know that we are far from being out of the woods. I am not for a large Army. I think within a year perhaps we can come down to 150,000. God knows there is no Member of this House who is more desirous than I to come down to a reasonable Army, but I think it is unsafe to do it at the present time. I think these few million dollars you save will probably cost you a great deal more in the long run than that amount. If men will take the trouble to look at the reports of our Intelligence Service, they will see many problems that confront us, and I simply say to the House let us run along safely——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the distinguished gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. Let us take no chances. If the men are not needed, they will eventually be given their discharges; but until that can be definitely determined I think it unsafe to take a drastic, radical step at this time. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose we had had an Army of 200,000 trained men in the spring of 1917. Does not the gentleman know we would have spent $24,000,000,000, anyway?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think so.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, certainly we would.

Mr. KAHN. Well, that is the gentleman's opinion, and I do not always bow to the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. BLANTON. And neither do I do that of the distinguished gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. Now, I have always felt that if we had been prepared in 1914 when the World War broke out, there would have been no World War, because the Kaiser——

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. I can not yield now; I have only 10 minutes, and I have a good many things to say—the Kaiser would never have taken a chance of this country probably going with the cobelligerents of this country. He had his set-to with us in Manila; he had had his set-to with us in Venezuela; and he found what the Americans were. If he had thought in his heart that we would go with the Allies against Germany, I seriously doubt whether there would have been a World War in 1914. But the war came, as I have said, and in 1917 we got into it. Now, the difference of 20,000 men is not a great one, so far as men and armies are concerned; but 20,000 trained men who can serve as a training cadre to drill the untrained men that will be called from our citizenry in case of war will be worth their weight in gold when war comes.

You want to remember always that it took us 13 months to get our first soldiers into the fighting line in the World War; that we were not ready to fight before that, and if we had not been fortunate in having France and England to hold the line while our men were getting ready the Lord only knows what we would have done. It is possible we may at some time get into a war when we will have no allies or cobelligerant nations to hold the line while we are getting ready.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, it appears that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], with a few confidants that he seems to have, always has some hidden dangers that are going to envelop our country and make it necessary for a great standing Army. Gentlemen of the House, we ought to stand pat and vote against even giving one-quarter of a dollar more for the Army or the Navy than this House has. The Senate has seen proper to add more than $100,000,000 on the naval program. They come forward now with the pretense of standing with this House on the number of men in the Army, 150,000 men, and yet they put $81,000,000 as the pay of enlisted men instead of $72,000,000 that this House agreed to. And the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] comes in with this conference report and proposes a motion here to increase that $5,000,000 more. It means, gentlemen, that the War Department will not reduce the number of enlisted men down to the 150,000 that this House by an overwhelming vote has stood for and that the American Senate, by a vote of reversal of 32 to 36, placed on at the other end of this Capitol.

Do we mean to be deceived by the motion the gentleman from Kansas is making? That is the crux of the whole business. Then every man who believes 150,000 men are ample—and I believe that is 50,000 more than we ought to have—should bear in mind when he goes to vote on this motion that he must vote against the motion the gentleman from Kansas has made here. I take it that nobody will pay any attention to the motion of my distinguished friend from California [Mr. KAHN]. [Applause and laughter.]

The American people are crying out on every hand to reduce this burden of taxation. The gentleman from California, two and one-half years after the armistice is signed, rises up and speaks for great preparations for some future war. Who is it that he is afraid of? Is it possible that he stands in with some of these great international financiers that are scalping the taxpayers of this country and are figuring on bringing on another war? Who is it that pays the taxes? When you come to the last analysis, it is the humble man in life, the great masses of common folks, that are bearing this heavy burden of taxation. The people who are riding in limousines are not suffering from it. I want to say to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that the newspapers bear the report that one of the necessities of life—sugar—is brought into this country and nets about 1.80 cents per pound. It comes in that cheap after paying the burden you put on it by the tariff. It comes here from Cuba at 4 cents a pound. But what are the people who are raising sugar in this country going to do, or the people who are raising cotton, or the people who are raising wheat, or all the farmers producing food and raiment, and all the laboring people of every kind producing output that will not pay the cost of production? What will the folks do who are on every hand crying that their wages be not reduced? What will the employers do who say they are compelled to reduce wages or shut down business? How will these farmers and laboring people of all kinds, as well as the employers of labor, be able to stand up under the increased load of taxes?

It is as clear as the noonday sun that if you keep up the great, big Army and Navy that are staring you in the face now you are going to keep a continual burden of taxation on the backs of the people. You can not start the reduction at any better place than on this Army bill conference report that is before you. Vote down the motion of the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have but five minutes and I shall refuse to yield; and I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks. I want to publish a letter of the Secretary of War on this point—I will not have time to read it—in which he analyzes the situation and shows very conclusively if that amendment is agreed to it will cost this Government something like $9,000,000 more than if we agree to the Senate clause of $81,000,000.

Gentlemen of the House, you should realize this, that there is no question involved as to the size of the Army. That is agreed upon. It is about 150,000 men. The only question between the House conferees and the Senate conferees is a question of $4,000,000. That is a question of whether you are going to give the Army enough money to demobilize itself in an orderly, decent way, or whether you are going to so restrict it that it will be compelled to reduce the Army, and thereby break faith with the enlisted man.

Now, there is no one in this House who has been more severe in his criticism of the present General Staff of the Army than I. There is no one that has fought harder for a reduction in the Army than I. Every gentleman in this House knows it, and I say to you gentlemen to-day that if you sustain the House conferees and give the Army only $77,000,000, you slaughter all of that military policy that it has cost your Government hundreds of millions of dollars to build. Not only that, but you break faith with the enlisted man. You make the Government of the United States a piker; make it dishonest.

The enlisted man is entitled to some fair treatment, and I plead with you for him and not for the Army. He has his obligations. He has gone forth into foreign lands to defend you; he has come back home. He has gone home, and then has again reenlisted in the Army of the United States. And now for the mere matter of $4,000,000 you are going to break faith with your country's defenders; you are going to destroy the Army; you are going to say that 60,000 men must be discharged immediately, whether they want to get out or not.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I have not time. I would like to do so.

The one question is, Are you going to keep faith with the enlisted man? You have expended by legislation in this House billions of dollars to keep faith with a few contractors. I think you did right. I voted for it, because I believe that no government can break faith, either on an implied contract or otherwise, but I plead with you now for 60,000 enlisted men who have gone forth, and who have a contract with this Government. I say to you that they are honest, they believe that they have a contract with the Government, and you have no right in this bill to put in a provision that breaks that contract.

Now, stop and think. You have in the Army in continental United States only something like 150,000 men. You have something like 50,000 men in foreign lands to-day, perhaps a little more than that; and if you reduce your Army by 75,000 men, you have got to take them from the combatant army. You can not take them out of the auxiliary troops, out of the Coast Artillery, out of the Chemical Warfare Service, out of the Air Service. You must take those 75,000 men out of the Infantry; the Infantry that to-day protects your home. You will have nine divisions in this country, and you have probably got to keep them up with 50,000 men. Let me tell you something, my friends. Down on the border you will probably have five or six thousand men, making a division, to protect your homes. [Applause.] Is that sufficient?

The letter of the Secretary of War is as follows:

JUNE 16, 1921.

Hon. HARRY E. HULL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HULL: With reference to our conversation concerning the proposal of the House conferees to insert a provision in the Army appropriation bill making mandatory the discharge of some 70,000 men by October 1 from the Army in order to reduce its strength to 150,000 men by that date, I desire to emphasize again the results of such action.

In the first place, it is clear that no actual economy would result from such mandatory provision. If the Army is reduced to 150,000 men on October 1, recruiting must be resumed on that date. It may be estimated that approximately 6,500 new men must be obtained each month for the remainder of the fiscal year, requiring the opening of recruiting offices all over the country, and it is probable that the expense of obtaining each recruit under this system will be in the neighborhood of $100 per man for the nine remaining months of the fiscal year, at a cost of about $5,850,000. Furthermore, the 70,000 soldiers summarily discharged are entitled to approximately $50 per man as transportation allowances, etc., to their homes. The actual figures are somewhat in excess of this, but taking $50 as the amount, the additional cost of this transportation would be $3,500,000—a total cost of $9,350,000 for this change.

The result of such a discharge upon the Army itself is even more marked. The summary discharge of soldiers who are now stationed in the Philippine Islands, Coblenz, Hawaii, and Panama would be practically out of the question on account of the prohibitive cost of transportation back and forth of these individuals, if for no other reason; and the summary discharge of large numbers of what might be called auxiliary service troops, as, for example, the number of men necessary to care for the coast artillery guns now actually existing in the forts, leads to the belief that these men can not be discharged in large numbers with safety to the plant which has been authorized and is installed. The main loss, therefore, would be likely to come in the troops of the Infantry, Field Artillery, and Cavalry—the combatant arms—within the continental limits of the United States, and would reduce that force to a practically negligible quantity, certainly far below any force which would be competent to carry out the mandates of the act of June 4, 1920, as to the instruction of National Guard and the Reserve Corps, and at the same time be available for any duty connected with preservation of order and the national defense.

I certainly hope that this action will not be taken by the House of Representatives.

Sincerely, yours,

———— ————,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas). The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the motion offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] will be adopted. We inherited from the last administration an Army of about 250,000 men. The Secretary of War has, since March 4, been endeavoring to reduce the enlisted force. I am rather inclined to think he has not had the cooperation of the General Staff to the extent that he should have had in that effort, but there has been some considerable reduction. The reduction would have been much greater if economic conditions had been different. Men have not been applying to get out of the service in any considerable number.

The Military Establishment has been reduced to about 250,000 men. Both the House and Senate have agreed that we are to bring the Army down to 150,000 men. How shall we do it? It is a very practical question. Manifestly there is no possibility of doing that between now and the 1st of July without wrecking the Military Establishment. No man on the floor can be simple-minded enough to believe that in 15 days you can dismiss 70,000 men from the Army, half of which is overseas, without wrecking the establishment. And then if you did it——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman does not contend that it would be necessary to discharge that many by the 1st of July?

Mr. MONDELL. It would be necessary to discharge that many by the 1st of July if we did not appropriate more than $72,000,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; indeed not.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; $72,000,000 will pay for 150,000 men for a year, and no more.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, it is true, of course, that it might have the effect later on to reduce the Army below 150,000 if they were not reduced to 150,000 by that time.

Mr. MONDELL. But the House has not expressed its view as to the reduction of the Army below 150,000.

I am glad the gentleman from Tennessee made the observation he did, because it makes clear the effect of the attitude which he now assumes. If we do not appropriate more than $72,000,000, the Army must be reduced to 150,000 men before the 1st of July or it must be reduced far below 150,000 men the latter part of the fiscal year; and no one who has studied the military situation believes that it would be wise or safe to reduce the establishment below 150,000 within the year, when we have garrisons in Hawaii which we should not reduce, when we have garrisons on the Isthmus which should not be reduced, and when the only possible reduction in the establishment in considerable number lies in the return of the troops from the Rhine, which we hope will be accomplished in the no distant future. That is only a matter of 18,000 men if every man of them were discharged. In order to pay the Army for the year $72,000,000 there must be 70,000 men discharged in 15 days or reduce the establishment far below 150,000 the latter part of the year, which would be a mistake.

Now, I have some sympathy with the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], because a better way, everything considered, would be to allow the gradual reduction to 150,000 through voluntary retirement. But I believe the House is insistent that there shall be a reduction of the establishment more rapidly than could be secured by voluntary separations from the service. I am inclined to think that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] is as far as the House is disposed to go. It is as far as I am disposed, under the circumstances, to ask the House to go. But that far we must go, unless we are utterly reckless of our Military Establishment; unless we are willing to publish to the world that, having a Military Establishment on our hands of 230,000 men, we expect to discharge 70,000 of them within 15 days. It can not be done without great loss and injury. I hope the proposition presented by the gentleman from Kansas will be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit my humble opinion, to the effect that if this House stands by the amendment which was proposed by my colleague [Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina] to reduce the Army to an average strength of 150,000 men for the next fiscal year, even though the effect of that may be to reduce the enlisted strength at the end of the year to a figure even below 150,000, it will not endanger the country and will not, in the language of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, be "unsafe." [Applause.]

I submit, gentlemen, that the argument of the gentleman from California, to the effect that one trained man prepared to drill, as he says, our citivians in time of war "may be worth his weight in gold," may be true in theory, but it is not true in fact under the conditions that now confront this country, for the reason that I have mixed with thousands of men in the Regular Establishment as it exists to-day within the last few weeks, and I have found on the coat sleeves of very few of those men any indications, such as chevrons, that they saw service during the recent war.

I made inquiry at Camp Jackson, and was told that less than 10 per cent of the men now in the service were in the service during the recent war. Therefore there are in civilian life to-day more than 1,300,000 men who heard the roar of artillery, who know the rattle of the machine gun, who know the fiery hell of actual combat, and those sergeants or corporals or privates, who are to-day working in factories, working in fields, and bearing the burdens of civil life, and thereby paying the debts and expenses of this Government, can teach these raw recruits in the Regular Army more in 10 minutes than these raw recruits can teach them in 10 years. [Applause.] The very idea of talking about these men who are now in the Army as being able to teach anybody anything, when only a few weeks ago on this floor I pleaded for many of them the right even to learn their a, b, c's. [Applause.] Think of the idea of these men being instructors of the civilians of this Nation who shall rush to arms in time of war, many of whom will be college graduates. [Applause.]

I think all will admit that in the event of actual war emergency an Army of even 220,000 men will be utterly inadequate. We must of necessity draw upon the civilian reserves for the emergency of actual war. It would be futile—a little short of insane—to maintain a standing Army sufficiently large to do war-time fighting. The standing Army can have but two functions in our country. First, to be that of a police force to cooperate with the State authorities upon demand of the State executives in the protection of life, liberty, and property. The second function is to form and start a nucleus around which a real fighting force may be built in time of war. Military men speak of this framework of an army as "cadre." But for the reasons that I have already stated the present standing Army, with the exceptions of the official personnel and with many noble exceptions among those enlisted men who saw actual service during the World War, the present standing Army can do but little toward training civilian recruits who might be called to the colors in time of war.

The hope of this Nation to escape the burdens of taxation and to respond to the popular demand that there shall be disarmament is in the reserve Army. To-day in the Office of The Adjutant General there are the names and addresses of about 4,000,000 men, of whom there were in the American Expeditionary Forces more than 1,300,000 men, who know from actual personal experience the mode and manner of modern warfare. The average age of these men is now about 25 years, and therefore these men will continue to be of military age for at least the next 10 years. And to talk about training these veterans from the fields of carnage and of death by the recruits who have come into the Army since the armistice is utterly ridiculous.

In the event of a war that shall appeal to the heart and conscience of the men and women of this Nation as justified, I believe that nearly 100 per cent of the men who were in the American Expeditionary Forces would be the first to offer themselves to vindicate their country's honor, to protect the lives and liberties of our people, and to become again champions of freedom, justice, and democracy.

If that be so, this spending our millions and hundreds of millions to feed and to fatten more than 150,000 men in peace times, to maintain men who are merely "marking time," to take men out of productive pursuits and put them on the pay rolls, to take them from amongst the producers and to mount them upon the backs of other producers, would be under the conditions of this country at this time the refinement of folly.

Mr. Speaker, there is going up from every quarter of this country a demand that this Nation shall lead in the crusade for peace, by leading not only in the propaganda but in the practical exemplification of disarmament. Congregations of churches are passing their resolutions. Within the last week I have received numbers of such resolutions passed by churches within my district. These people who make up these churches are loyal to the ideals of this Nation. They were loyal to the purposes of this Nation during the World War. They sent their members to the front and they supported them by their means and with their prayers. Many who had thought themselves pacifists, like Alvin York, of Tennessee, when they got the vision of a great Nation dedicating itself and hazarding its life in an unselfish crusade for righteousness, justice, humanity, and civilization, then they became "militant Christians," and as such many of them became heroes, and many of such heroes are decorated—a number wearing upon their breasts the insignia that testify to a Nation's honor—but many more of them demonstrated their devotion by pouring out their rich, warm, young blood upon the soil of Flanders and of France, sanctified by the sufferings of the millions of those defenders of all the blessings of civilization.

The people are staggering under the load of taxation. They have learned the truth—that it is the Army and the Navy that are swelling these expenses. They have learned that more than 90 per cent of the more than $4,000,000,000—which means more than $40 per head for every man, woman, and child in this Nation, which means more than $200 for the average family in this Nation—goes to pay tribute to the god of war. They will not complain about the payment of the war debts that have already been incurred. They gladly made contribution not only of gold but of broken bodies and of precious lives to the cause for which the whole Nation has fought. But they remember, as they never remembered before, that it is the civilian soldier, called fresh from the productive paths of peace, who does and must bear the chief burden in time of war.

I believe that Gen. Pershing, with the assistance of that great man who not only has a brain but has a warm heart, Gen. James G. Harbord, can by a classification of the men who were in the World War and by a registration of the young men who have become of military age since the war closed, keep their fingers upon the man power of this Nation while they are still in civilian clothes, and working for their personal improvement, and paying the past war debts of this Nation, and contributing to the civilization of their day and time, so that in the event of war these civilians, with their knowledge acquired during the war, and with their knowledge refreshed and their interest revived by short annual periods of training, furnished under this supply bill, they will be able to take their places almost instantly and to prove thus the equals, if not the superiors, in actual combat of those soldiers who have been hanging around military posts during the long, lazy weeks and months of peace, merely "marking time," and learning that acme of military mastery, "passing the buck."

The emergency civilian soldiers do not know how to "pass the buck." That is the reason why the emergency officer and enlisted man in time of war gets the "raw end of the deal." The Regular Army man knows of the game of how to get promotions. He knows how to shun the load. He knows how to dump the work on the other man. He knows how to turn up at the critical time and to jump upon the carcass of the dead bear and proclaim in stagy tones, "Behold the hero that slew our enemy!"

So, I think that we have a right to consider as an investment the training that our young manhood received during the war and to bank upon that training as a basis of national defense. We do so consider the thousands of artillery we acquired during the war as an asset of the present establishment. So do we consider the hundreds of thousands of machine guns and the millions of rifles and the millions of grenades that we became acquainted with and that we know very little about up to the summer of 1917. Yet our mighty military men had been educated at the public expense and were being paid out of the Public Treasury to study the latest developments in warfare so as to instruct the civilians when war should break upon us.

It is a fact, I respectfully submit, that those civilians who volunteered in the Army after our entry into the World War and rushed into our training camps soon acquired a familiarity with the technical side of warfare that equipped them just as well to lead our men in battle as did the four years' of training of the cadets at West Point. Thousands of these civilian emergency officers were graduates of our best colleges and universities, and many of them left professions and businesses in which they were fast forging to the front ranks, and threw into the work of warfare that same mental training, that same fine enthusiasm, that high spiritual energy that characterized them in civil life. The result was that, so far as the technical side of modern combat is concerned, these emergency officers soon, to speak modestly for them, equaled the Regular Army officers who had been spending years and years in military training. It is obvious to any man of common sense that there is no mystery about warfare. It applies the same principles that are essential to success in the professional and industrial world. I deem it the highest duty that this Congress can perform to the country along the line of military preparedness, to encourage the reserve officers and enlisted men. These reserves should now be guaranteed, that upon condition that they will keep themselves acquainted with the very latest developments in warfare; that when they shall be called into actual service in time of war they will be given an equal chance to show their talents and will be given an equal chance at the honors as well as the chance to do the work.

From listening to the arguments of those who are in favor of receding from the position which this House took when it voted an appropriation of money that would support an Army of the average strength of 150,000 men, I gather that their arguments may be classified in three heads.

First, that it would be "unsafe" to run the risk of reducing our Army at the end of the next fiscal year below 150,000. I think what I have already said disposes of that argument and showed that about the only real service of a standing Army at present and under the peculiar conditions of investment in matériel and training so recently after the World War, about the only use of a standing Army now is for police duty. Certainly that is true, so far as continental America is concerned.

The second reason seems to be that to cut the strength of the Army would result in driving men out of the Army and thus in breaking an obligation to keep these men in the Army during the hard times. It is argued that since men can not get work outside of the Army they should be fed and clothed inside of the Army. But how such an argument can have any force when sought to be lined up with the third argument that is used by those who differ from me on this question I can not see. Their third argument is that to open the doors and to discharge within a short period 70,000 men would make it necessary to announce to the entire enlisted personnel of the Army the fact that about one out of every three would be discharged and that all might therefore apply and that the War Department would pass upon these applications in its discretion. In other words, the second argument is that the men do not want to leave the Army and that we should not compel them to leave and should not break our contract to feed and clothe them while work is scarce. But this third argument is that if the men only had a chance they would all leave the Army, and since one-third are to be discharged that the other two-thirds would be demoralized by having their applications for discharge denied. It surely can not be that the men want to stay in the Army and at the same time want to get out of the Army.

I can fully realize that there are many men in the Army who want to get out and that there are many who want to stay in the Army, and I think that the proportions are as about one to three, so that the morale of the men will not be broken and discipline will not be disturbed and the solidarity of the Army will not be shot to pieces by the discharge of the one-third who want to be discharged and by keeping in the service all the others that want to stay in the service.

So that, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there is but one way for this Congress to economize and that is to "economize." We can not save money for the taxpayers by talking economy. But when the chance comes we must vote for the smallest figures. Professional soldiers must come to realize that this country is staggering under a burden of taxation during this period of economic depression.

Reports come to us that this condition is not sectional but is Nation-wide, and I believe it is the "backwash" of war, and that we are suffering now after the war whereas we prospered financially during the war. It was unavoidable that we should suffer some time. The European peoples suffered all during the long, trying months of the war, and they are still suffering. Those in charge of the Regular Establishment must recognize that there is a limit to the paying power and patience of the people.

There must be economy, not only in the Army and not only in the Navy but in all the executive branches of the Government. I was proud to hear from the lips of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] that the Marine Corps, under Gen. Butler, down at Quantico are not afraid and are not ashamed and are not too proud to lay aside their shining uniforms and put on overalls and go out to do some real work. More of such common sense as that ought to prevail in our Army. Recently I found that, under the leadership of Gen. Butler, the marines had taken their saws and hammers and had converted wooden houses built for temporary barracks during the war into really convenient and beautiful residences for the marine officers, and the cost of the conversion to the Government was practically nominal. Those who were about the camps and cantonments during the recent war will remember how civilian employees were receiving five, six, and seven dollars a day, hundreds of thousands of them, as common laborers digging ditches, building roads, and mixing concrete, when that work could have been done and should have been done by the labor battalions of the Army. If the Nation was justified in conscripting the man power of the country to fight—and I think that it was justified in so doing—then I contend that it would have been justified in conscripting laborers to have done this work and to have saved not only money in the Treasury but to have saved the country from demoralization otherwise. Therefore I think that the Regular Army ought to take some lessons from Gen. Butler and his marines. We want to see the Regular Army roll up its sleeves and put on overalls and go out and do some work in peace time and help to cut down the appropriations that are now being made to keep it going.

So, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I think that the House of Representatives should stand by its judgment already expressed. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] in a speech a few days ago reminded this House that it is subordinating itself too frequently to the continuing and persistent pressure from the other end of the Capitol. The Constitution imposes upon this House the duty of originating the bills for raising the revenue, and thereby there rests by implication upon us the duty to decide how much revenue shall be raised by taxation. If it is our duty to say how much revenue shall be raised, then it follows as a necessary corollary that we ought to have the last word in saying how this money should be appropriated. Therefore I think this House should begin to assert its independence and its solemn resolution to say how much money shall be appropriated in each particular case. The Senate has equal authority in legislative matters, but in matters of revenue and appropriation it seems to me that under the Constitution there is a primacy resting upon this end of the Capitol. But, waiving all constitutional refinements, I know that the people of this Nation look to this popular representative body, coming fresh from the people every two years, to determine the manner of raising the money and to say how much shall be spent. The people expect it, and they have a right to expect it, and I apprehend that if we disappoint their reasonable expectations they will be taking a hand in this matter. Therefore I, for one, want the people to understand just how this endless chain of give and take, just how this old system of checks and balances, just how this rule of comity and courtesy, usually results in writing the figures high and large. It is our duty who see these questions to inform the people just where the trouble is and to advise them just what steps may be taken and must be taken in order that the popular demand for economy and for steps away from militarism and for a return to the time of common sense and of reliance upon the patriotism and power of the civilian soldier in the emergency of war.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Can not the gentleman give me five minutes?

Mr. ANTHONY. I regret that I can not, but I have only 12 minutes left. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not care to use the two minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I wish we might approach the discussion of this question without prejudice. It has not been the policy of our country to have a large standing Army; and, thanks to the wisdom of the United States Senate and the citizenship of this country last fall, we will in the future stand by our traditions and not have a large standing Army. [Applause.] It will not be necessary for us to have armies to send abroad to enforce mandates in foreign lands, but we will have an Army sufficient to take care of the peace-time affairs of our own country. I want to say to you gentlemen that it is a practical question that confronts us. It is not whether we shall have an Army of 150,000 or 175,000. I am for an Army of 150,000 if you will make it 150,000 fighting men, but I want you to give the Secretary of War sufficient time to cut out such things as the Holabird motor transport repair shops. I want you to give him time to cut out the repair shops for typewriters down in South Carolina or Georgia, and to cut out your vocational training, and to cut out all of these unnecessary things, and let him organize an Army of 150,000 stripped fighting men. [Applause.] You gentlemen who have been voting to send out stallion operators and to increase the vocational-training appropriations and everything of that kind, the only thing you can strike at is the enlisted man in the Army. I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] will not prevail. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, everybody in this House who has hitherto done me the honor to pay any attention to my remarks knows that I am not satisfied with an Army of 150,000, but I know that I am licked. [Laughter.] I know we are going to have an Army of 150,000 men, so I hope I still have philosophy enough to accept the situation.

If these two minutes could grow into an hour, and you and I could talk around the council table, and if, instead of being long-distance legislators, we were men directly charged with the responsibility for the administration of the Army and the maintenance of a proper policy of national defense, and if we stood where we could not escape the responsibility for our direct action—I should like to talk to you and to show you how it is not humanly possible to reduce an army of 220,000 down to 150,000 in 15 days and have an army left.

We know that perfectly well. All the rhetoric in these speeches can not change that one simple basic fact that it is impossible to do any such thing. What is the use in trying to bamboozle ourselves, even if some echoes of these speeches do go out and bamboozle part of the public? [Applause.]

The day has gone by when an army can consist of a row of men standing up in line with rifles in their hands. The Army now is composed of a great number of units, each so highly specialized that they are trained in their one particular department, and it is the proper coordination of all these units which goes to make up an efficient Army. We can not begin at the tail and chop off 70,000 men and say, "We have reduced the Army to 150,000 men." By doing that we shall have reduced it to a mob of 150,000 men, and that is all there is of it.

It takes time. It takes a complete change of the plans for our national defense, a complete change in the assembly and the character and the kind of the units that go to make up our Army. The specialists in all these different units must be fitted for their particular work. You can not transfer the duties from one of these units to another with equal efficiency and success, because particular and definite training in each one of these units is required. The air men can not go into the Artillery. The Artillery can not go into the Cavalry. Men can not be trained as soldiers in the different special arms of the service overnight. Let us, then, see if we can try to get at this thing in a businesslike way, and let us not do an inconsistent or impossible thing, but let us vote for one or the other of these amendments. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I am opposed to the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and in favor of the one offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], grudgingly, in the last instance. I have been in favor and am now in favor of an Army of 150,000 men. I have voted as consistently as I knew how along that line; but during the last administration I watched and saw the Secretary of War openly flaunt the expressed ideas of Congress and recruit a large Army when he knew that the Congress of the United States did not want him to do so, and I saw him go out of office on the 4th of March last, leaving an Army of 230,000 men on our hands.

Then the present Secretary of War came in and that policy has been continued. I do not believe that it is the fault of the present Secretary of War; he has not been in office a sufficient time to gain knowledge of the many complicated problems of his office. The continuance of Secretary Baker's policy as to the size of the Army is due to the fact that surrounding the present Secretary of War are the same officers who advised Secretary Baker, pouring their appeals into his ears and to whom he has listened. [Applause.] I want to say to you very frankly that if the administration of the present War Department continues along the lines of the last administration of that department, in my opinion, in a year's time it will be as unpopular as the last. [Applause.] But what I have to say about this at this time has nothing to do with that matter particularly, except as incidental to the conclusion I have arrived at, and that is that at this time there is nothing to do but accept the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Kansas. At this time we have 220,000 men in the Army. Humanly it is not possible to release 70,000 men inside of the next three months. So I come grudgingly to the conclusion that I must vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas to allow the Secretary of War three months, or until next October, during which time he can reduce the Army to 150,000 men, as he ought to do, as the judgment of this Congress has been expressed on repeated occasions, and as I believe is the demand of the country at large. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, before moving the previous question and without consuming any more time in debate I simply want to say to the House that there is practically no difference between the House and the Senate, as I stated before, as to what the size of the Army will ultimately be. The only differences is the manner in which we shall reach the 150,000. Gentlemen have stated many times on the floor that it will be manifestly impossible by July 1 to release 70,000 men without severely injuring and perhaps wrecking the service. Your conferees believe that three months' time will permit the War Department to go through the process of unloading and discharging 73,000 men without interfering with the morale of the service. We propose to provide $5,000,000 additional money in order to take care of the overhead during that time. The Senate stands solidly that it does not want to reach the 150,000 mark until May 1 next. We believe that it can be reached by October 1 next, and if the House supports the recommendation of its conferees I believe that we can bring about that policy.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I would like to know why the Secretary of War has not been able to make some reduction in the size of the Army, as he has known all along the wishes of Congress and the wishes of the people.

Mr. ANTHONY. I can not answer that. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the previous question on the pending motions.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to recede and concur with an amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it in order to demand a division of the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the vote would come first on the motion to recede?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote first would be on the motion to recede.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question being a divisible one the first question is on the vote to recede.

The question was taken; and on a division [demanded by Mr. ANTHONY] there were 81 ayes and 72 noes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present; the Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 135, answered "present" 2, not voting 139, as follows:

So the motion to concur with an amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. GREENE of Vermont (for) with Mr. SISSON (against).

Mr. WASON (for) with Mr. MOORE of Virginia (against).

Mr. WINSLOW (for) with Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina (against).

Mr. KREIDER with Mr. HARRISON.

Mr. ATKESON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman from Missouri in the Hall of the House when his name should have been called?

Mr. ATKESON. No, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. TREADWAY. I voted "no." I would like to be recorded as "present."

The name of Mr. COLLIER was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 12, page 17, after line 16, strike out the following language——

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendment No. 12 and amendment No. 13 be both reported and considered at the same time, as they both relate to the same subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that amendments numbered 12 and 13 be reported, considered, and acted upon as one amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that involves how many?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I will say, for the information of the House, that House provision No. 12 merely did away with the bonus provision for the current year, whereas the Senate amendment entirely repeals the bonus law, and the conferees accepted that, so that by considering both and making the motion to recede and concur we will dispose of both.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

No portion of the appropriations contained in this act shall be used to pay, in accordance with the provisions of section 27 of the Army reorganization act, approved June 4, 1920, an enlistment allowance to any soldier who enlists or reenlists after the approval of this act.

The provisions of section 27 of the Army reorganization act, approved June 4, 1920, providing an enlistment allowance, are hereby repealed.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 12, that portion of the bill on page 17 which is stricken out, is an amendment that might be regarded as consistent and altogether proper on an appropriation bill. It limits the effect and operation of its terms to the current year for which the appropriation is made. Whether that is a wise policy or not the House has already determined it and expressed itself unmistakably in favor of it. It was once incorporated into the House text in the way it should stand under those circumstances, merely an act of withholding certain appropriations for a definite and specific fiscal year. The Senate amendment No. 13 goes further than that. It makes an amendment in the form of permanent law, and it cites by chapter and verse the statute which it is sought so to amend.

Now, I submit to the House whether the House ought to make this repeal of the bonus a permanent proposition or not, a question which put alone by itself, one of policy, ought not to be decided on an appropriation bill. It is a question that presents something more than the mere matter of economy to be determined for this fiscal year, whether we shall expend that amount of money or not, because it is an upset and a reversal of a long-continued policy of the United States toward its Military Establishment and one which, if it is to be continued as a permanent law, should not be to set upon the statute books permanently until all the pros and cons have been deliberately inquired into, something that has not yet been done in this body.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. When I have made my statement, if the gentleman pleases.

There were many reasons why the so-called bonus upon reenlistment was written into the law. They do not pertain particularly to the present economic situation of the country. They do not relate peculiarly nor directly to it, but if the House in its wisdom sees fit to economize for this one year on that proposition it might be well enough to make that kind of an amendment on an appropriation bill. But here we set to work, after we have once determined that there shall be a new rule of this House leaving matters of legislative policies to the committees that are intrusted with that field and jurisdiction, and undertake to write into this appropriation bill a positive and permanent repeal of the existing statute beyond the period for which this appropriation bill is written in the first place.

Not only that, but there is another question which may be regarded, perhaps, as subsidiary, but I leave to your good sense as legislators as to whether you would not under some other circumstances, at least, believe that it was a practical one. Just a year ago the Committee on Military Affairs, the committee of this House that is charged with jurisdiction of matters of military policy, had completed the Army reorganization act. That bill they gave one long year of consideration to before they brought it into this House, and they wrote into that bill this bonus on reenlistment. There are several other propositions contained in the Army reorganization act that from time to time since it has been suggested should be amended, but the policy of the committee and the policy of the War Department is that the Army reorganization act as a whole should have at least a year or two of fair trial before beginning to amend it at all. Naturally enough, the experience of a year or two will show whether it is wise to amend it in some detail; but if we start right out now in this, I may say, capricious manner to repeal parts of that Army reorganization act by amendments sprinkled down through the pages of this appropriation bill and those that may follow in the years to come, very soon that complete statute, the Army reorganization act, that it took a year for us to put together, will be riddled like a sieve, and then again, as in years past, nobody will easily know what the military law of this land is. Up to now we have got something tangible, and one can pretty clearly see how the military law stands. Ought we to start out now with amending it by piecemeal and in a haphazard way on the pages of an annual Army appropriation bill? I believe your good judgment would not sanction that kind of a thing, and plainly it is contrary to the spirit of the very rule we adopted separating the jurisdiction of the appropriating committee and the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I will be very glad to do so.

Mr. LITTLE. How long has this been in force in the Army?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I can not give you the number of years.

Mr. LITTLE. About how many?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. About a dozen.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the department seek to have this embodied?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know now what the department wants to do with it. I know at the time it was considered there were many phases of the general situation that commended it to the committee.

Mr. LITTLE. Which side of this do you want? Are you for abolishing the bonus? I did not hear the gentleman, because he looked the other way all the time.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Sometimes it is a relief to people not to have me look at them. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. It is a great pleasure to hear the gentleman. I do not say this in jest at all.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not think the gentleman could intentionally make a joke.

Mr. LITTLE. I am not joking now. What I am trying to find out——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Let us get to it.

Mr. LITTLE. I wanted to know if you want the bonus abolished. I will say again that I had some regard for the gentleman's opinion when we began. Before we get through I do not know whether I will care what his opinion is.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That will not disturb me particularly. I want to say this, that if the gentleman will strip facetia from his question and get down to the facts I have tried to set before him during the afternoon, before his hearing was restored, it might be proper to have the temporary repeal of the bonus in view of the present economic situation. Other gentleman heard me say that.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, the conferees felt it was wiser to adopt the Senate provision absolutely repealing the bonus provision on account of the fact that the fear was expressed by lawyers in the Judge Advocate's Department that unless that were done, if we allowed the bonus provision to remain on the statute books we might be put in the position of refusing to appropriate this year to pay the bonus and yet have every man put in a claim the following year for the $90 bonus. In order to make it clear that there could not by any possibility be any comeback and a vast number of claims piled up against the Government for a bonus, we thought the short way out would be a repeal of the act. There is no longer any necessity for it, and it ought to be wiped off the statute books. We do not intend to pay the bonus as long as men will enlist freely in the Army.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Did the committee conduct hearings and find out the amount of these claims?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. We shall save $1,800,000 a year.

Mr. MILLER. Whose figures are those?

Mr. ANTHONY. Those are Army figures. We talked with the Secretary of War and with The Adjutant General, and we had a number of officers before us.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is this adopted from a particular necessity for a temporary let-up on the bonus this year? Does the gentleman think that as legislators it is a good policy for us to begin to riddle a statute which is the fundamental act of the Army by means of these little pepper-box amendments?

Mr. ANTHONY. As the gentleman knows, the committee was entirely agreeable to repealing it just for this year, until it was brought to our attention that if we allowed it to remain on the statute books and not repealed it would run into a lot of claims from enlisted men, and we thought it ought to be made clear.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think we ought to make ourselves clear, and I think it ought to be made clear that now, with our eyes wide open, we are beginning to make haphazard amendments to the organic act governing the Army in a way that we would not do with respect to other affairs, in a way we would not follow if we were to sit down coolly and take up a matter of business at our own private tables in regard to our own private affairs. Then we would not do things in that way. These are the little foxes that spoil the vines.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I thought I had moved to recede and concur.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. Did I understand the gentleman from Kansas to say that the bonus authorized by the act of June 4, 1920, is repealed for next year? This is a permanent repeal of the act, is it not?

Mr. ANTHONY. The language is not as positive in the House provision as the language of the Senate, under which there would be no doubt whatever about the intention of Congress.

Mr. MILLER. I ask the gentleman from Kansas if the act of June 4, 1920, section 27, is to be repealed for one year?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it is a permanent repeal.

Mr. MILLER. It is to be a permanent repeal?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. It gets rid of the bonus forever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments numbered 12 and 13, the two amendments being considered as one amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 36: Page 35, line 24, insert the following: "or to dispose of by transfer to the Department of Agriculture under existing laws, for its own use and the use of the several States, in road work and maintenance of roads."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 36.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I thought amendment No. 14 was in disagreement. That is in regard to longevity pay.

Mr. ANTHONY. No. No. 14 was adopted in the conference report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I got the impression from the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] this morning that that was in disagreement.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield five minutes to me on this item?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

UMI

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman from Kansas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, if I remember correctly, when this bill was originally reported out of the House committee it provided for the transfer of this equipment to the Department of Agriculture, but was amended on the floor of the House so as to provide simply for the sale of it. The amendment in which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] has moved to concur places it in the alternative, either to sell certain equipment, motor trucks, and automobiles, or to transfer same to the Department of Agriculture. Now, we have existing law authorizing and directing the War Department to declare surplus equipment, and to transfer it to the Department of Agriture to be distributed among the different States to be used for road-construction purposes. Under that authorization, however, only a comparatively small quantity of equipment has been transferred, and I am advised by the officials in the Bureau of Public Roads that they have had very great difficulty in obtaining a sufficient amount of equipment. In order to obtain any more of such equipment, it is apparently necessary to adopt a provision directing the War Department to transfer a specific number of trucks and other equipment to the Agricural Department to be distributed among the different States.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman is mistaken in saying there has been but little equipment transferred. There have been 29,000 trucks transferred from the War Department to the Department of Roads and distributed to the States.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I did not know there had been that much, but I am advised by officials in the Bureau of Public Roads that they now have pending numerous applications from various State highway commissions for additional equipment, which they are unable to fill because they are unable to get the equipment from the War Department. The Government has very properly entered upon a program—I trust a fixed policy—of Federal aid in highway construction in conjunction with the various States. The Government has contributed and is now contributing a large amount of money in the way of Federal aid to road construction.

These trucks are needed in that construction; and if they are transferred to the various highway commissions they can use them most advantageously. On the other hand, if the War Department officials are permitted to sell this equipment, which they will be under the bill as it stands or as it will read if the motion made by the gentleman from Kansas be adopted—that is, leaving it optional as to whether the War Department shall sell the trucks or transfer them to the Department of Agriculture—the State highway commissions will not get that equipment. The Agricultural Department will not get it, but it will be sold at a great sacrifice. It will doubtless be sold at 20 cents on the dollar, and then the different highway commissions, acting in conjunction with the Government in their road construction, will be required to go into the market and pay full price for similar equipment to be used by them. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas to prefer a request for unanimous consent that I be permitted to offer this amendment without the gentleman yielding the floor.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that I would not like to do that.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The amendment that I have in mind is simply to leave it as it originally was.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman leaves it as the House passed it, the House directed the Secretary of War to sell all this equipment.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No; I mean as originally reported out of the gentleman's committee before it was amended in the House. In other words, my amendment would simply direct the transfer of this equipment to the Department of Agriculture, omitting the option to sell.

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee would feel itself obliged to follow the direction of the House.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. That being so, I ask that the gentleman give the House an opportunity to vote on my amendment without the gentleman yielding the floor. If the House is in favor of it, it will so vote, and if opposed, will so vote; and the gentleman says he will not oppose the will of the House. I regret that the gentleman is unwilling for my amendment to be offered and voted upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to recede and concur in Senate amendment numbered 36.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 38: Page 36, line 24, after the word "purposes," insert: "And provided further, That hereafter the cost of transportation of civilian employees and of materials in connection with the construction or maintenance of seacoast fortifications, or the acquisition of land therefor, by the Engineer Department, or with the manufacturing and purchase activities of the Ordnance Department and the Chemical Warfare Service, shall be charged to the appropriations for the work in connection with which such transportation charges are incurred."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, heretofore the expenses of those officers have been paid out of the item for transportation of the Army; but the comptroller has recently disapproved of such payments, and the committee thought it was to the interest of good business that the appropriations should be charged directly with all expenses connected with their administration. So therefore this language will permit these expenses to be charged to the appropriations which Congress specifies.

I move to recede and concur in the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas offers a motion to recede and concur in Senate amendment 38.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 41: "Provided further, That all the money hereinbefore designated under the title 'Subsistence of the Army,' 'Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps,' 'Incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps,' 'Transportation of the Army and its supplies,' 'Water and sewers at military posts,' 'Clothing and camp and garrison equipage,' shall be disbursed and accounted for, except as specifically limited, as 'General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps,' and for that purpose shall constitute one fund."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment 41 and agree, with an amendment:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANTHONY moves to recede from the disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That there may be transferred during the fiscal year 1922 from the appropriations contained herein for 'Subsistence of the Army,' 'Regular supplies, Quartermaster Corps,' 'Incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps,' 'Water and sewers at military posts,' and 'Clothing and camp and garrison equipage' to the appropriation for 'Transportation of the Army and its supplies' such amounts as may be necessary."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, the language of the Senate amendment would have made all of these appropriations interchangeable. The House did not think that was wise. We all recognize the fact that in the discharge of 70,000 enlisted men between now and October 1 there will be a considerable expense. It has been estimated that for every soldier discharged in the continental United States we have to pay, on an average, $55 travel pay. That means that we will have to pay $3,500,000 from some place to pay the travel of these discharged men. We figured that possibly the decrease of the various items for the support of the Quartermaster's Department might save that amount, and if they save that amount the money can be applied to the transportation of these men to their homes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on receding and concurring in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next amendment in disagreement.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments 45 and 46 may be considered together, as they both refer to the same proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that Senate amendments 45 and 46 may be considered together and voted upon as one amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the reasoir for his request?

Mr. ANTHONY. The present law permits them to send not more than 2 per cent to any of these institutions for instruction. They have the authority to do that without any special act, but in the Engineer Corps we find a large number of young officers graduated from West Point during the war without having completed the full course. In order that they may be brought up to the full standard which the Army requires in the Engineer Corps, they want to send 50 young men to the Boston Tech or the Rensselaer Polytechnic schools and one or two other institutions, so that they may have this education, and it will require more than the 2 per cent authorization. The Engineer Corps has agreed to accept a reduction for the supplies of the Engineer Corps for the amount which would be required, so that it will be no extra expense to the Government beyond the original appropriation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand that the two amendments are directly connected, and that each is necessary to the other?

Mr. ANTHONY. The two are directly connected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that the two amendments, Senate amendments 45 and 46, be considered and voted on as one amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the two amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 45: Page 55, line 21, after the word "of," insert the words "not to exceed 50."

Senate amendment 46: Page 55, line 22, after the word "institutions," insert the following: "in addition to the 2 per cent of commissioned officers authorized to attend technical, professional, and other educational institutions as provided for in section 127a of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920."

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say again that Carthage must be destroyed. Here is another question of military policy being determined by the Appropriations Committee—the education of officers.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in Senate amendments 45 and 46.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur in Senate amendments 45 and 46.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next Senate amendment disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 52: For the preparation of plans, the initiation of work, including the employment of all necessary engineering, technical, clerical, and other services, and for any and every purpose connected therewith, for an increased water supply for the District of Columbia, in accordance with Potomac project "E" described in the report submitted by Maj. M. C. Tyler, Corps of Engineers, $200,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That 60 per cent of this sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and 40 per cent from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. May I make a short statement first, and then I shall yield. This is the same provision that was agreed to by the House in the last appropriation bill which we passed in March and which failed to become a law. This time the Senate had two propositions which it asked the House conferees to take over respecting water supply and water power in the District of Columbia. One is amendment No. 52, which is now before the House, for the augmentation of the District water supply, and there are many arguments to be made in its favor. The conferees carefully considered that, and we believed it was our duty to again present the matter to the House for its decision. So far as the water-power proposition is concerned, the conferees were unanimous in their opposition to its inclusion in the bill, believing there should be opportunity for further study and inquiry on the part of committees of the House.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if you were to go to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and ask him about the power project that was in this bill, or if you were to go to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] and ask him about it each would tell you that that power project is simply out of the question, that the House ought not to consider it for a moment, and yet they bring back to the House the other provision known as the water-project provision to appropriate the initial sum of $200,000, which, according to the report of Maj. Tyler on the proposition, means ultimately an expenditure of at least $9,523,000, and, coupled with the power, it may run up to $60,000,000.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. These two projects are inseparable, the water project and the power project. They are practically the same project, because out of the power project we expect to get the increased water supply. The proponents of the proposition know that if they can ever get Congress to appropriate $200,000 and start the matter they will get both projects.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. The gentleman can get all of the time he wants.

Mr. MADDEN. Then the gentleman does not want to answer a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure the gentleman will get me more time if I wish it. I yield to the very distinguished gentleman from Chicago.

Mr. MADDEN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he thinks that the statement he makes to the effect that you can not separate the water supply and the water-power project has any basis in fact?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will read this document with Maj. Tyler's report in it he will see that the two propositions are almost inseparable.

Mr. MADDEN. One further question. Does the gentleman think it is necessary to have a water-power project developed in order to get a water supply?

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know how they are going to get the water supply? They are fixing to put two dams on the Potomac River, one at the Chain Bridge and another at Great Falls. That makes the power and it impounds the water, and out of that impounded water we are to get the water supply for the District of Columbia. Maj. Tyler says that ultimately the water alone is to cost $9,523,000, and coupled with the power project it is going to cost $44,000,000 at least, and that is in his report in this book, and it may cost $60,000,000. We went all through the war, from April 6, 1917, until after the armistice was signed, with at least 100,000 transient people in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia—at least 100,000 people more than we have to-day in this city—and not one single time did we ever get short of water. You can go into almost every house of any size right now in the District of Columbia and you will find water flowing out of leaking hydrants, with no attempt made to stop the waste or to conserve the water. If you could save the water that is wasted in this District every day, you would have enough almost to care for a large sized city. In this report it is said they hope ultimately to have a city here of 1,200,000 people, and that they must provide the water supply. We had plenty of water during the war when we had a big crowd of people here, and we have plenty of water now. The Government of the United States paid every single dollar for the expenditure that went to build the present water conduit in the city. Not one dollar was put up by the inhabitants of the District of Columbia. The people of the United States own that water conduit, and yet these people living in the District of Columbia are clamoring through the press every day to the effect that the Government ought to pay for the water it uses in its public buildings, as if the Government did not own the water in the first place.

It is the Government's water proposition, and the people here are using it now at a very low rate. I dare say you can search the United States to-day and you can not find a city of 437,000 people anywhere else in the United States where they have as cheap water rates as they have here.

Mr. MADDEN. I can find the gentleman one with 3,000,000 of people where the water rate is 25 per cent cheaper than it is here.

Mr. BLANTON. In Chicago?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the first cheap thing I have ever heard of in Chicago.

Mr. MADDEN. Nevertheless it is there.

Mr. BLANTON. It is just a question of whether we are going to embark on a proposition that ultimately will cost at least $44,000,000, and maybe $60,000,000. Here is Maj. Tyler's estimate on this water project alone:

Potomac project E.

Intake gatehouse at Great Falls, complete	$123,000
Tunnel between Great Falls and Anglers' Club (including right of way)	962,000
Conduit (9 feet in diameter) between Anglers' Club and Dalecarlia Hill tunnel (reinforced concrete)	2,370,000
Dalecarlia Hill tunnel between conduit and Dalecarlia Reservoir	90,000
Gatehouse at Dalecarlia Reservoir inlet	106,000
Filtration plant at Dalecarlia Reservoir and pumping plant	1,821,000
Steam power plant at Dalecarlia Reservoir	499,000
Hydroelectric power plant	296,000
Distribution piping and tunnel connecting city mains and District of Columbia distribution reservoir	1,300,000
Distribution reservoir at Idaho Avenue	714,000
Total	8,281,000
Engineering and contingencies, 15 per cent	1,242,000
Grand total	9,523,000

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands a division of the question.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Kansas explain what became of amendment No. 53, which is the next one?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate receded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question being divisible, the question occurs upon the motion to recede.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I asked for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question has been divided, and we are voting upon the motion to recede.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-nine Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. It is an automatic vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the House has not divided.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair put both the affirmative and negative and stated that the ayes had it, and I made the point of order that there was no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House had not divided.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 108, noes 3.

So the call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 256 Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Texas to recede——

Mr. BLANTON. No, Mr. Speaker; I do not want to recede. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not move to recede. I just asked for a division. I am against receding.

Mr. ANTHONY. I moved to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is correct; the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to recede, the question having been divided.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the ayes are 142 and the noes are 38.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because there is no quorum present, and I make that point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas objects to the vote because there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the roll call just disclosed a quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman knows that the Members have gone home.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] makes the point of order that the call of the House just disclosed a quorum, no business having intervened. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will refresh his memory he will find the rules provide that is where no quorum appears, and the gentleman makes the point of order on that. I think the language of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was not a general point of no quorum, but he made the point of order on the vote and challenged that vote.

Mr. BLANTON. I objected to it, and put it in parliamentary language, according to the rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no escape from the language of the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and seventeen Members are present, a quorum.

So the motion to recede was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to concur.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 162, noes 31.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman objects to the vote because there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and sixteen Members are present, a quorum.

So the motion to concur was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment standing in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 54: On page 70, after line 11, insert:
"The War Department is hereby directed to cancel and abandon the claim in the sum of $18,583.44 for United States property issued to the National Guard of Texas and lost, damaged, and destroyed during and immediately after the storm and flood at Corpus Christi, Tex., and surrounding country in September, 1919, the property having been furnished for relief of the civilian population."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 55: Page 70, after line 18, insert:
"That the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to pay to Emil Hugli, an attorney of Berne, Switzerland, the sum of $50 as compensation for services rendered the United States at the request of an officer of the United States."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield.

Mr. DALLINGER. I want to take this opportunity, the last one I will have, to ask a question of the gentleman from Kansas in regard to amendment No. 56, page 92. I understand by the report that the Senate conferees receded from that amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. They did.

Mr. DALLINGER. So there is no opportunity for a vote on it. I understand that under the provision as it will be in the bill the officers in charge of the arsenals are simply restricted from paying more to any employee than is paid in private establishments, and nothing said about the average of the establishments in the neighborhood. There is nothing in the language to prevent them paying very much less. As the law is and as the regulations are now, the wages in the arsenals are fixed by the wage board, which takes the average wage paid in similar establishments in the vicinity. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas if it was the intention of the committee in leaving the law the way it is now in the bill to have the employees of the arsenals receive less than they receive in private establishments?

Mr. ANTHONY. Not at all. The committee does not expect there would be anyone connected with the War Department who would so construe this language. They undoubtedly would take the general average.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate resolution 94.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON, late a Representative from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the presiding officer, to join the committee appointed by the House of Representatives, to take order for the superintending of the funeral of Mr. MASON at Chicago, Ill.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 2499. An act to provide for the acquisition by the United States of private rights of fishery in and about Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii; and

H. J. Res. 82. Joint resolution ratifying the reestablishment of the boundary line between the States of Pennsylvania and Delaware.

The message also announced that pursuant to Senate resolution 94, agreed to June 16, 1921, the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. MCKINLEY, Mr. KENYON, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. CARAWAY, and Mr. HEFLIN a committee on the part of the Senate to join the committee appointed by the House of Representatives to take order for the superintending of the funeral of Mr. MASON at Chicago, Ill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HAYS, for seven days, on account of important business.

To Mr. OSBORNE, for Monday, June 20, 1921, on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, June 20, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee that after the rest and the worship of yesterday we can assume the duties that belong to this high estate and ask from Thee guidance and help in every form of responsibility. The Lord bless us and cause His face to shine upon us, upon our land, upon the President and his official Cabinet, and all in authority. We ask in Jesus name. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to sundry amendments of the Senate and concurred therein; that the House had receded from its disagreement to sundry amendments of the Senate and concurred therein each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented resolutions of Ishpeming Lodge, No. 314, Free and Accepted Masons, of Ishpeming; the Cadillac Rotary Club, of Cadillac; Monitor Lodge, No. 163, Order of Vosa, of Ishpeming; Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Ishpeming; and Ahmeek Lodge, No. 150, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Ishpeming, all in the State of Michigan, favoring the enactment of legislation providing adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Dimondale, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WARREN presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from P. J. Quealy, chairman of a meeting of coal operators of southern Wyoming, dated North Kemmerer, Wyo., June 17, 1921, remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill No. 1807, to aid in stabilizing the coal industry, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS presented petitions of the boards of commissioners of roads and revenues of Morgan, Richmond, and Thomas Counties, Ga., favoring the enactment of the so-called Dowell bill, to aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. MOSES presented resolutions of the pastor and members and friends of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Conway; the congregation of the South Congregational Church, of Concord; sundry members and attendants of the Congregational Church of Epping; and the annual meeting of the South Division of the Merrimack Association of Congregational Churches held in Webster, June 2, 1921, all in the State of New Hampshire, favoring the calling of an international disarmament conference by the United States, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KING. I present a resolution adopted June 6, 1921, by a committee composed of A. L. Ayres, F. E. Kendrick, C. E. Ward, H. F. Gear, Peter Mundy, George Brewster, and James Francis, of the Protestant and Methodist Episcopal Churches of Eureka, Utah, in joint conference assembled, favoring the enactment of legislation requesting the President of the United States to call an international disarmament conference to meet in Washington, D. C. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER (for Mr. LADD) presented a resolution of the Women's Auxiliary, P. F. Sczygiel Post, of Marion, N. Dak., favoring the enactment of legislation providing adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also (for Mr. LADD) presented a resolution of the Women's Nonpartisan League Club, No. 291, of Blue Hill, N. Dak., favoring the calling of an international disarmament conference by the President and opposing the making of any further military appropriations pending such proposed conference, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also (for Mr. LADD) presented a resolution of the Ramsey County (N. Dak.) Sunday School Association, favoring the enactment of legislation to create a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution of the Senior Christian Endeavor Society of the Christian Church of Abilene, Kans., and a resolution adopted by the Rush County (Kans.) Sunday School Association at its annual meeting held June 9–10, 1921, at La Crosse, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions of the pastor and congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Winfield; the congregation of the Washington Creek Church of the Brethren, of Lone Star; the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Winfield; the pastor and sundry members of St. Mark's Lutheran Church, of Norcatur; and the pastor and congregation of the First Baptist Church of Lawrence, all in the State of Kansas, favoring the calling of an international disarmament conference, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented four resolutions of sundry citizens of Kansas City, Kans., favoring the recognition of the Irish republic, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of St. John's Lutheran Church, of Salina, Kans., favoring relief for the imperiled peoples of the Near East, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 224) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to purchase a tract of land, with sufficient water right attached, for the use and occupancy of the Temoak Band of homeless Indians, located at Ruby Valley, Nev. (Rept. No. 125);

A bill (S. 901) for the payment of certain money to Albert H. Raynolds (Rept. No. 126);

A bill (S. 1111) for the relief of the heirs of Ko-mo-dal-kiah, Moses agreement allottee No. 33 (Rept. No. 127);

A bill (S. 1738) for the completion of a bridge across the Little Colorado River near the Leupp Indian Agency, Ariz. (Rept. No. 128); and

A bill (S. 1926) to extend the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, as amended, to lands purchased for Indians (Rept. No. 129).

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 926) to withhold from sale and to restore to the Indians of the Umatilla Reservation certain lands which were authorized to be offered for sale under the act of March 3, 1885, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 130) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 59) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to protect certain restricted members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 131) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2089) authorizing the appointment of an additional judge for the district of Minnesota, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 132) thereon.

Mr. KNOX, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 73) amending Rules XXXVII and XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate so as to provide for the consideration of nominations and treaties in open executive session unless otherwise ordered, reported adversely thereon, and the resolution was placed on the calendar.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 1355) to provide for the establishment, construction, and maintenance of a post road and interstate highway system, to create a Federal highway commission, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 134) thereon.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present a minority report, signed by Senators HEFLIN, DIAL, WATSON of Georgia, and myself, in opposition to Senate bill No. 1355, known as the Townsend post roads bill, just reported by the Senator from Michigan. I ask that it may be printed at the same time. [Views of minority, pt. 2, Rept. 134.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 2109) to amend section 13a of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," approved June 4, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 2110) granting a pension to Viola Grover Libby (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2111) granting an increase of pension to John Laurence (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 2112) for the relief of the Northern Transportation Co.; and

A bill (S. 2113) for the relief of the Southern Transportation Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 2114) for relief of the Southern Iron & Metal Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 2115) granting an increase of pension to Adam S. Bridgefarmer; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 2116) supplemental to the national prohibition act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NORRIS (for Mr. KENYON):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the Eighty-eighth Division Association for their reunion at Des Moines, Iowa, tents, cots, mattresses, blankets, and corrugated-iron buckets; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BUREAU OF SUBMARINES.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer a resolution which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is for the purpose of investigating the charges which have been made—I have repeated them here on the floor—that our submarines are imperfect; that the mechanism and machinery are bad; and that they are not equal to the submarines which have been constructed in Germany and other European countries. I feel that an investigation should be had, especially with a view to determining whether there should be a bureau of submarines established in the Navy Department.

The resolution (S. Res. 95) was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

Whereas it is claimed that the submarines which have been constructed and are being constructed under authority of Congress are defective and imperfect in their machinery and mechanical equipment, particularly for surface propulsion and maneuvering, and are inferior to the submarines of other navies, and are otherwise unfitted for service at sea with the fleet; and

Whereas it is further claimed that the proper development of submarines for coast defense and for service at sea, and the organization of an adequate and effective submarine force can only be accomplished by the creation of a bureau of submarines of the Navy Department, and the organization of a separate submarine corps or service in the Navy, which shall be under the direction of officers who are primarily interested in submarine construction and development, and who shall be specially trained for submarine warfare: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the Committee on Naval Affairs is hereby directed to investigate the question of the construction and mechanical effectiveness of the submarines and of their machinery and equipment, which have been and are now being constructed for the Navy, to ascertain whether or not such submarines are inferior to the submarines of other navies, and what means should be adopted for their improvement and perfection, and also to investigate the question of the policy and advantage of creating a separate bureau of submarines in the Navy Department, and of the organization of a separate submarine corps or service in the Navy, and to report their findings to the Senate; and that the committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and employ such clerical assistance as may be necessary.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Broussard	Caraway	Dial
Ball	Bursum	Culberson	Dillingham
Borah	Calder	Cummins	Ernst
Brandegee	Capper	Curtis	Fernald
Fletcher	Keyes	Oddie	Sutherland
Frelinghuysen	King	Overman	Townsend
Gerry	Knox	Poindexter	Trammell
Glass	La Follette	Pomerene	Underwood
Hale	Lenroot	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Harreld	McKellar	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Harris	McNary	Shields	Walsh, Mont.
Harrison	Moses	Shortridge	Warren
Heflin	Myers	Simmons	Watson, Ga.
Johnson	Nelson	Smith	Williams
Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smoot	Willis
Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Spencer
Kendrick	Norris	Stanley

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, the bill (S. 1806) to further amend the interstate commerce act, as amended, to provide for seasonal rates for the transportation of coal, be placed before the Senate and proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1806.

Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. CURTIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to say to the Senator from New Jersey that I have not any objection to his taking up the bill, which is the unfinished business; but I do not know what is the condition of the calendar. This is Calendar Monday; a number of Senators are interested in the calendar, and I do not think the Senator should push his request until the calendar has been disposed of.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have no desire to press the request. I understood the calendar was taken up on last Friday and that there are no measures on it pending. If there are, I shall certainly yield and withdraw my request.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no measures on the calendar myself, but Calendar Monday only comes once a week and there may be other Senators interested. I do not think the Senator should request that his bill be pressed until the calendar is disposed of.

Mr. CURTIS. I rose to make the same suggestion as that made by the Senator from Alabama. This is Calendar Monday, and we ought to have the calendar called in the regular way.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Very well. I withdraw my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from New Jersey. The calendar is in order.

Mr. SMITH. Do I understand that we are to proceed with the calendar in order, or are we to take up only those measures to which there is no objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar will be called under Rule VIII.

Mr. SMITH. Very well.

The bill (S. 656) to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of the Navy was announced as the first business on the calendar.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the acting chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs what provision is contained in the recent naval appropriation bill for the establishment of a bureau of aircraft or aeronautics in the Navy?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is such a provision in one of the Senate amendments to the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that we have passed a bill which contains a provision for the establishment of a bureau of aeronautics, I ask the acting chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee whether it would be proper, in his judgment, to pass another bill providing for the same bureau?

Mr. POINDEXTER. When did a bill of this character pass, I will ask the Senator? I was not present at the call of the calendar the other day, but in reading the RECORD I notice that the bill for the establishment of a bureau of aeronautics was objected to and went over.

Mr. KING. I am asking the chairman of the committee whether, in view of our action with respect to the naval appropriation bill, he considers it now proper to pass this bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think this bill might properly be passed, although the matter is under consideration in conference between the two Houses on the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I see no objection in the Senate acting upon the bill, but I also see no object to be accomplished by its passage. In view of the status of the naval appropriation bill, I will ask that this bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1021) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] desires that that bill go over.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 384) to require judges appointed under authority of the United States to devote their entire time to the duties of a judge was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who is interested in this bill, is absent from the Chamber to-day and will not return until to-morrow. I therefore ask that the bill go over. I hope, however, it may be taken up and acted on in a day or two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 724) for the relief of Henry J. Davis was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 725) for the relief of Orion Mathews was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 581) to repeal the act prohibiting increased pay under lump-sum appropriations to employees transferred within one year was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 582) to repeal section 5 of the act approved June 22, 1906, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 659) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1439) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended by the act of July 11, 1919, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1467) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1807) to aid in stabilizing the coal industry was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 425) fixing the salaries of certain United States attorneys and United States marshals was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 205) relating to the fiscal system of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had wished to inquire of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], had he been present, whether that bill relates to the so-called fifty-fifty plan of expenditures on the part of the United States and the District of Columbia, but that Senator not being present at the moment, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ARMY ORDNANCE STOREKEEPER.

The bill (S. 834) to authorize the appointment of an ordnance storekeeper in the Army was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was considered on last Friday, and an amendment to it was agreed to. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from New York what this bill is and what it proposes to do? Is it reported from his committee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. As I stated on last Friday when the Senator from North Carolina asked me about the bill, it is designed to reward an employee of the Ordnance Department who has been over 40 years in the service. There is no other method by which this man can receive his reward.

Mr. BORAH. I now recall the Senator's statement.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States" was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1375) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that is the sedition bill, so called. I should not have any objection to taking the bill up if we could take it up under circumstances in which we could consider some very important amendments to the bill, but I presume that that would be impossible under the 5-minute rule. I therefore ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) authorizing the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) to take over and dispose of 13,902 tons of sugar imported from the Argentine Republic was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH. Let the joint resolution go over, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is not in the Chamber, it being impossible for him to be here on account of other public business. He desires to be present whenever the joint resolution is brought up, in order that he may make some comments on it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the Senator from Utah that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is heartily in favor of the measure.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Senator from Iowa to say that he desired to be present when the joint resolution was considered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Iowa voted to report the joint resolution from the committee. It is no betrayal of confidence, I think, to say that. The Senator from Iowa did have some opinions about another claim which it was proposed at one time to attach to the joint resolution, but which the committee refused to attach thereto. I am quite certain that the members of the Committee on Agriculture will bear me out in stating that the Senator from Iowa had no objection to the measure. I repeat, he voted to report the joint resolution from the committee. It has been twice reported from the committee unanimously, with the exception of one vote on a question which did not really go to the merits of the measure.

Mr. SMOOT. I may have misunderstood the Senator from Iowa, but he did say to me that he desired to make some comments on the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH. I have asked that the joint resolution go over, because there are some of us who should like to have an opportunity to discuss it, and that would take a longer time than we have during the morning hour. As I remember, the committee were practically unanimous in reporting the joint resolution, but there are certain matters in connection with it that are of such importance that I think the Senate ought to be advised as to them, and that can not be done in the length of time which will be allowed this morning.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, that same observation, or some observation similar to it, is made every time this measure is reached on the calendar. In the meantime the Senate makes other matters the unfinished business. If it goes on in this way, the joint resolution will never get consideration and will never be passed.

Mr. SMITH. I want to say to the Senator from New York that I have no objection to the joint resolution, but I think that other matters ought to be considered in connection with it. I will join with the Senator at any time when the exigencies of the case are not such as they are now and help to put this measure through; but, I repeat, I do not think we will have time properly to consider the measure this morning. That is the reason I make my objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the Senator think that after the calling of the calendar shall have been concluded and before the hour of 2 o'clock is reached we might not take up the joint resolution?

Mr. SMITH. I think we might do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ELIJAH C. PUTNAM.

The bill (S. 904) fixing the term of service of Elijah C. Putnam during the Civil War was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like, if it is consistent with the proprieties of the situation, to inquire of the Senator from Utah what his objections are to Senate bill 904?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know of no case where a man with 80 days' service in the Civil War is receiving a pension. This bill means, if it shall pass, that with such a service the beneficiary will receive a pension.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator, I am sure, has not read all of the bill. The bill is restricted to one thing, and that is to allow the veteran to receive the benefit of the additional homestead law. The bill is specifically restricted to that, if I understand the bill, and I think I do. Here is a situation——

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that if that were all there was to the bill it would be quite a different proposition; but there is nothing in the bill that would prevent him from drawing a pension as well. The bill reads in this way:

That the service of Elijah C. Putnam, he having enlisted November 19, 1863, and being honorably discharged March 28, 1864, a period of over four months, is declared amply sufficient to entitle him or his assigns to the benefits of said section 2306, Revised Statutes, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized to recognize the same.

This applies, of course, to section 2306 of the Revised Statutes, referring to homesteads only; but I am fearful that if this bill shall pass we shall have recognized that the beneficiary served over four months, whereas the official records show that he has not had such service, and he has not, according to all the precedents that have been followed in years past. I would not object for a moment to the consideration of the bill if it only applied to the homestead act.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will say to the Senator that was my only object in framing the bill, and, if the Senator would like to have it made more specific in that regard, I have no objection to the bill being amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be passed over temporarily; and I will say to the Senator that I shall have no objection if it is limited so to apply only to the homestead law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then let the bill be passed over temporarily and I will endeavor to frame an amendment to cover the Senator's objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 831) to amend the proviso in paragraph 10 of section 9 of the Federal reserve act, amended by the act of June 21, 1917, amending the Federal reserve act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 387) granting certain public lands to the city of Phoenix, Ariz., for municipal purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a similar bill has passed the House of Representatives and is now pending before the Senate Committee on Public Lands. I therefore ask that Senate bill 387 be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1890) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to establish in the National Bureau of Standards a division to be known as the division of construction and housing was announced as next in order.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask that that bill go over, because of the fact that it is substantially covered by a provision of the deficiency bill which passed the Senate several weeks ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. McLEAN. I inquire whether there was objection to the consideration of calendar No. 79, being Senate bill 831.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was objection to the consideration of that measure.

The resolution (S. Res. 67) authorizing the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to hold hearings here or elsewhere and to employ a stenographer to report the same was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 80) directing the Committee on Education and Labor to investigate the recent acts of violence in the coal fields of West Virginia and adjacent territory and the causes which led to the conditions which now exist in said territory was announced as next in order.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

MEMORIAL TO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE EMPLOYEES.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 52) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to employees of the United States Department of Agriculture who died in the war with Germany was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permission to the Department of Agriculture War Memorial Committee for the erection in the Department of Agriculture grounds, situated in the Mall, between Twelfth and Fourteenth Streets SW., Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the former employees of the said United States Department of Agriculture who lost their lives while in the military or naval service in the war with Germany: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of this memorial.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator from Maine explain where it is proposed to erect the memorial which it is stated will be erected on the Mall, and if there is any objection to it at all from any department.

Mr. FERNALD. There is no objection from any quarter, so far as I know. The Secretary of Agriculture has recommended the bill. There is no appropriation called for. Nearly $10,000 have been raised to erect the memorial; but, of course, it is necessary to secure authority from Congress before it can be erected.

Mr. SMOOT. There appears to be no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. FERNALD. I understood there was a report prepared by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. I thought it was on his desk, but I could not find it there. The bill, however, explains the whole situation.

Mr. SMOOT. I will take the statement of the Senator that there was a favorable report from the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. FERNALD. There was.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator does not know just where the memorial is to be located?

Mr. FERNALD. No; that matter is to be left to the Fine Arts Commission.

Mr. SMOOT. It is to be approved by the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1855) to save daylight in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF PATENT LAW.

The bill (S. 1838) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes relating to patents was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I will ask that that matter go over to-day. I have written the Secretary of War, who made a recommendation in behalf of the bill, for information about it, and I think he is advising with the Commissioner of Patents, and I should like to have the matter stand until I get a reply from the Secretary. I do not know that I have any objection to the bill; but I received a letter from a very prominent patent lawyer calling attention to some of the features of it, and I want to get an explanation before it is acted upon.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator insists upon his objection, I am perfectly willing to have the bill go over; but I hope he will not object, in view of the fact that I have gone into my files, and I find that while the Secretary of War did not send the letter to which the Senator refers he has sent me a great mass of correspondence along with his letter in which the same objections made in the Fish letter are found.

The only change the bill makes in existing law is to this effect:

That any patent or patents issued to a person or persons not citizens of the United States shall contain a proviso to the effect that if such patent so granted is not worked or put in operation so as to result in actual production of the article in reasonable quantities embodied in such patent in the continental limits of the United States within the period of two years from the date of its issue, the United States reserves the right—

It does not come automatically—to license any person or persons for purposes of manufacture in the United States, and to use and sell the subject matter thereof subject to the conditions hereinafter provided:

Then it provides:

That any license granted on any such patent shall be subject to the payment of the following royalties.

And then it provides the royalties usually paid; so that the only effect it has or can possibly have is to protect the Ordnance Department in a great number of patents that have been perfected by American engineers upon American ordnance. These same inventions which the Americans used during the war, and are now using, but which they did not patent, have been patented by foreigners and sold to the Krupps or other foreign concerns, so that we can not use our own patents for our own defense at this time; and the Secretary has very warmly urged the immediate passage of legislation of this character.

I have here a great number of letters from patent attorneys and others in which it is pointed out that we are the only country in the world that has no such legislation protecting our rights in the matter; but I do not believe there is any possible objection that can be urged to this character of legislation.

The objection to which the Senator refers, and I do not think that is well founded, is an objection to the granting of patents within two years to persons in the United States. I believe that ought to be done, and I believe that the junking of patents ought to be prevented. I believe that is one of the most fecund sources of corruption and of monopoly; but there is nothing of that kind provided in this bill. It only provides that foreigners shall within two years manufacture the article in the United States, or, in the discretion of the department, some other person may be granted a license to manufacture it. If there is any good reason why the license should not be granted, if an inventor in good faith has attempted to put his patent on the market, then it would not be done; and for that reason I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am constrained to object at this time. Of course I realize that debate upon the merits of the bill is out of order after objection has been made; but I simply want to say this, inasmuch as the Senator has given his views about the bill:

I am a member of the Committee on Patents, and I was unable to be present at the time this bill was reported. I had notified the chairman over the telephone authorizing him to count me for the purpose of making a quorum, and also to vote me. I did not know that this bill was coming up. Now, I do not know that I have any objection to the bill after I have an explanation from the Secretary. I do know that I received a letter from Mr. Frederick P. Fish, of Boston. If he is not the acknowledged leader of the patent bar of that section of the country, he is one of the most eminent patent attorneys in the State. He called my attention to what he called the danger of establishing a precedent and opening up this question of a time limit upon when the granting of a patent must result in putting the article or commodity so patented upon the market. His judgment was that it was very bad policy and was a new policy in the United States that might result very dangerously. He gave his reasons. I am not enough of a patent lawyer to appreciate the force of them, and I referred his letter to the Secretary of War and suggested that he consult with the Commissioner of Patents, who was also an eminent patent lawyer and I believe was president of the American Patent Law Association; and I asked him to advise me just as quickly as he could whether the Secretary was of the same opinion after reading this letter. I am waiting for that advice. I do not think it is any unusual or discourteous thing for me to ask the privilege of getting a reply to my letter and the views of the Commissioner of Patents before we are compelled to act upon this bill. If the department still favors it, I shall probably make no objection at all to it. That is the reason why I object for the present.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I desire to add just one thing to what the Senator from Connecticut has said.

Last week a gentleman representing, I think, an organization of patent lawyers called upon me desiring some amendment to the bill, and I referred him to the Senator from Kentucky. I do not know whether he called upon the Senator, or whether he presented his amendment, or not.

Mr. STANLEY. I received a letter, which I have here, and which I presume is to the same effect, suggesting an amendment to the bill providing that all applicants for patents should make their application within two years. He approved of the bill, but did not think it was sweeping enough.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. I entirely concur in that opinion, and I think that character of legislation should be enacted. It is eminently necessary for the protection of American industry.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was not entirely clear as to what amendment this gentleman desired; but he seemed to be thoroughly familiar with the subject, and not opposed to the general principle of the bill, but he wished some slight amendment to it.

Mr. STANLEY. He was exactly right in his position; but the bill had been reported, and I thought the amendment probably could be put on in the House, and I did not want to delay the legislation on that account. The bill would be improved, however, by the amendment suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 63) for the relief of Lester A. Rockwell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ELIJAH C. PUTNAM.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 904. I am prepared to suggest some amendments which will remove any doubt as to the construction of the bill on the part of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 904, fixing the term of service of Elijah C. Putnam during the Civil War. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 904) fixing the term of service of Elijah C. Putnam during the Civil War.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. On page 2, lines 3 and 4, I move to strike out the words "he having enlisted November 19, 1863, and being," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "who was."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And on line 5, I move to strike out the comma after the numerals "1864," and the words "a period of over four months."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. So that the bill will read:

That the service of Elijah C. Putnam, who was honorably discharged March 28, 1864, is declared amply sufficient to entitle him or his assigns to the benefits of said section 2306, Revised Statutes, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized to recognize the same.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New Mexico whether this would entitle the beneficiary named in this bill to a pension?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Not at all, and the change has been made so as to specifically eliminate any thought of that result.

Mr. KING. Could it be construed by the Pension Bureau that this was a declaration that he had served the full 90 days, so as to entitle him to a pension?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The very purpose of the amendment is to eliminate any thought of that sort. I have made these amendments, at the suggestion of the senior Senator from Utah, to meet that very point.

Mr. KING. Then the Senator can assure us that it is not the basis for a pension, and can not be?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I give that assurance to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UMI

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the preamble stricken from the bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will say to the Senator that I doubt if the title is sufficient without the preamble. I am sure the title will have to be amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not have the title changed so as to read "A bill for the relief of Elijah C. Putnam"? At present the bill is entitled "A bill fixing the term of service of Elijah C. Putnam during the Civil War."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am quite willing to make that change.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the preamble will be stricken out.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Elijah C. Putnam."

FORT BUFORD MILITARY RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (S. 732) to extend the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes, to the lands within the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation, in the States of North Dakota and Montana, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on line 5, after the word "to," to strike out the word "the," and to insert the words "all nonmineral," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, extended to all nonmineral lands within the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation in the States of North Dakota and Montana, restored to disposal under the homestead, town site, and desert land laws under the provisions of the act of May 19, 1900 (31 Stat. L., p. 180).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move that the bill be further amended by inserting, before the word "restored" and after the word "Montana," in line 7, the words "which were." It has been suggested that that amendment would make the intent of the bill a little plainer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RURAL HOMES.

The bill (S. 491) to provide, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

DR. O. H. TITTMANN.

The bill (S. 136) for the relief of Dr. O. H. Tittmann, former superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FREE TRANSIT THROUGH PANAMA CANAL.

The bill (S. 665) to provide for free tolls for American ships through the Panama Canal was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course, this bill could not be disposed of under the morning-hour rule, but I desire to say that within a very short time I expect to be able to get the bill before the Senate for consideration. I make this statement because of the interest which some Senators have manifested in the bill, who have stated that they desire to be informed when it is to be brought up. I hope to get it up within a very short time.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator can advise the Senate a few days in advance.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I am doing now.

Mr. KING. Can the Senator now state when he will call it up?

Mr. BORAH. No; but within a very short time, possibly when the pending coal bills are out of the way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

The bill (S. 2051) to amend section 3143 of the Revised Statutes, to permit an increase in the number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue, and in the number of collectors of internal revenue from 64 to 74, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have no desire to move to take up the bill this morning, but it is a measure drawn by the Secretary of the Treasury, and it ought to go through by the 1st of July if it is to pass at all. I should like to make a short statement, and then if Senators insist on their objection I will let the bill go over. But I serve notice that I shall move to have it taken up pretty soon if objection is made to its consideration this morning.

The measure increases the number of collectors from 64 to 74. That is done for this reason: When the number was reduced to 64 from about 100 there were only about 600,000 taxpayers in the United States. That number has increased now to 9,000,000. At that time there were about 600,000 reports made annually from these different taxpayers. Now the number has grown to over 15,000,000, and the department is away behind. An auditor told me the other day that if these reports could be sent to his office they could do about twice as much work as they are doing now. The department asks for this in the belief that it will reduce the expense of running the office. I hope, in view of the recommendation of the Treasury Department, no one will object to the passage of the bill this morning.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret very much to take issue with my distinguished friend. He speaks of the large number of taxpayers. The number will be very much smaller in the coming years than during the period of the war. We managed to get along during the war with 64 districts. As a matter of fact, in some of the States there were three or four districts when there should have been only one. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. The department is about two or three years behind, because they have not had sufficient force, and it is not fair to the taxpayers for the department to be so far behind in the consideration of their cases.

Mr. KING. If they are behind, it is because of the insufficient number of employees here, and the evil of which the Senator complains would not be cured by creating a number of other districts.

Mr. CURTIS. I stated a moment ago that an auditor in one of the departments here in Washington advised me just the other night that the employees in his office, if these reports could be sent in, could handle twice the number of cases they are now handling.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator when this reduction was made from 100 to 64 districts?

Mr. CURTIS. It was reduced from a hundred and odd down to eighty some odd, and then to sixty-three, and then one was added, making it sixty-four. That was done in about 1913 or 1914, I think.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before that time.

Mr. GLASS. It was done in either 1919 or 1920.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was under Mr. Taft's administration.

Mr. GLASS. It was when I was Secretary of the Treasury, just before I left the office.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, and I will ask that it be printed. It gives the exact dates.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. OVERMAN. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will ask the question in my own time, then. I understand the bill contemplates the creation of about 10 more internal-revenue districts?

Mr. CURTIS. That is correct.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That involves not only the appointment of internal-revenue collectors but a large office force at each place.

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, no.

Mr. JONES of Washington. How can a new internal-revenue collector get along without an office force?

Mr. CURTIS. Take my own State, for instance. Before the war there were about 12 or 13 men employed to do the work. Now, my recollection is there are about 140. I suppose the increases in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois are very much greater than in Kansas, and I judge if another collector were appointed, probably the force would be distributed, and part of them would work in one office and part in another. It would save a good deal of mileage, I should judge.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Take, for instance, the districts of Kansas. They would not have two collectors in the same office?

Mr. CURTIS. No.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then, you expect to divide the office force?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know anything about that. I am merely telling the Senator what I know about it from a letter of the Secretary. In it he states why he desires this increase in the number of collectors.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator think that quite an important matter to consider in connection with this measure?

Mr. CURTIS. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From what the Senator says, the committee did not give it any consideration.

Mr. GLASS. The reduction was made after the most careful investigation possible by the experts of the department brought here to Washington. The reduction was not made in 1914; it was made either in the latter part of 1919 or the early part of 1920, when Mr. Roper was Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] shakes has head. I know something about it. I made the reduction.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is right as far as one reduction was concerned; but in Mr. Taft's administration the number was reduced from 100 to about 64.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The letter from the Secretary of the Treasury was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 1, 1921.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: Since the passage of the revenue acts of 1913, 1916, 1917, and 1918 and the adoption of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution the work, service, and needs of the Internal Revenue Service have been entirely transformed.

In less than 10 years the number of taxpayers filing returns with collectors of internal revenue has increased from less than 600,000 to an aggregate of approximately 9,000,000 annually.

Practically all of the 600,000 taxpayers dealt with collectors of internal revenue but once each year. With monthly returns required of sales, taxpayers and quarterly payments permitted to those filing income-tax returns, the 9,000,000 persons filing returns during 1920 had a total of more than 15,000,000 separate transactions with collectors of internal revenue during that year.

Because of this marked increase in the number of people who come in contact with collectors of internal revenue, it appears imperative that internal-revenue collection district offices be located at such points as will afford the greatest possible convenience to taxpayers. The increase in volume of work in the larger collection district offices also presents serious accounting difficulties.

The number of internal-revenue collection districts, now limited by law to a total of 64, is not sufficient to meet the increasing needs of the service. It is therefore recommended that the number permitted by law be increased to a maximum of 74.

An amendment to section 3142, Revised Statutes, as amended by section 1, act of July 16, 1914 (Stat., 454, 475), is suggested, as follows:

"On and after July 1, 1921, the whole number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and the whole number of collectors of internal revenue shall not exceed 74."

It is imperative that consideration be given to the proposed increase in internal-revenue collection districts at the very earliest possible date.

Respectfully,

A. W. MELLON, Secretary.

HAWAIIAN FRANCHISES.

The bill (S. 2062) granting a franchise for the purpose of manufacturing and supplying gas and electric current in the districts of Wailuku and Makawao, county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the other day when this bill and its companion bills relating to the granting of franchises in the Hawaiian Islands were called up for consideration, the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] stated that it might take some time to consider these measures. I am not familiar with them.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have sent for the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], in charge of the bills. In conversation with me a half hour ago he stated that perhaps he would have to let the bills go over in order to obtain some additional information. So perhaps the bill may be passed over for the time anyway.

Mr. KING. I have no objection if the Senators who are interested desire that these bills shall be passed over until the chairman of the committee is here.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Senate bills 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, and 2067 all relate to the Hawaiian Islands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 2062, together with the bills indicated, will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. NEW subsequently said: Mr. President, I am informed that in my temporary absence from the Chamber Senate bills 2062, 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, and 2067, bills granting various franchises in the Territory of Hawaii, were temporarily passed over until I might return, so that I might be present when they are considered. I will merely state concerning those bills that they were all prepared by the public service commission of Hawaii, they have been favorably considered by the Territorial legislature, they were presented to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions by the attorney general of the Territory, accompanied by a delegation of considerable size from the Territory, including a number of officials; they have been presented to the House by the Territorial Delegate; they have the approval of Gov. McCarthy and the governor designate, and I have now referred them to the Department of the Interior in order to see if anyone there has any possible objection to them. Pending a report from that department, I shall not ask for their consideration; but that is the fact with reference to these bills.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before we pass from these bills I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana for a little information about them. Apparently they grant certain franchises and concessions to individuals and corporations in the Territory of Hawaii. Take Calendar 125, Senate bill 2062, for the purpose of illustration. It provides:

That D. C. Lindsay, of Kahului, county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, his associates, successors, and assigns, or such corporation as he or they shall cause to be incorporated under the laws of the Territory of Hawaii, and its successors and assigns (he and they being hereinafter referred to as the association), are hereby authorized and empowered to manufacture, sell, furnish, and supply electric current for light and power purposes and gas for use as fuel—

And so forth.

It then goes on to specify what powers the association shall enjoy, exercising the right of eminent domain and similar powers. According to the statement of the Senator from Indiana, legislation has already been enacted by the legislature of the Territory. Why, then, should the Congress of the United States interpose in the matter?

I read from the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii, as follows:

SEC. 55. That the legislative power of the Territory shall extend to all rights and subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States as locally applicable.

Of course, that is a general grant of power which, if it were not restricted as it is and as I shall show, would authorize the enactment of just such legislation as this by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii; but it continues:

The legislature at its first regular session after the census enumeration shall have been ascertained and from time to time thereafter shall reapportion the membership of the senate and house of representatives among the senatorial and representative districts on the basis of population in each of said districts who are citizens of the Territory, but the legislature shall not grant to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise without the approval of Congress.

But the bill before us expressly provides that the privileges and immunities and franchises thereby granted are not exclusive. I read from section 13 of the bill:

That this franchise may at any time be amended or repealed by the Congress of the United States or by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii with the approval of the Congress of the United States; and the rights, privileges, and powers by this act conferred shall not be construed to be exclusive.

Accordingly, it would seem that there is no occasion for any action by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FLETCHER. That comes within the definition of "special"—"special or exclusive."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I take it those words mean the same.

Mr. NEW. I did not hear what the Senator from Florida said, but, as I stated, I am not pressing for the consideration of the bills to-day. They are going over, anyhow, until I can get a report from the Department of the Interior, for which purpose I have submitted all of the bills to that department.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Perhaps the Senator will be kind enough, then, to give the Senate at that time some information in relation to the subject to which I have now directed his attention.

Mr. NEW. I must beg the pardon of the Senator from Montana; I did not hear his last statement. There was conversation going on around me which prevented it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am directing the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii, which authorizes that legislature to enact legislation generally, except that it can not grant an exclusive franchise or privilege without the consent of Congress, and the bill before us expressly provides that the grant shall not be exclusive. Accordingly, as I view it, there can be no occasion whatever for congressional action with reference to this particular bill.

Mr. NEW. I think that congressional action is necessary. However, I am not prepared to answer the Senator's question at this moment. Perhaps the Senator from Montana is correct. I think it is bootless for us to take up the time to discuss it now inasmuch as I have asked that the bills go over, anyhow. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and one or two others are desirous of reaching certain matters in which they are interested. So just let the bills go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be passed over.

GRAND RIVER IN COLORADO AND UTAH.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 32) to change the name of the Grand River in Colorado and Utah to the Colorado River was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the joint resolution; I assume it is satisfactory to the legislatures of the two States, but I was wondering if we have any constitutional powers to name rivers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall object to the consideration of the joint resolution until I investigate it. The river goes through a State I have the honor to live in, and I desire to find out whether we want to abandon the name by which we have familiarly and lovingly known a stream for many years for some other name. We may prefer the other name, but let the joint resolution go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 391) for the relief of Alfred Cluff and certain other settlers at Forestdale, Apache County, Ariz., who were evicted from their homes by reason of a change in the location of the north boundary of the White Mountain or San Carlos Apache Indian Reservation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is true that a similar bill passed in the Sixty-fourth, Sixty-fifth, and again in the Sixty-sixth Congress, but the favorable report was made from the Committee on Indian Affairs only last Friday. It is a voluminous and elaborate report of some 40 pages. I feel that Senators have not had time since Friday to read the report. I therefore ask, although it is my own bill, that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

The bill (S. 1881) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended, to establish an Hawaiian Homes Commission, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NEW. Let that go over.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator, reserving the right to object, to explain what the bill is?

Mr. NEW. It is known as the Hawaiian land rehabilitation bill, and its consideration will not be asked to-day. It may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS FOR OFFENDERS.

The bill (S. 1010) to amend sections 5549 and 5550, Revised Statutes of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I reserve the right to object to this bill. Several of these bills have just been reported and are not on my file, and some of us have not seen them at all. Let the bill be read. I reserve the right to object.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. KING. Let it go over, and let us have a chance to examine it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I hope the Senator from Utah will reconsider his objection. I can not really conceive of any valid objection to the measure.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that several of these bills have just been reported, and we have had no chance to examine them. I have followed the calendar and examined every bill that is on the calendar as handed to us here. This bill, I understand, has just been reported. I reserve the right to object, in order to permit the Senator to make an explanation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think the plain reading of the bill will fully disclose the character of it. Under the existing law junior offenders may be incarcerated in the industrial schools and other places of reformation instead of being sent to jail or prison. The bill extends those provisions to female convicts charged with similar offenses against the law.

Mr. KING. That is the only change of existing law?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I must object. This is a very serious proposition. That system of slavery has gone on in this country quite long enough, and wherever it is proposed I intend to combat it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

CHARLES K. BOND.

The bill (S. 62) for the relief of Charles K. Bond, alias Kimball W. Rollins, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

ENFORCED NONPRODUCTION OF COTTON.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 72) for the relief of States in the cotton belt that have given aid to cotton farmers forced from the fields in established nonproduction zones through efforts to eradicate the pink bollworm was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this is a joint resolution drafted and sent to the Senate by the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace. In the present Agricultural appropriation act a provision was made limiting the use of some $400,000 therein appropriated. I am in receipt of a letter from the Secretary stating that if allowed to use the money as the joint resolution proposes to use it, he can more effectually combat this very destructive pest that has made its appearance in the cotton fields. If no one desires to know just what he has to say about it and will take his word for it through me, I should be glad to have the joint resolution acted on now, because if action is to be taken at all it must be taken now. The committee reported the joint resolution favorably and I was put in charge of it for the committee. It is a matter of very great importance.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether it increases the appropriation?

Mr. SMITH. Not a penny. It just gives the Secretary the right to use money already appropriated in the way provided in the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if it could be tortured into a precedent that would in the future compel or create an obligation, moral or otherwise, on the part of the Government to duplicate the appropriation?

Mr. SMITH. Not at all.

Mr. WARREN. Let the joint resolution be read, so that we may know what it is.

The Assistant Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That when any State shall have enacted legislation and taken measures, including the establishment and enforcement of noncotton zones, adequate, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, to eradicate the pink bollworm in any area thereof actually infested or threatened by such pest, the said Secretary, under regulations to be prescribed by him, is authorized, out of the appropriation of $554,840 for "Eradication of pink bollworm" made by the Agricultural appropriation act of March 3, 1921, to utilize not to exceed $200,000, available until expended, in reimbursing such States for expenses incurred by them in compensating any farmer for his loss due to the enforced nonproduction of cotton within said zones: Provided, That such reimbursement of any State shall be based upon the fair rental value of said land; that such reimbursement shall not exceed one-third the amount actually paid by the State to any farmer, and in no event shall exceed $5 per acre; and that no reimbursement shall be made in respect of any farmer who has not complied in good faith with all quarantine and control regulations prescribed by said Secretary of Agriculture and such State relative to the pink bollworm.

Mr. WARREN. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming objects and the joint resolution will go over. The call of the calendar is completed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the Senator——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina for a question only.

Mr. SMITH. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator who objected to the joint resolution to the fact that this matter is one of such importance that the attitude of the Congress ought to be definitely fixed, and the joint resolution definitely disposed of this morning. There can be no discussion of anything, save the fact that the precedent of the destruction of tubercular cattle was followed.

Mr. NORRIS. May I inquire of the Senator——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I was recognized and I am not yielding for other Senators to indulge in debate. I have an exceedingly important matter to bring before the Senate, and it is my duty to bring it before the Senate at this time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Has not the Senator from South Carolina the right in reference to the joint resolution to move to proceed to its consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina had the right to do so, but he did not do it, and the Chair recognized the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I recognize that the Senator from New York has the floor, but I was anticipating that some of those who are interested with myself in this joint resolution might have something to say and that the Senator from New York would consent that sufficient time might be allowed to consider the matter. I will certainly not interfere with the Senator from New York, but I intend at the proper time, if we can dispose of the matter which he has in hand, to ask for the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit a brief interruption?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly, if the Senator from New York does not object.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask that the Senator from South Carolina, for the information of Senators, request to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, which is directed to me, and which I turned over to the Senator from South Carolina. I think when Senators read that letter the next time the calendar is called they will be satisfied to let the joint resolution pass.

Mr. SMITH. Rather than ask permission to have the letter printed in the RECORD, as soon as I obtain the floor I intend myself to read it. I thought, perhaps, the explanation which I have made might be sufficient, but I will in my own time, having the floor, read the letter referred to.

Mr SMITH subsequently said: In connection with my proposal a few moments ago to take up the joint resolution referring to the pink bollworm, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, in order that Senators may be advised as to the reason why the joint resolution has been introduced and why its passage is urged. I will not press the matter to-day, but at the first opportunity during the next morning hour I will call up the joint resolution and ask for action upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, June 3, 1921.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR NORRIS: Some days ago I transmitted to Senator WARREN the draft of proposed legislation for inclusion in the deficiency appropriation bill authorizing this department to participate in the expense of maintaining noncotton zones in States where infestation by the pink bollworm of cotton has been found. Unfortunately my letter did not reach Senator WARREN until after the deficiency bill had been reported to the Senate. A revised draft of the item is inclosed herewith.

This legislation proposes the use of not to exceed $200,000 of the appropriation of $554,840 for pink bollworm eradication made available by the Agricultural appropriation act of March 3, 1921, for the purpose of reimbursing States for a portion of the expenses incurred by them in compensating farmers for losses due to the enforced nonproduction of cotton within the prescribed zones. On account of its great importance to the cotton industry of the country I am taking the liberty to suggest the advisability of dealing with the matter through special legislation, which will involve no additional appropriation.

We have come to the critical period in our fight against the pink bollworm. This is a more dangerous pest to the cotton plant than any of which we have knowledge. It first made its appearance in the United States in 1917, coming in from Mexico. Mexico got it from Egypt and Egypt from India. Careful investigations indicate that if once it spreads through our cotton belt it will destroy from 20 to 50 per cent of the crop, and possibly more at times.

The department agents detected its presence in this country promptly and set about measures of holding it in check or eradicating it. It has been held in check fairly well up to the present time, but all of our people are now convinced that safety lies in following the most approved methods of eradication. These methods require the establishment of zones in which no cotton shall be grown for a period of three years, and, of course, must have the full cooperation of the States. When we establish a noncotton zone, which means that we forbid the growing of cotton in that zone for the period fixed, we work a hardship upon some of the farmers in that zone who find cotton a much more profitable crop than any other they can grow. For this reason it is necessary and just that farmers who suffer in this way shall be partially reimbursed, on the same theory that we partially reimburse farmers whose live stock is killed in the process of stamping out a contagious disease.

This whole matter was brought to my attention shortly after I became the head of this department. I called a conference of representatives from the various cotton States. They met here a couple of weeks since and went over the whole matter with the scientific men in our department. The various State representatives indicated an earnest desire to cooperate in every way possible in an effort to eradicate this pest and promised to do everything in their power to secure in their respective States whatever legislation may be considered necessary. Some of them felt, however, that in view of the national menace it would be only fair that the Federal Government should participate to some extent with the States in partially reimbursing those cotton farmers who may suffer loss because of the measures necessarily adopted. This seems to me to be a reasonable view.

It is the opinion of our scientists, who are very familiar with this whole matter, that the use of some of this money for reimbursement purposes will result in saving money in the fight against this pest, for much of the area involved in the proposed reimbursement will not be a continuing charge. Either the pest will be eliminated in two or three years or the effort will have failed. It now costs approximately $10 per acre to clean infested cotton land of old cotton. In noncotton zones, which our present plan would permit us to establish, this cost would be eliminated, and we believe that the reimbursement proposed would be less than the clean-up cost.

The request I am now making comes after very full investigation of the whole matter both by the scientists of this department and by the scientists and authorities in the States invaded.

Very sincerely,

HENRY C. WALLACE, Secretary.

"ERADICATION OF PINK BOLLWORM—AUTHORITY TO PARTICIPATE IN SUPPORT OF NONCOTTON ZONES.

"(Amending item in the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, entitled 'Eradication of Pink Bollworm,' to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the States concerned in the maintenance of noncotton zones as a means of exterminating this cotton pest.)

"That when a State shall have enacted legislation and taken measures, including the establishment and enforcement of noncotton zones, adequate, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, to eradicate the pink bollworm in any area thereof actually infested, or threatened, by such pest, the said Secretary, under regulations to be prescribed by him, is authorized, out of the appropriation of $554,840 for 'Eradication of pink bollworm,' made by the Agricultural appropriation act of March 3, 1921, to utilize not to exceed $200,000, available until expended, in reimbursing such States for expenses incurred by them in compensating any farmer for his loss due to the enforced nonproduction of cotton within said zones, subject to the following conditions and limitations: That such reimbursement of any State shall be based upon the fair rental value of said land; that such reimbursement shall not exceed one-third the amount actually paid by the State to any farmer, and in no event shall exceed $5 per acre; and that no reimbursement shall be made in respect of any farmer who has not complied in good faith with all quarantine and control regulations prescribed by said Secretary of Agriculture and such State relative to the pink bollworm."

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I present the conference report on the Army appropriation bill and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the conference report.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I, of course, have no objection to the Senator from New York presenting the conference report and having it printed in the RECORD, but I shall object to its present consideration. I wish to be heard on the conference report at some little length, and I am not prepared to go on to-day. I think under the rule the Senator from New York is entitled to present the report, and it may be printed in the RECORD, but I hope he will not try to have it taken up at this time, because it will provoke considerable debate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, of course I have no desire to make it difficult, much less impossible, for the Senator from Nebraska to discuss a certain item which failed to be incorporated in the report of the conference committee. The conferees are exceedingly anxious that this matter be disposed of, because every day which goes by means that we shall lose an opportunity to save money for the Government. There are legislative provisions in the Army appropriation bill which, when once they go into force, will operate to save money for the Government. I simply felt it my duty to present the report to the Senate and ask for its present consideration. I realize, of course, that it is within the power of the Senator from Nebraska to prevent its consideration, if he wishes to do so, unless I make a motion to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

UMI

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My impression is that under the rule, while the Senator from New York may offer the conference report, except by unanimous consent, it can not be compelled to be considered on the same day but goes over under the rule.

Mr. LENROOT. Is a motion pending to proceed to the consideration of the report?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have asked for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair suggest that the Secretary has not yet concluded the reading of the report?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in order to save time, why does not the Senator from New York pursue the usual course and have the report printed in the RECORD? I have merely made a request that is always acceded to, and, in my judgment, I am entitled to prevent the consideration of the report to-day by a simple objection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No.

Mr. NORRIS. But if I am to be singled out especially I wish to give the Senator notice now that he will not be able to have the conference report agreed to to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair may observe that the presentation of a conference report is a privileged matter.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But it can not be considered except by unanimous consent.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am informed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who has the rule before him, that I am in error in the statement which I made as to the consideration of a conference report on the same day on which it is presented and that a motion may be made which, if it prevails, would force consideration by the Senate. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that he read the rule.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to call the attention of the Chair to Rule XXVII, which reads as follows:

> The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In view of the statement just made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], it is perfectly apparent that it would be useless at this time to move to proceed to the consideration of the report. I therefore simply ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report referred to is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 6, 11, 15, 16, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 32, 34, 37, 42, 44, 53, 56, and 57.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 14, 17, 18, 20, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 39, 43, 47, 48, and 49, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$110,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$80,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$225,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "or not to exceed three reserve officers in the Judge Advocate General's Department, or"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore all of the matter stricken out by said amendment with the exception of the following words in lines 20 and 21, on page 27 of the bill: ", and in any event not less than 10,000 of such animals shall be sold"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That not more than $10,000 of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of draft or pack animals or animal-drawn vehicles: Provided further"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 of this appropriation shall be expended for new construction work"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$110,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on the following amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 9, 10, 12, 13, 36, 38, 41, 45, 46, 52, 54, and 55.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I give notice, in so far as a notice has any official status, that I shall exert every influence to-morrow to bring this report up and to dispose of the whole question.

RESTRICTED MEMBERS OF THE FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 59, which was reported this morning by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 59) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to protect certain restricted members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the resolution be read at length, Mr. President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let us have the report read.

Mr. HARRELD. The report is a rather long one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "submit," to insert "through the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes"; and in line 12, before the word "depletion," to strike out the word "additional," so as to make the joint resolution read:

> Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make or approve contracts with competent and experienced firms or individuals to prepare and submit through the superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes correct income-tax returns and corrected or amended income-tax returns covering previous years, for the restricted members of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma: Provided, That the compensation paid for the preparation and submission of such current and amended income-tax returns shall not exceed for any year 5 per cent of the depletion or other allowances secured in behalf of such restricted Indians as a result of the contract made in pursuance of this act: Provided further, That the Secretary shall make payment of such compensation out of the funds belonging to the several restricted Indians who shall be the beneficiaries of such contract.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if the joint resolution authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to make any compromise whatever that he may choose as to the income tax of these Indians?

Mr. HARRELD. No. The joint resolution merely proposes to authorize the employment of counsel to see that the Indians are properly protected in their rights in regard to the income tax.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not so understand the joint resolution. From its reading I understood it in effect to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to make compromises and to effect settlements without restriction. If the Senator from Oklahoma states that that is not the case, I have no objection to the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the joint resolution reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES SUGAR EQUALIZATION BOARD.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) authorizing the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) to take over and dispose of 13,902 tons of sugar imported from the Argentine Republic.

I make this motion in accordance with the suggestion which I made when the joint resolution was reached in regular order upon the calendar a little while ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly at this time on the coal measures before the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire whether we have not just voted, on motion of the Senator from New York, to take up for consideration Senate joint resolution 12?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from New York prevailed, and Senate joint resolution 12 is now before the Senate. The Secretary was about to read the joint resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Jersey a question?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Unless the Senate should vote to continue the consideration of the calendar until 2 o'clock, probably, if the Senator makes a speech of any length, he could defeat action upon the joint resolution.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have no desire to do that, I will say to the Senator from Connecticut. As I understand, the unfinished business will come up at 2 o'clock. I simply wish to make a statement in regard to the coal measure which I have introduced. I intend then to yield to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who desires to make some extended remarks on another subject. That has been the arrangement. The Senator from Nebraska gave notice last week, and it was understood that he would have that opportunity. I do not desire to interfere with the consideration of the joint resolution unless there is other objection.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from New York that there are Senators—I think the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] is one of them—who have amendments to offer to the joint resolution. I do not have the remotest idea that the Senator from New York will be able to secure the passage of the joint resolution before 2 o'clock, and, because I am aware that it will not pass before 2 o'clock, if the Senator from New Jersey does not take the floor I expect to do so myself. I do not want to shut off anybody else, but it will be a perfect waste of time to take up the joint resolution now, as I understand the situation, although I am not opposed to the joint resolution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will not the Senator permit it to pass right now?

Mr. NORRIS. There are other Senators who would not permit it to pass now, so I have been told.

Mr. CALDER. Let that opposition be developed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Who is against it?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] is against it.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand it is proposed by other Senators to undertake to amend the joint resolution. I understood that both the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from New Hampshire are in favor of amendments, and I think there is a Senator on the other side who spoke to me to-day about it, who also thinks the joint resolution should be amended. It will lead to quite a debate. I do not care to participate in it myself, having heard the hearings taken before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but it seems to me to be perfectly useless to take up time in considering the joint resolution now, with no other result except to prevent the Senator from New Jersey and myself from going on, as I have given notice that I wanted to do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, of course nobody wants to interfere with the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska or other Senators; but we have only one day in the week when we can attend to the matters on the calendar, and then a very brief time.

Personally, I think this claim is a just claim. The Senate having voted to proceed to the consideration of this matter, if amendments are to be offered to it I do not see why the amendments can not be offered now, so that we can see what they are, and debate the measure for a half hour, until 2 o'clock. The Senator from Nebraska has all the rest of the day in which to make a speech upon anything he desires, but it is only once a week that Senators can get any consideration for matters on the calendar. If the debate on this matter is so extended that it can not pass in half an hour, the information that is contributed to-day will be of use the next time the matter comes up.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator, if I may interrupt him, that some of us desire to make an investigation of this matter. I have just received the minority report filed in the House, and upon the testimony which they had and which was the basis for this report I should feel constrained to oppose this joint resolution. I should like an opportunity to look into the matter further.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I remember that the Senator asked some questions about it when the Senate passed the joint resolution at the last session of Congress; and the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. GRONNA—who was then chairman of the committee, and I have his remarks about it here in the RECORD—was strongly in favor of the measure. I assume that the Senator may want to oppose this joint resolution, but suppose he does; why should the half hour be clipped off of this morning business, which, under the Senate rule, is dedicated to this purpose? After the Senate has determined to proceed with the consideration of the joint resolution, why not consider it for half an hour? As I say, Senators who have speeches of some length to make can make their speeches after 2 o'clock on the unfinished business, or whatever then happens to be before the Senate, all day long.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have an amendment to this joint resolution which proposes to treat in a similar manner certain interests that imported sugar. There is some question as to whether their legal standing is the same as that of those who are interested in this joint resolution. The committee passed upon the amendment and the claim of my parties, and voted by a very narrow margin not to include in this appropriation the claims that I have presented.

I do not care to ride in on other legislation the claims of people in my State. I feel, however, that the legislation should be uniform and general; and if the Government is to pay claims for sugar which was imported under the high inflated conditions when the Government encouraged these importers to import sugar for the benefit of the public market I feel that that legislation should be general, and their claims should be equally considered.

This measure, however, was presented before the claim of my parties, and I do not want to delay it. If the Senator will wait until I can get an agreement, I will withdraw my amendment and try to induce the people whom I am trying to assist to introduce a separate bill for reference to the Agricultural Committee. I feel, however, in view of the fact that I gave notice that I desired to offer an amendment which would make more general the appropriations for relief, that the Senator should postpone action upon the joint resolution.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator gave that notice a week ago.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have not the amendment here, and I am not prepared to submit it. It is in my office. I had intended to go on with another matter. However, if the Senator wishes to proceed, I am perfectly willing to allow him to do so without further debate or delay.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am not prepared by any means to give my assent to this measure. In fact, I have been endeavoring to study it with a desire to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion as to what ought to be done with it, and with the light before me I am disposed to oppose the passage of the joint resolution.

Apparently the Department of Justice entered into some kind of an arrangement with the beneficiaries of this bill. B. H. Howell Son & Co., by which this company assumed the character of an agent of the Department of Justice to go to the Republic of Argentina and there buy some thirteen to fifteen thousand tons of sugar for the Government of the United States, with a view to reducing the price of sugar to the consumers in this country. I have not been able, after a somewhat diligent search, to find any authority in the law for any such action upon the part of the Department of Justice, or any other department. Of course, if B. H. Howell Son & Co. were actually the agents of the Government of the United States, and made the contract as such agents of the Government of the United States, B. H. Howell Son & Co. are not responsible in the matter at all.

The Government of the United States bought this sugar, and the Government of the United States is the loser, and owns the sugar, as a matter of course. That, however, is not the situation. B. H. Howell Son & Co. can not prove that they were the agents of the Government of the United States, simply because there were was no law authorizing the appointment of them or anybody else as the agents of the Government of the United States for this purpose.

Then, Mr. President, it appears that having bought this sugar in Argentina, and it appearing that it was a losing transaction to bring it to the United States, they sought to dispose of the sugar in Argentina, taking whatever loss there was, but that in some way or other the State Department forbade them to sell the sugar in Argentina—a perfectly unjustifiable thing, so far as I can understand the matter, on the part of the Department of State. Apparently, these officers of the Department of Justice and the Department of State went into this thing without a shred of authority for whatever they did or tried to do in the matter.

I can not see how we can give our approbation to such plain usurpation upon the part of these departments of the Government. If the situation was such that it was in the public interest that the Government of the United States should buy, or authorize some one else to buy, in the Republic of Argentine or elsewhere, some 15,000 tons of sugar, Congress was the body to be appealed to. The requisite legislation ought to have been asked. Instead of doing that, the Attorney General, in some way or other, as a kind of guardian of the whole public interest, appoints Howell Son & Co., or purports to appoint Howell Son & Co., the agents of the Government of the United States to go down and buy this enormous amount of sugar. It is a losing transaction, and now the Government of the United States is asked to foot the bill and make them good for their losses upon the purchases which they made.

This is no time to appeal to the Congress of the United States in the matter. The Congress should have been appealed to when the exigency which the officers seemed to think was before the country required action upon their part. I look at it as a perfectly unjustifiable assumption of authority that this Congress ought not even to condone by its action. I may be wrong about it, but that is the situation as I gather it from the hasty consideration which I could give to the matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to supplement his remarks by reading a sentence or two from the views of the minority in the House after an investigation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly; but if the Senator will pardon me, let me call attention first to the views expressed by the Senate committee to show what it is that has been done.

The report says:

> The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12), which authorizes the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) to take over from the American Trading Co. and B. H. Howell Son & Co. a certain transaction involving the importation of 13,902 tons of sugar from the Argentine Republic, under the direction and as agents of the Department of Justice—
>
> Agents of the Department of Justice—> and the Department of State, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the resolution do pass without amendment.
> This resolution and the necessity for this action is the result of a campaign inaugurated by the Department of Justice to reduce the high price of sugar prevailing during the spring and summer of 1920.

I am utterly unable to recall any legislation by Congress which authorized the Department of Justice to engage in any kind of a campaign for the reduction of the cost of sugar or any other commodity.

> When sugar was selling at from 26 to 30 cents a pound at retail the Department of Justice attempted to secure a large supply from the Argentine Republic, with the aid of the State Department. There were two difficulties: First, there was an embargo in the Argentine against the exportation of sugar; and, second, the Department of Justice needed the cooperation of private agencies to have the sugar purchased and distributed. The State Department secured a verbal promise from the Argentine Government officials to suspend the embargo, and then the Department of Justice requested an American importing house, the American Trading Co., to proceed to the purchasing of the sugar, and an American commission house, B. H. Howell Son & Co., to act as distributing agents in this country.
> Upon the assurance by the Department of Justice that arrangements had been made through the State Department with the Argentine Government for the immediate lifting of the embargo as to sugar purchased at the request of the Department of Justice, the American Trading Co. forthwith proceeded to make the purchases requested.
> After 13,902 tons of sugar had been purchased it was found that there was difficulty and delay in obtaining the lifting of the embargo, and no further sugar was purchased, although it was the original plan to buy a much larger quantity.
> The permit for exportation, finally issued by the Argentine Government at the request of the State Department, to the American Trading Co. as purchasing agent of the Department of Justice, was not secured until more than two months after the transaction was initiated. Immediately upon the issuance of the export license and before the arrival of any part of the sugar in the United States, the agency selected by the Department of Justice and under its direction, offered the sugar first to canners and preservers and then to the retail trade. Due largely to the advertising given to the proposed importation by the Department of Justice, the price of sugar had declined very rapidly between the times when the purchases were made and the time when the export license was finally secured. Owing to this decline, during the delay in obtaining the export license, B. H. Howell Son & Co., who were acting as distributors under the direction of the Department of Justice, were able to dispose of only approximately 5,000 tons of the total purchases of 13,902 tons.

I had the impression, Mr. President, that the Food Administration was authorized to handle to some extent the food supplies of the country during the war. But it is news, to me at least, that the Department of Justice was clothed with any power whatever by the Congress in that regard.

This report further states:

> This fact was called to the attention of the Department of Justice by the American importing house, and they requested the department to authorize the selling of the sugar in the Argentine, the bulk of which had not then left the Argentine. But owing to advices from the State Department that it would be improper for the Government to sell the sugar in the Argentine after the United States Government had obtained a permit in its own name to export it from the Argentine, the Department of Justice refused to allow a resale by the American importing house.

By what right does the Department of State say to B. H. Howell Son & Co. that B. H. Howell Son & Co. can not sell sugar in the Argentine which it bought in the Argentine? Of course, the Government of the United States somehow or other got a license to export it. That is all they got. The thing is inexplicable to me. The whole transaction is in every sense forbidding.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, there is no doubt that this is an unusual transaction. It was a war measure. I do not claim that the Department of Justice or the Department of State, without any legislation authorizing them, could create this company their agent in law so as to make any agreement it might make a contract binding upon the Government. During the war and immediately after the war the departments were doing many things for the relief of the public which in ordinary times they would not do. Evidence was given before the committee by the then Attorney General, Mr. A. Mitchell Palmer, who personally appeared before the committee, according to the report; and letters between the parties, exchanged by officials of the Department of Justice and this company, are set forth in the report. Whether there was created in law the relation of principal and agent, it did result in the head of the Department of Justice and the head of the State Department utilizing this company and its purchasing power as an instrumentality for buying a large amount of sugar, trying to break the price of sugar in the market and lower it to the public, and furnish an adequate supply of sugar. All the departments admit that, and all their officials stand by it, and recommend this legislation. The Committee on Agriculture reported in favor of it. They reported in favor of it at the last session of Congress, and the Senate passed the bill at the last session of Congress.

I refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 24, 1921, on page 3758 and read therefrom as follows from remarks made by former Senator Gronna, then chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

> Mr. GRONNA. They were unable to get any sugar from Argentina. It was through the Government of the United States that they were able to have the sugar exported from Argentina, because there was an embargo placed upon the exportation of sugar from that country, and so the matter was taken up with the Department of Justice and with the Department of State. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry held public hearings on this particular question, and the Attorney General, Mr. Palmer, appeared before the committee, as did also members of the Sugar Equalization Board, and all of them agreed that the joint resolution ought to pass.

Mr. KING. I am not quite clear from the Senator's statement that the individuals did not initiate the movement themselves.

Mr. GRONNA. Oh no.

Mr. KING. They found themselves unable to get further sugar from Argentina and utilized the Government as an instrumentality to secure the sugar?

Mr. GRONNA. No; that is not the case.

Mr. KING. And because of their losses they want the Government to recoup them?

Mr. GRONNA. The Attorney General stated that he, together with other officials, asked the corporation which deals in sugar to go to foreign countries and buy sugar in order that the price of sugar might be made to decline. They did so, and letters to that effect are published in the hearings, with photographic copies of what I call real contracts approved by the Department of State and by the Department of Justice, so that the men were in fact agents of the Government of the United States.

I realize that it would be bad practice to begin to allow claims where the Government of the United States itself was really not responsible for the loss. The committee hesitated in taking up the matter at all until hearings had been held and until Mr. Palmer had made his statement, but he said there is no question about the matter and recommended strongly that the Government of the United States should pay. I think the amount will be somewhere about $2,750,000, which was the loss to those people.

Mr. President, I do not look upon this as a legal liability. I think the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] may be quite right, that a Department of the Government, without the consent of Congress, can not legally bind the Government. But where a company responds to the request, in an emergency, of both the Department of Justice and the Department of State, I think the Government is morally bound not to compel those private individuals to bear the loss which they incurred at the invitation of the Government for a public benefit.

I know nothing about the facts except as they are contained in the report, and I ask that the report containing the letters of the Government officials be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks, so that the whole transaction may be understood.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Senate report No. 72, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session.]

DISPOSITION OF SUGAR IMPORTED FROM ARGENTINA.

"Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, submitted the following report, to accompany S. J. Res. 12:

"The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) which authorizes the President to require the United States Sugar Equalization Board (Inc.) to take over from the American Trading Co. and B. H. Howell Son & Co. a certain transaction involving the importation of 13,902 tons of sugar from the Argentine Republic, under the direction and as agents of the Department of Justice and the Department of State, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the resolution do pass without amendment.

"This resolution and the necessity for this action is the result of a campaign inaugurated by the Department of Justice to reduce the high price of sugar prevailing during the spring and summer of 1920. When sugar was selling at from 26 to 30 cents a pound at retail the Department of Justice attempted to secure a large supply from the Argentine Republic, with the aid of the State Department. There were two difficulties: First, there was an embargo in the Argentine against the exportation of sugar; and, second, the Department of Justice needed the cooperation of private agencies to have the sugar purchased and distributed. The State Department secured a verbal promise from the Argentine Government officials to suspend the embargo, and then the Department of Justice requested an American importing house, the American Trading Co., to proceed to the purchasing of the sugar, and an American commission house, B. H. Howell Son & Co., to act as distributing agents in this country.

"Upon the assurance by the Department of Justice that arrangements had been made through the State Department with the Argentine Government for the immediate lifting of the embargo as to sugar purchased at the request of the Department of Justice, the American Trading Co. forthwith proceeded to make the purchases requested.

"After 13,902 tons of sugar had been purchased it was found that there was difficulty and delay in obtaining the lifting of the embargo, and no further sugar was purchased, although it was the original plan to buy a much larger quantity.

"The permit for exportation, finally issued by the Argentine Government at the request of the State Department, to the American Trading Co. as purchasing agent of the Department of Justice, was not secured until more than two months after the transaction was initiated. Immediately upon the issuance of the export license and before the arrival of any part of the sugar in the United States the agency selected by the Department of Justice, and under its direction, offered the sugar first to canners and preservers and then to the retail trade. Due largely to the advertising given to the proposed importation by the Department of Justice, the price of sugar had declined very rapidly between the times when the purchases were made and the time when the export license was finally secured. Owing to this decline during the delay in obtaining the export license, B. H. Howell Son & Co., who were acting as distributors under the direction of the Department of Justice, were able to dispose of only approximately 5,000 tons of the total purchases of 13,902 tons.

"This fact was called to the attention of the Department of Justice by the American importing house, and they requested the department to authorize the selling of the sugar in the Argentine, the bulk of which had not then left the Argentine. But owing to advices from the State Department that it would be improper for the Government to sell the sugar in the Argentine after the United States Government had obtained a permit in its own name to export it from the Argentine, the Department of Justice refused to allow a resale by the American importing house.

"As a result of all of these proceedings, which were initiated for the purpose of reducing the price of sugar in the United States—and which had that effect—the two American houses which entered into this transaction in good faith at the request of the Government departments, and which were controlled by the Government in the entire transaction, found themselves with 8,902 tons of this sugar left on their hands in the United States and the Department of Justice unable to aid them in the disposition of it.

"The matter has been presented to the Sugar Equalization Board and has been investigated by it. The representatives of the board have stated that justice demands authorizing the board to take over this transaction. If this resolution is passed and the President directs such action, they will liquidate the entire transaction without profit or compensation of any kind to the companies who were the agents of the Government.

"The former Attorney General, the president of the Sugar Equalization Board, and the counsel of the board appeared before the committee, described the entire transaction, and stated that in their judgment it was the duty of the Government, through the Sugar Equalization Board, to take over the transaction, dispose of the sugar, and thus relieve its agents, the American Trading Co. and B. H. Howell Son & Co., of an intolerable burden. The committee, having examined and verified the official correspondence relating to this matter, is convinced that justice demands the taking over of the entire transaction as authorized by this resolution. This correspondence is set forth in full, in order that it may be clearly shown that the concerns handled the transaction as agents of the United States and not for their own profit.

EXHIBIT NO. 1.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., May 11, 1920.

Mr. WALLACE D. FRANKLIN,
Vice President American Trading Co.,
25 Broad Street, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I was notified by State Department of the receipt of cable from the Argentine that upon proper presentation through official channels of the American Government that the Argentine would lift the embargo on present surpluses in that country, now amounting to some 150,000 tons. The American attaché, however, estimates the surplus at approximately 70,000 tons.

After talking this over with your representative, Mr. Linn, and Mr. Giddings, it was deemed advisable that your agent already on the ground should be advised to contract for or buy as much of the entire surplus as possible before any further request was made that the embargo be lifted, as of course upon the general knowledge that this has been done will create a speculative market.

I have made arrangements with very large interests to handle all or any part of this sugar that we may indicate. Our principal idea being, first, to secure sugar for the United States; second, to secure the sugar at the lowest possible price; and, third, to control or indicate the channels of distribution after arrival here.

It occurred to me that if your agent cooperated for all interests that expenses incurred by him could be prorated by the interests, as Mr. Giddings, and Mr. Linn, your representative, indicate. I have figured that your firm would handle approximately 10,000 tons of this sugar, the balance to be handled by firm or firms that I may indicate hereafter. I will give Mr. Linn copy of last cable from the Argentine tomorrow, which I think will assure you that permit will be granted when asked for.

I hope that you will give this your immediate attention, as we must work very rapidly to beat the speculators in the market.

Yours, very truly,
HOWARD FIGG,
Special Assistant to the Attorney General.

To: The American Embassy at Buenos Aires, Argentina.
Dated: May 13, 1920.
No.: 45.

With reference to the telegrams from the department, Nos. 39, 40, and 43, and to your telegram No. 113, regarding the lifting of the embargo on sugar from Argentina: This is strictly confidential. The American Trading Co. has been appointed purchasing agent by the Department of Justice and it is being instructed by that department to obtain quietly as many options as possible before the market is aware that the embargo has been lifted, in order to avoid unduly high prices, otherwise it will be impossible to buy Argentine sugar. By this method there will be an avoidance of profiteering at this end and the Department of Justice is safeguarding all steps so that the American household consumer may be protected.

Instructions are hereby given to you to bring this matter most confidentially to the attention of the Government of the Argentine for its information. The hope is expressed that the Argentine Government will be satisfied with this arrangement. In the near future the official request for the lifting of the embargo will be made. This is being done merely to avoid speculation, which might destroy the entire transaction, and there is no intention of preventing sugar interests in the Argentine from securing a price which is just.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., August 2, 1920.

Mr. W. S. FRANKLIN,
Vice President American Trading Co.,
25 Broad Street, New York.

DEAR MR. FRANKLIN: I am in receipt of your communication of July 29 in regard to disposing of a certain portion of the 14,000 tons of Argentine sugar contracted for by the B. H. Howell Son & Co., and in which the Department of Justice participated in distribution.

I am very sorry to inform you that under no circumstances could the Government concur in the thought even of allowing any portion of this sugar to be sold in the Argentine. You will find attached hereto paraphrase of cablegram received from Wiley, in charge of the embassy at Buenos Aires, which very definitely states the position of the Government in this transaction. But in spite of this I took the matter up with the State Department and found that Ambassador Stimpson, from Argentina, was here. I arranged a conference with him, which took place Saturday, and I can not begin to make you understand how deeply he feels on this subject.

He also brought to my attention a matter of seeming interest to you, and that was that if any portion of this sugar was sold in the Argentine it would be ruination to the American Trading Co., or any other American interests that might be involved, as well as a very serious thing for the United States Government.

I had a talk with Mr. Linn, your representative here in Washington, this morning and I tried to make him understand the seriousness of this thought.

I do not feel that there is an opportunity for you or the B. H. Howell Co. to lose any money on this transaction, but that you will find a ready sale for the sugar on its arrival here. I have been assured by a great many dealers over the country that they are ready to buy on delivery, but would not contract ahead of time. I not only think there will not be any loss but that your profits will be the same as you expected from the start.

I am leaving for a short vacation on Thursday and have left this matter entirely in the hands of Mr. Wilkins during my absence.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,

Yours, truly,

HOWARD FIGG,
Special Assistant to the Attorney General.

MINISTRY OF HACIENDA OF THE ARGENTINE NATION,
Buenos Aires, June 23, 1920.

Having seen the request of his excellency the ambassador of the United States of America regarding the necessary authorization for the American Trading Co., purchasing agent of the Department of Justice, to export 13,909 tons of sugar of national production, and considering that the Government is animated by the desire to fulfill satisfactorily the foregoing petition made direct by a sister nation, the executive power of the nation, in general agreement with the ministers, decrees:

ARTICLE 1. That the necessary permission be given to the American Trading Co., purchasing agent for the Department of Justice of the United States of America, to export to the said country 13,909 tons of sugar of national production.

BUENOS AIRES, July 29, 1920.

SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.:

Urgent.

The price of sugar has gone up to plus 12 pesos paper per 10 kilos. The Government is being attacked bitterly by the opposition of press on account of the exorbitant price of sugar and the scarcity, which is claimed to be due to the permits granted for export and to graft. Sullivan is telegraphing to the American Trading Co. regarding their opportunity to sell at a big profit here. I urge that you direct the company not to sell any of the 14,000 tons obtained in the name of the Government under any circumstances. This would create a most unfortunate impression.

AUGUST 12, 1920—6 P. M.

AMERICAN EMBASSY,
Buenos Aires, Argentina:

Reference is made to your No. 185, of August 6, and No. 186, of August 9.

1. If approved by Sullivan, convey to the Government of Argentina that this Government desires to state again its appreciation of its favor in permitting the export of sugar to relieve necessities in this country, and that since the situation in the United States has been remedied in large measure through the courteous act of the Argentine Government and at the same time the market of Argentina appears to be suffering from a sugar shortage, this Government would be glad to resell to the Argentine Government, if it so desires, or on the market under the supervision, such quantities of sugar which have not already been exported to the United States; that the sugar is offered at 16 cents United States currency, and amounts to 4,383 tons. You may explain to the Argentine Government if you think advisable that the stated price is placed somewhat above purchase price in order to cover expenditures incidental to its handling, purchase, and storage.

2. Please be careful to avoid giving impression which you warned against in your cablegram of July 29, No. 178.

COLBY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I realize that the Senator from New York probably wants to talk on this matter, and I do not wish to consume his time. I simply want to say that I do not see how the Government, as an honest Government, can induce a man to do something for the public benefit and then leave him in the lurch to bear the expense. This did result in benefit to the people, for the price of sugar was actually reduced.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator if he thinks the Government should compensate individuals for any and all losses made through unauthorized contracts during the war?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator puts his question as broadly as that, I would unhesitatingly say no; but where the head of the Department of Justice, the qualified legal expert of the Government, the Attorney General of the United States; the head of the Cabinet, the Secretary of State; and the Sugar Equalization Board, another governmental instrumentality, go to a dealer in a commodity in time of public emergency, stress, and shortage, and beg him to act for them and use his professional skill in acquiring an amount of sugar and then, owing to embargoes put on by foreign countries, which we can not control at all, and such matters as that, the delivery is tied up until the price drops and the sugar is left upon the man's hands and he has to dispose of it at a loss, I do think we ought to assume that responsibility. I do not think it is acting in good faith to repudiate it, although I agree perfectly that if I had been Attorney General I think I would have come to Congress and asked them to pass a resolution authorizing me to take that action. But he did not, and it seems for us now to say that because the Government can not be sued for this, or because it was not strictly authorized in law, we will not compensate them would be assuming too technical a position and would result in injustice.

What private concern under the circumstances, I ask, would not take the advice of the Attorney General of the United States? They probably assumed that the Attorney General was acting within his authority, and most people who were not lawyers would not be inclined to question it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to call the Senator's attention to a letter, Exhibit No. 2, written by the special assistant to the Attorney General, found on page 4 of the report. It seems to me that it throws a great light on this matter in addition to all that these other letters disclose.

There were conversations between these parties, apparently, about which we have no information. In that letter, referring to his conversation with Ambassador Stimpson, he said:

He also brought to my attention a matter of seeming interest to you, and that was that if any portion of this sugar was sold in the Argentine it would be ruination to the American Trading Co., or any other American interests that might be involved, as well as a very serious thing for the United States Government.

This is a letter to Mr. Franklin, the vice president of the American Trading Co., by Howard Figg, special assistant to the Attorney General. He said further:

I had a talk with Mr. Linn, your representative here in Washington, this morning, and I tried to make him understand the seriousness of this thought.

And then he said further in the letter:

I do not feel that there is an opportunity for you or the B. H. Howell Co. to lose any money on this transaction, but that you will find a ready sale for the sugar on its arrival here.

In other words, it was their business, not the Government's. He said further:

I have been assured by a great many dealers over the country that they are ready to buy on delivery, but would not contract ahead of time. I not only think there will not be any loss but that your profits will be the same as you expected from the start.

In other words, the conversation evidently was that these people expected to make very much profit out of this transaction, and the Government was assisting in that regard by getting the removal of the embargo and allowing the sugar to be shipped. That is the impression which the letter would create in the ordinary mind, unless it can be explained in some way. It appears that the Attorney General was trying to convince these people that they did not stand to lose on this transaction.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from New York ought to answer that, it seems to me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He is about to try to do it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator has reached a conclusion absolutely contrary to the facts. These people never asked to go into this business. They were asked to go into it by the Government. The Government told them that they would get the embargo lifted in the Argentine. Depending on that assurance and agreeing absolutely to bring in the sugar in the manner prescribed by the department, which limited their profits to such a small figure that it would never tempt any commercial firm—only 1 cent a pound on a transaction of that size—they proceeded and bought the sugar in the Argentine, having established their credit to do so. Then the Government did not produce the license for the exportation of the sugar——

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not yield. The Government did not produce the license which they had said they would produce. Weeks went by, and the Argentine Government would not act. Sugar had been advertised all over the United States by the Department of Justice as being on its way from the Argentine. The price all over the United States went to smithereens. Week by week it went down, down, down.

These people then asked the Department of Justice to let them sell the sugar in the Argentine, and the Department of Justice replied, "Under no circumstances can the Government concur in the thought even of allowing any portion of the sugar to be sold in the Argentine," and forced them to take the loss. They were helpless, and the letter, only a portion of which the Senator from Florida has read, simply reflects the struggle of these people, caught on the fishhook baited by the Government itself, to escape; and they were not permitted to escape. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield the floor.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Connecticut if he is not really pleading ignorance of the law for those men who did what they knew was an illegal act?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think the Government is morally bound. I do not claim that we are legally bound. As I said before, I think these two great departments of the Government, State and Justice, having gone to a private plant and asked them to relieve an emergency, and when the private plant acted according to the wishes of the Government, it ought to assume the responsibility and compensate them for their losses.

SEASONAL COAL RATES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 1806.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1806) to further amend the interstate commerce act, as amended, to provide for seasonal rates for the transportation of coal.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I shall at this time speak only briefly on the coal measures before the Senate, postponing any further remarks on the provisions of the bills until the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has spoken on another subject. However, before yielding to him I wish to make a short statement in regard to the coal legislation proposed by me.

The bills to be considered by the Senate, Nos. 1806 and 1807, were introduced after hearings conducted by a subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee, finally passed upon before the full committee, and ordered reported favorably. The Committee on Manufactures also carried on extensive hearings on the Calder bill, which was proposed last season, and in my opinion these hearings were of great value. All of these hearings show that the conditions now existing are uneconomic in the extreme, that abuses exist, and that relief in some measure is greatly needed. With a desire that something constructive be accomplished to remedy present conditions, these bills were introduced.

Next to the railroad question the coal problem is the most vital one confronting us. A sufficient supply of coal, distributed uniformly, produced at a reasonable price, is essential to the very life and energy of the Nation. It is vital to every human and industrial activity, for without coal the Nation would starve and freeze.

Within the past five years the country has suffered from a shortage of coal, caused by blizzard, switchmen's strike, and traffic jam. People have also suffered from high prices, while some persons in the coal trade without conscience have taken advantage of the situation to profiteer. The situation to-day is critical and conditions deplorable. While it is true that bituminous coal is cheaper, the mines are idle and labor is unemployed and production is far below normal. The people are indifferent and are not laying in their stocks. Freight rates are sky-high, and unless something is done to stimulate buying the panic price of last year in the late spring and summer may be repeated; next winter transportation may be overtaxed, and, if so, a shortage will occur. Then I firmly believe drastic Government action will be again demanded by the people. There was plenty of coal last year, enough labor to mine it, but a shortage of cars delayed deliveries and a buyers' panic was caused. This was entirely unnecessary. Had there been a Government agency charged with the responsibility of correctly informing the people, such as the pending legislation proposes, I believe the speculators would have been routed and the public saved from extortion.

The public expect the present Congress at this session to make some effort to relieve this situation. They will not endure another season of prices for coal delivered to the consumer for domestic and industrial purposes ranging from $15 to $30 per ton, a price that taxes every household; that is reflected in the cost of production in every factory, in railroad and trolley rates, in cost of power, gas, and electricity, and retards development of any housing plan. With enough mines and miners to produce 750,000,000 tons a year and 150,000 coal cars idle during the summer months, the condition is one which can and should be relieved.

Even now, with bituminous coal a drug on the market, the anthracite situation is complex. Anthracite for domestic purposes is selling at from $12 to $15 per ton, while other commodities are selling 20 to 40 per cent lower than during the war. The operators, the railroads, with high freight rates, and the dealers are complacent over the situation, and no one can tell why. No one seems to care except the consumer, who complains bitterly, as I will show by letters which depict deplorable conditions among those who need coal. Although the consumer is the largest part of human society, interest in him seems to lag at times.

A thorough study by a department of Government, with widespread publicity, will remedy many of the evils and abuses now existing. The proposed legislation provides for this.

In anthracite prices we know that high wages, increased cost of mining, royalties, and freight rates have largely added to the cost, but there seems to be an unduly large spread of cost between the car at point of origin and the bin of the consumer, and nobody can tell the reason or find out. This legislation proposes that the Department of Commerce shall find out and make public the facts.

I wish to state at the outset that I have no prejudice or enmity toward coal operators or dealers. I believe they should be treated fairly and permitted to make reasonable profits. But I also believe they should not treat the public unfairly or encourage conditions that cause unreasonable profits and oppose publicity as to facts which reflect on the conditions I have mentioned.

There is nothing in the bill which controls or regulates their business. It does, however, compel full information and provides for the publication of all the facts regarding the production and distribution of this essential commodity. It does provide that it shall be the Government's duty to study the question and advise Congress and the public of all the essential details that make up the price of coal.

It has long been the duty of the Government to know something more regarding coal production—a duty which has been ignored for 50 years, while the facts regarding many other utilities and commodities have been carefully studied.

I have never advocated Government ownership, control, or drastic regulation. I do not believe the Government should compete with legitimate business enterprises or should interfere with the law of supply and demand. But I do believe the Government should compel full information for the public benefit in commodities essential for the life and comfort of the people.

There is a great slump in coal buying at the present time. The bituminous mines are losing money. Many mines are idle. The railroads have 150,000 cars idle at a time when they can carry the coal at less than the winter cost.

The first bill—Senate bill 1806—provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission may make seasonal reductions to stimulate the movement of coal. If relief is to be brought, the bill should be passed immediately. Coal is the most important freight item of the railroads, representing at least one-third of the entire business, including, of course, anthracite. The industry represents an annual turnover of billions of dollars. Without a sufficient supply of coal transportation is at a standstill and the people starve. To say that a branch of Government shall not study the question and compel information to stabilize the industry and bring relief in improved conditions is foolish, and to say that this is Government interference in business is ridiculous. Yet when any corporation, interest, or industry is in trouble they rush to Congress for aid. We pass emergency tariff bills, amend the Federal reserve act, extend the powers of the War Finance Corporation, until the statute books are cluttered with special legislation to relieve certain emergencies. In other words, every interest in the country when in doubt wishes help from the Government. Yet when the Government desires them to cooperate and pursue sane methods they distrust and decry the parenthood.

I do not take the gloomy view of portending disaster painted recently by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN]. I do not believe we shall ever visit the tomb of democracy in this country. I still believe this Republic shall live if we do our duty here.

The Senator mentioned this coal legislation, and I can not construe his inference other than that any Government approach to the coal industry is a regulation of commerce. My reply to him is that there is a clear-cut difference between a regulation of commerce under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution and action taken by the legislative body of the Government, directly or through a chosen agent, for the purpose of securing information merely. The securing of information is an inherent power of Congress, arising by necessary implication through its constitutional existence, and that even though the process of securing this information may have an indirect effect upon commerce, it is not in legal significance a regulation of commerce. Through the welfare clause of the Constitution the legislation is transferred from an appearance of regulation of interstate commerce to a measure for the promotion of the public's welfare.

The doctrine of implied power was one of Chief Justice Marshall's most powerful levers, by means of which he lifted Federal Government to a position of commanding authority. Therefore, while not a lawyer, I feel no insecurity in my position on this legislation, nor do I believe that the liberties of anyone will be overthrown or invaded by it.

Repeatedly has the Senate investigated the coal situation, each investigation arising from critical conditions. Nothing of a constructive character has ever been done. The Vardaman committee made an extended investigation, and much valuable information was secured, but no action was taken. Recently the committee on reconstruction gave attention to the subject and proposed legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures. Extended hearings were conducted, which I have carefully read, and much light was thrown on the situation.

Months ago the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee appointed a subcommittee to act under a resolution of investigation introduced by me. That subcommittee consisted of Senators ELKINS, TOWNSEND, MYERS, WOLCOTT, and myself, as chairman. The country was suffering from war conditions, as it has suffered ever since, which in part caused excessive prices for coal, shortage of cars, and labor troubles. The committee held exhaustive hearings and gave extended study to the situation. Previous to and during the strike the committee cooperated with the Director General of Railroads, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Fuel Administrator, Mr. Garfield, during his brief return to duty after the war. In addition to the hearings assistance was given in reporting car shortages at the mines. Through these efforts the supply of surplus coal was increased and some of the ill effects of the stagnation caused by the strike and severe weather conditions were avoided.

At the conclusion of these hearings the bills before the Senate were reported by the subcommittee to the full committee and were reported favorably by that committee to the Senate. They are numbered S. 1806 and S. 1807.

Senate bill 1806 amends the interstate commerce act and empowers that body to make seasonal reductions of freight rates on coal during the summer months and corresponding increases during the winter months, on their own initiative or after a hearing, as a means of inducing production and distribution when the mines, labor, and cars are idle.

Their powers are not limited as to locality or amount, but it is left entirely with the commission to adjust the rates to meet conditions in different localities.

This bill has received the approval of Chairman Clark, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as well as the entire Interstate Commerce Committee.

Senate bill 1807, which I will move to take up following action on the seasonal coal bill now under consideration, empowers the Secretary of Commerce to procure facts as to production, distribution, and transportation (costs and profits) when found necessary by the President; to make a complete study of the storage of coal, statutory zoning, and the advisability of a central purchasing agency for Government coal. It empowers the Director of the Bureau of Mines to study standards of classification of coal and publish the facts concerning such classification. It is the committee's opinion, if the informative facts are procured and published, that, through common counsel and advice, with the cooperation of the operators and the consumers, much can be accomplished to stabilize the industry.

The coal industry is scattered throughout 33 States; 10,000 mines serve the people of the country; different conditions prevail in various sections, but all serve a common purpose; yet upon no one now is imposed the duty of helping them or the consumer to meet the problems which are arising daily; whereas in the case of the farmers the Agricultural Department and in the case of the railroads the Interstate Commerce Commission function.

Let coal be put under a department of the Government which can thoroughly study the question and inform Congress and the people of the facts. Those who buy coal and need coal are entitled to some consideration by the Congress. The people wish Congress to act.

Price fixing will not relieve the situation, but I believe legislation of the character proposed will compose present uncertainty and bring relief to the consumer and better conditions to the operators. I hear of no opposition from consumers. I will later present letters from those who buy coal in large quantities favoring this legislation.

I shall speak at length upon this subject after the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] shall have concluded.

In concluding, I wish to say that I have no antagonism to the coal operators; but I must frankly state that I believe a great many coal producers to-day are committed to the theory that the coal industry can be best exploited by maintaining the same seasonal speculative atmosphere, many of the producers resting complacently under the present depressed business situation in the belief that when the demand for fuel appears they will be able to employ the opportunity to recover with compound interest the losses now being sustained.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION FOR VETERANS OF WORLD WAR.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. From the Committee on Finance, I ask unanimous consent to report favorably with amendments what is known as the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, being the bill (S. 506) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 133) thereon, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that there probably will be a great demand for the report on this bill, and that perhaps the number usually printed ought to be increased?

Mr. McCUMBER. I presume that if I asked that the report be printed to the number to which would probably be desired, the matter would have to go to the Committee on Printing. I think there will be applications for probably about 50,000 copies; at least I am so informed; but possibly the chairman of the Committee on Printing, or some other member of that committee, can state the rule with reference to the printing.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The chairman of the Committee on Printing is not present at this moment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then the usual number of the report may be printed now, and we shall later see how many copies will be required. Undoubtedly the type will be kept set up, and we can order the additional copies which we may think are necessary.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I feel very sure that there will be an immediate demand for a very large number of copies of the bill and report.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. How many copies does the Senator think may be needed?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think we shall need 50,000 copies.

Mr. GERRY. How many copies will be printed under the ordinary rule?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think about 5,000. I think that number may be printed without submitting the matter to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Does the Senator from North Dakota intend to ask for action shortly on the bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. I intend to have the bill taken up within a day or two, if I can get the consent of the Senate to do so.

CONDITIONS IN IRELAND.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on the 16th day of April last I introduced a joint resolution, which I now ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 27) protesting against violations of the laws of land warfare committed by the British forces against the Irish people in their struggle for independence.

Whereas there is a state of war existing between the Government of Great Britain and the people of Ireland; and

Whereas the armed forces of Great Britain in Ireland have violated the laws of warfare as set forth in The Hague Convention of 1907, to which the Government of the United States is a signatory power, in the following particulars:

(1) Prisoners of war are not treated as prisoners of the British Government but as prisoners of the individuals or corps that capture them.

(2) Such prisoners are subjected to cruel and inhuman treatment.

(3) Prisoners are assassinated without excuse, or under the pretext that they are attempting to escape.

(4) The property of prisoners is confiscated.

(5) Prisoners, as well as noncombatant civilians, are compelled by military force to perform excessive labor.

(6) Irish Nationals are forced to take part in the operations of war against their own people.

(7) Hostages are carried by the British forces when engaged in war operations.

(8) Irish Nationals are forced to swear allegiance to the Government of the invading forces.

(9) Irish citizens are forced under extreme torture to give information about their armed forces.

(10) Family rights and honor, the lives of persons, and private property are violated by arson, pillage, and assassination. Husbands and sons are killed in the presence of their wives and mothers. Innocent women and children are shot down in cold blood by soldiers driving through the streets in motor lorries.

(11) Penalties are laid upon towns and villages as the result of the acts of individuals for which they can not be held legally responsible; homes are broken into in the dead of night, the inhabitants terrorized, and the houses looted and burned. During the year 1920 more than 48,000 homes were thus violated.

(12) Factories, creameries, hay ricks, and other food of domestic animals, owned by noncombatants, are burned and destroyed, leaving thousands of people without means of gaining a livelihood and thus bringing on much suffering and starvation.

(13) A policy of reprisals has been instituted, by which villages are laid waste and homes are destroyed, contrary to the law of nations and of humanity.

(14) The property of religious, educational, and civic institutions is destroyed.

And

Whereas many thousands of loyal citizens of the United States are related by blood to the victims of these atrocities in Ireland; and

Whereas this situation is making it exceedingly difficult to maintain unimpaired and unembarrassed the long standing good will and common understanding between the United States and Great Britain, which the Congress is zealously desirous of fostering and perpetuating: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the Irish people are entitled to a government of their own choice; and

That the Congress views with horror and indignation the continued violation of the dictates of humanity and the laws of war by the armed forces of Great Britain in Ireland and most solemnly protests to the world against the continuation of such acts of uncivilized warfare.

Mr. NORRIS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for two hours and a half,

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator intend to conclude his remarks to-night?

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to finish to-night.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought, since the Senator has been speaking two hours and a half, that perhaps he would prefer to suspend at this point and resume in the morning.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not particular. With the understanding that I can resume early to-morrow, I will yield the floor now. I think I can finish in a half hour.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that the arrangement is to adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, we want an executive session.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would suggest to the Senator from Nebraska, who has spoken a long time now, that he take part of the time to-morrow to finish, and after that, if permitted, I will follow with the coal information that I have.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I will yield with the understanding that I may resume early to-morrow. I should dislike to be put off as I was to-day. I could have finished to-night if it had not been for that.

Mr. CURTIS. We will take a recess if the Senator prefers.

Mr. NORRIS. With that understanding, I yield the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I trust that we will take an adjournment and not a recess, because during the morning hour to-morrow I want to bring up the resolution in respect to the Mingo coal strike. I want to present it to the Senate and get a vote upon it one way or the other. I hope that the morning hour will be accorded so that that can be undertaken.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, naturally I am interested in having the coal bills considered by the Senate as expeditiously as possible, but I feel that there is so much general routine business to be transacted that we ought to have the morning hour, and that the Senator from Nebraska ought to be permitted in the morning to continue and finish his remarks.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.
